John was a boy who "lived out." Every week he wrote home to his mother, who lived on a small, rocky farm among the hills. One day John picked up an old envelope from the wood box, and saw that the postage stamp on it was not touched by the postmaster's stamp to show that it had done duty and was henceforth useless. "The postmaster missed his aim, then," said John, "and left the stamp as good as new. I'll use it myself."

He moistened it at the nose of the tea-kettle, and carefully pulled the stamp off.

"No," said conscience, "for that would be cheating. The stamp has been on the letter; it ought not to carry another."

"It can carry another," said John, "because, you see, there is no mark to prove it worthless. The postoffice will not know."

"But you know," said conscience, "and that is enough. It is not honest to use it a second time. It is a little matter, to be sure; but it is cheating. God looks for principle. It is the quality of every action which he judges by."

"But no one will know it," said John, faintly.

"No one!" cried conscience. "God will know it—that is enough, and he, you know, desires truth in the inward parts."

"Yes," cried the best part of John's character, "yes; it is cheating to use the postage stamp the second time, and I will not do it."

John tore it in two and gave it to the winds. The boy won a glorious victory.—Children's Friend.

A Bit of Advice for Boys.

"You are made to be kind," says Horace Mann, "generous and magnanimous. If there is a boy in the school who has a club-foot, don't let him know that you ever saw it. If there is a poor boy with ragged clothes, don't talk about rags when he is in hearing. If there is a lame boy, assign him some part of the game which does not require running. If there is a hungry one, give him a part of your dinner. If there is a dull one, help him to get his lesson. If there is a bright one, be not envious of him; for if one boy is proud of his talents and another is envious of them, there are two great wrongs and no more talents than before. If a larger or stronger boy has injured you, and is sorry for it, forgive him, and ask the teacher not to punish him. All the school will show by their countenance how much better it is than to have great fists."

LESSON X—March 9, 1879.—THE JOY OF FORGIVENESS.

SCRIPTURE.—Psalms 32: 1-11.

1 Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven,
Whose sin is covered.
2 Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity,
And in whose spirit there is no guile.
3 When I kept silence, my bones waxed old
Through my roaring all the day long.
4 For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me:
My moisture is turned into the drought of summer. Selah.
5 I acknowledged my sin unto thee,
And my iniquity have I not hid.
I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord;
And thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Selah.
6 For this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee
In a time when thou mayest be found:
Surely in the floods of great waters
They shall not come nigh unto him.
7 Thou art my hiding place;
Thou shalt preserve me from trouble;
Thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance. Selah.
8 I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go:
I will guide thee with mine eye.
9 Be ye not as the horse,
Or as the mule, which have no understanding:
Whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle,
Lest they come near unto thee.
10 Many sorrows shall be to the wicked:
But he that trusteth to the Lord, mercy shall compass him about.
11 Be glad in the Lord, and rejoice, ye righteous:
And shout for joy, all ye that are upright in heart.

QUESTIONS ON BIBLE REFERENCES.

Through doing what can a man hide a multitude of sins? Who was it that God in Christ was reconciling? In which of his followers did Jesus say there was no guile? Where shall he dwell that walketh and worketh and speaketh rightly? In what passage are the people said to be like both bears and doves? In what land of drought had the Lord known his people? What is promised to him that covereth, and what to him that confesseth, his sins? What gift does Nehemiah say that the Lord gave Israel for its instruction in the wilderness? What passage tells us of a path, a presence, and a right hand which we should all seek?

[From International Quarterly.]

This Psalm was written by David, and properly follows the fifty-first. It sets forth the great joy of his heart, after God had forgiven his sin. It is the second of the seven penitential psalms.

Blessed, or happy, signifies the condition and experience. Transgression is the fruit; sin the root. Forgiveness means lightened, or taken off, as a burden removed (Mat. 11: 28). Covered, or hid, is the judicial figure—the blood has covered the sin. To impute means to reckon to one's account, as the believer's sins are reckoned to Christ, and his righteousness is reckoned to the believer (Rom. 4: 24; 6: 11). Justification means made right in God's sight, and we are thus justified in Christ. Guile is deceit, or false pretense. Kept silence, that is before he confessed, his sin was like a fire in his bones, as if God's hand was punishing him. This is conviction of sin.

Selah—Stop and think!

Sin acknowledged, iniquity spread out before the Lord, and transgressions confessed—then follows forgiveness.

Selah—Stop and think!

For this reason every one who desires to be godly will pray unto Thee at such a time, and thus escape the floods of great waters, which are a figure of judgment, from which the righteous are delivered. Christ is the hiding-place or fortress of the soul, where trouble or judgment cannot come, and where songs of deliverance are heard. God hides all who are justified. This is conversion.

Selah—Stop and think!

God instructs and teaches and guides those who are hid. If we are guided by his eye, we must be near him and look into his face. If not, we must be driven or held with bit and bridle, as a horse. Or if we are not children at all, but "the wicked," then sorrows are our portion. If therefore we are believers, and our sins are forgiven, let us rejoice.

Grotious thinks this Psalm was meant to be sung on the annual day of the Jewish expiation, when a general confession of their sins was made. Probably David's deep repentance over his great sin was followed by such blissful peace, that he was lead to pour out his spirit in the soft music of this choice song. Perhaps it was important to prefix the word "Maschil" (instructive), that doubting saints might not imagine the Psalm to be the peculiar utterances of a singular individual, but might appropriate it to themselves as a lesson from the Spirit of God.—Spurgeon.

David teacheth sinners to repent by his doctrine, who taught them to sin by his example. This science is universal and pertaineth to all men, and which necessarily we must all learn; all must be put to this school, without which lesson all others are unprofitable. This is a mark of a true penitent, to be as careful to raise them up by his repentance as he was to be hurtful to them by his sin; and I never think that man truly penitent who is ashamed to teach men repentance by his own particular proof.—Archibald Symson.

Literary.

The leading article in the March number of the North American Review is a symposium on negro suffrage, by Senators Blaine and Lamar, Gov. Hampton, Representatives Garfield and Stephens, Wendell Phillips, Montgomery Blair and ex-Gov. Hendricks. Mr. Blaine opens and closes the discussion. He claims that the negro was wisely and justly enfranchised and should not be deprived of his right to the ballot, but that he is practically disfranchised by intimidation; and he demands for him all of the privileges that have been granted him by constitutional amendments. Messrs. Lamar, Stephens and Hampton insist that the political liberty of the negro is not seriously interfered with, and argued that if the South be let alone all of the difficulties growing out of emancipation will adjust themselves. Hampton says that a qualified suffrage would have been better for the negro, and Stephens declares that if an attempt should be made to deprive the Southern States of their present representation in Congress on the plea that the negro is not allowed to vote in accordance with his convictions, it would be the most wanton outrage that ever was undertaken in any country. Mr. Blair takes the ground that negro suffrage is and always must be a failure, and instances the trial made with the blacks in the West Indies by the English. Wendell Phillips asserts that the colored voters have exhibited as much wisdom in politics as have their white neighbors, and that the South was better governed under negro rule than it has since been under white legislation. Gen. Garfield thinks that colored suffrage has been more than fairly successful, and says that the era of peace and good feeling will come only when the negro shall be allowed to cast his ballot without interference of any kind.

This discussion is followed by a paper on the Philosophy of Jonathan Edwards, by Prof. George P. Fisher, of Yale, giving a summary of the works of Edwards and an analysis of his peculiar line of thought. Gen. Nelson A. Miles treats the Indian Problem at some length, stating many facts, and his reasons for believing that the Indians can best be managed under miltary supervision. J. R. G. Hassard, the translator of the famous cipher dispatches, presents a chapter on Cryptography, in which he explains fully the system by which secret characters are read. The closing pages of the number are devoted to a review of the recent Russian novels by S. E. Shevitch.

OBITUARY.

Rev. Amos Finch of Gilmore, Mich., died of pleurisy and lung fever, January 16, 1879. From a biographical notice in the American Wesleyan the following is abridged:

When eighteen he was converted at a Methodist camp-meeting near White Pigeon, Mich., and soon after, feeling that it was his duty to preach began as a Methodist exhorter.

He was an abolitionist from his very youth. Was an admirer of Orange Scott, and joined the Wesleyan church soon after it was organized. His special guides and friends during his early ministry were Revs. Rufus Lumry and W. W. Crane. Between them there was ever the warmest attachment.

In the spring of 1854, he was impressed with the importance of making Kansas a free State. That fall he started for Kansas under the auspices of the American Missionary Board.

The particulars of what he did and suffered in Kansas cannot be given; hardly a synopsis should be expected. He arrived at Lawrence about the middle of October, and as sod houses were full, went into one of the hay wickers. This contained six families. The women and children crowded around one old stove on which the food for each family had to be cooked. The damp prairie winds whistled through it almost as through the leafless groves. In a few weeks he had up one of the first frame houses which was built in Lawrence. The next spring he moved down near Osawattomie, where his family remained during the eight years they were in Kansas. His labor began immediately. It was souls and free State votes he worked for.

Years of exposure and excitement brought on an uncommonly severe attack of typhoid fever. He was once supposed to be dead, but skillful medical aid and nursing raised him from a bed of sickness on which he had suffered long and survived three sinking chills. After that he was never well. He had organized the first Wesleyan churches in Kansas, and left them in a thriving condition. In 1865 he received an urgent offer of $1,200 per year if he would lecture in Iowa for the Freedman's Bureau. He accepted and acted as lecturer and financial agent for Iowa until he resigned on account of ill health. Shortly after he made a trip to northern Michigan, found it a good fruit country and concluded his health would be better in that climate, and in 1870 moved to a place on the lake shore south of Frankfort. During the past nine years he has preached as occasion and health permitted.

He was a hearty supporter of all reforms and was especially interested in the anti-masonic cause. His business talents were good. He was very fond of literature, appreciated the beauties of poetry and the sublimity of eloquence, but gave most of his leisure time to history and theology.

—Prof. C. A. Blanchard exchanged last Sabbath with Rev. G. F. Milton of Geneva, Ill. The discourses of the latter to the College church were with demonstration of the Spirit, whose baptism Bro. M. has blessedly received within a few weeks.

Baptist.

—As the final result of Masonic ex-parte councilism we are pained to record a murderous attack upon Elder Joel H. Austin of Burlington, Iowa, with whose trials for the truth's sake our readers are somewhat acquainted. The Burlington Hawkeye of the 13th inst., under the heading "Outrage in Union Township," says:

"Last Sunday evening there were services at Spring Creek, Union township. Rev. Joel H. Austin, a Baptist preacher, who attended, but did not occupy the pulpit that evening, on leaving the church took a seat in Samuel Flanders' buggy, with that gentleman to ride home. Just after they got into the road some miscreant threw a flint rock, weighing six pounds, which struck Mr. Austin in the side with great force, producing a severe contusion, from which he is still suffering. The rock glanced, and passing along the back of the seat, struck the iron rod at the other end of the seat with a force that gave the impression that a spoke had broken. Mr. Austin was caught by Mr. Flanders and supported from falling, and on Monday was removed to his home. Although Mr. Austin was heavily clothed the blow was sufficient to produce a large swelling. Had it hit him in the breast or head it would have killed him. It was a narrow escape. The man who had vengeance in his heart may be thankful that the crime of murder does not rest upon his hands. But it is a species of bulldozing that Iowa does not tolerate, and we hope such disgraceful scenes will not be repeated in Des Moines county."

Still later we learn that Elder Austin has been confined to his bed over a week and at times he suffered greatly and for a time his situation appeared dangerous, the paroxysms of pain from the severe concussion were such by acute pain as to reduce his strength very rapidly. His attending physician however thinks he is comparatively out of danger, and he hopes to be on his feet again in a few days. Measures are being taken for the apprehension and arrest of the would-be murderer, and the citizens offer one hundred dollars ($100) for his arrest and conviction.

Friends.

—The Executive Committee on Foreign Missions publish the following:

The Friends' Mexican Mission, at Matamoras, Mexico, was founded in the year 1871, by Friends' Foreign Mission Association, and is now managed by the Executive Committee on Foreign Missions of Indiana Yearly Meeting.

Samuel A. Purdie and wife have been in charge of the mission since its foundation. They were assisted from 1873 to 1875 by M. M. Binford (now a member of the Executive Committee) and wife.

A Monthly Meeting was established in 1874. The number of members in 1874 was 14; in 1875, 29; in 1876, 37; in 1877, 52; in 1878, 76.

There is now sustained a regular Friends' meeting, with seventy-six members, all of whom take part in Sabbath school, observing the forms of the society, and the observance of marriage, etc., as laid down in the Discipline. The average attendance at meetings is still larger, and continues to increase. There is also maintained a press from which are issued several useful periodicals, and which has issued a large number of valuable tracts and books, and standard works of Friends, of value to the labors of the Mission. A girls' school taught by a native convert, under the care of G. M. Purdie, and a boys' school. Number enrolled in schools, 90; average attendance, 50. And a considerable work in colportage, several talented and promising native laborers, of both sexes, are now rendering valuable assistance in these branches of the work.

We have purchased a lot in the central portion of the city, upon which we wish to erect a Friends' meeting house and Mission room. A "Building Fund" has been accumulated (principally from bequests) amounting to $2,000. We need $2,000 more to erect and furnish a house, which, in accordance with plans now in our hands, will be solidly and plainly constructed, without needless display and ornament, but large enough for the wants of the immediate future. The erection The erection of this building we deem an urgent necessity.

The expense of conducting the various labors of the Mission require from us at least $2,000 per year. Everything is conducted, as we believe, by Samuel Purdie with all due economy and prudence.

—One hundred conversions are reported as the result of a remarkably successful revival work at Lancaster, O., which has been conducted by Mrs. Esther Frame, a minister of the Society of Friends.

WESLEYAN.

—The brethren of the Sandy Lake circuit, Pa., composed of the Oak Grove, Sandy Lake, Zion and Millbrook congregations, have invited Rev. A. Thomson Wolff of Dixonville, Indiana county, to become their pastor. The Sandy Lake News says of him: "Brother Wolff is a young married man of much promise, and is abreast of the times on the living issues of the present generation, and will do a good work in any field where called to labor."

—Rev. C H. Hawley who was expecting to meet his family in Wheaton and settle them comfortably is for the time being being disappointed. Mrs. Hawley is too ill to remove from Iowa. She was a great sufferer all through the winter of 1877–8, and has not yet fully recovered. Bro. Hawley hopes to continue his work as an evangelist for the special promotion of Christian holiness.

—Rev. D. S. Kinney, connectional agent wishes to raise $6,000 as soon as possible for the completion of the new Publishing House at Syracuse, N. Y. Donations amounting to nearly $150 from seven conferences were reported last week.

—Revivals are reported from Marengo and Blairsburg, Iowa; Haskinville, Boylston, and E. Rushford, N. Y.; Ionia, Mich. and Sandy Lake, Pa.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The United Presbyterian church at Milroy, Ind., was burned on the night of the 6th inst. Fifteen penknives and a lot of burglar tools were found in the ashes. The supposition is that some tramps having entered it to spend the night had upset a lamp and only escaped with their lives. It was one of the oldest churches in that part of the country.

—A Christian convention, called by the elders of Keokuk presbytery, met in the U. P. church, Crawfordsville, Iowa, Jan. 22d. Elder James Dawson, of Washington, was elected chairman and J. W. Crawford, Secretary. Rev. W. C. Williamson preached an able sermon, and long and interesting discussions occupied most of the afternoon and evening on the topics: "The Standard of the Christian Life," and "The Duty and Responsibility of the Elders and Members of the Church as Coworkers with the Pastor."

—Rev. W. T. Meloy delivered, last Friday evening, at the United Presbyterian church, corner of Monroe and Paulina streets, his lecture entitled "the Touchstone."

FREE METHODIST.

—Rev. E. Mathews organized a class at Holly, Mich., lately. During the revival that preceded there occurred several remarkable conversions.

—Eighty-one students are enrolled at the seminary at North Chili, near Rochester, N. Y.

—Bro M. L. Vorheis of Burlington, Iowa, has gone to Owatomia, Minn., on the invitation of Superintendent E. P. Hart who was also on the ground during the early part of the month. An interesting revival is in progress.

—Bro. W. F. Manley has organized a F. M. society of thirteen members at Maywood, Ill., ten miles west of this city. The revival meetings at that place continue with much hopeful interest.

—Superintendent B. T. Roberts began meetings the first of February in a hired church in San Francisco, Cal. Much interest was manifested during the first week and several conversions gave promise of a powerful work of Divine grace.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. Wm. E. Holyoke has lately removed from Byron, Ill., where he ministered to the people for whom Rev. J. P. Stoddard was pastor a number of years, to Dover, Ill. Mrs. Holyoke is well known to the people of the West as a successful temperance lecturer and is now in the field merely to respond to calls from temperance organizations or lyceum managers.

—An exchange says that Rev. Charles E. Stowe, a son of Professor C. E. and Harriet Beecher Stowe, has become a Congregational home missionary in Maine. Nominally he has for some time been a member of the Episcopal church, but was really an unbeliever.

—Rev. Josiah Strong's church at Sandusky received thirty-seven members Feb. 2nd, all but four on profession and twenty of them heads of families. It is the result of the revival meetings last December under the lead of Major Whittle.

—Evangelist Potter has been holding meetings with the Congregational church in Lockport, New York.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The First Presbyterian church of Belvidere, Rev. T. C. Easton, pastor, has been holding meetings since the week of prayer. A precious revival is in progress. These meetings are resulting in the renewed consecration of a large number of the membership of the church, and many conversions also have given cheering testimony to pastor and flock of the power of Divine grace.

—It is said that Dr. John Hall's people refrain from placing a bell on the tower of their magnificent edifice, at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fifth street, New York, lest it might disturb the patients of St. Luke's Hospital, which is just across the way. The clock now in the tower is not permitted to strike for the same reason.

News of the Week.

—Mr. E. B. Hamlin, of Chicago, has recently invented an instrument which he calls the melophone. It is a very simple contrivance, and transmits the sounds of the human voice and musical instruments in a very perfect manner, the intonations and articulations being very distinct. It is in this respect superior to the telephone.

—The largest iron contract ever awarded this country, it is said, was recently secured by an extensive iron firm, Clark, Reeves & Co., of Phœnixville, Pa., who have contracted to furnish nearly eighty million pounds of iron in iron columns, girders, etc., and to build twelve miles of a double track elevated railway in New York, to be completed within six months. These extensive iron works are near this city and will give employment to a large number of men.

—Some eight or ten years ago several persons reported at different times they had seen a serpent over twenty long in a marsh on the Housatonic Railroad, within a few miles of New York. The story was discredited by the general public, particularly after a hunting expedition to kill or capture the reptile returned without result, after scouring the whole country. Within a day or two, however, the marsh being frozen, some woodmen discovered its skeleton, measuring twenty-one feet in length. The bones and other remains will be sent to the Society of Natural Science.

—Charles W. Angell, who left Chicago in July last with $120,000 of the funds of the Pullman Palace Car Company in his possession, has returned under arrest. Angell left Chicago July 21, 1878, went directly to New York, from which point he sailed for Southampton. From that point he went to Rio Janeiro, and from there to Lisbon, Portugal.

—A railroad disaster occurred near Selma, Georgia, last week. A passenger train from there on the Selma, Rome and Dalton Road fell through a rotten bridge over Mulberry creek. One white man named George Evans and four negroes were killed. Superintendent Stanton and Conductor White were fatally injured. Ten or twelve persons were also severely hurt.

—Through the timidity of the governor of Texas lawlessness has greatly increased of late. Rewards for the arrest of murderers have been recalled, and the State police abolished. A correspondent says of the result:

The effect is already seen in the increased number of murders and horrible crimes for the last few weeks. There are now on the average four murders a day in Texas, some of them of the most shocking and barbarous description. So utterly weak is the State Government that it can not, and does not try to protect its own witnesses on the stand. But a week or two ago a State's witness in an awful murder case was knocked down and stabbed in the streets of Palestine by a half-dozen friends of the murderer. In other counties the shooting and assassination of State's witnesses is now almost of weekly occurrence.

—Considerable excitement and uneasiness exists at Brownville and other towns along the Upper Monongahela, owing to recent outbreaks and threatened violence by the striking coal miners in that vicinity. Nearly all the coal mines have been shut down for some time. Cause, reduction of wages.

—The Kedive of Egypt was mobbed by a crowd of disbanded and unpaid officers last week. The rioters were not dispersed until fired on.

—The Ameer of Afhganistan has arrived at Tashkend, the Russian headquarters in Turkistan. He was suffering from disease and cannot probably survive.

—The heaviest snow storm for five years commenced last Friday in Nova Scotia and continued all day. The drifts in some places are fifteen feet deep. Business is completely suspended in Halifax. The railways are blocked.

—At a sitting of the Medical Society of Berlin, Dr. Virchou delivered a lecture on the plague, declaring that the epidemic prevailing in Astrakan is the Eastern plague. He said the measures adopted by the German government were of a too general character. Attention should be principally directed to the necessity of placing the Russian army returning from Turkey under medical inspection.

—Gen. Melikoff telegraphs that not a single case of epidemic illness exists throughout his jurisdiction in Russia. The military cordons isolating the different villages have been abolished; the general cordon only is retained.

—The startling intelligence has been received from Mandalay, the capital of Independent Burmah, that the King of Burmah, his Majesty Mendoomen, has for some time cherished a deep hostility against certain of his nobles, especially against Princes Thouse and Mekara. The King himself is orthodox, and a devoted Buddhist, and largely under the influence of his ecclesiastical advisers. He is of an extremely jealous and secretive disposition, and for some months past appears to have cherished the belief that the princes in question were plotting against him. Finally, summoning his privy council, which consists of four persons, known as the Hoitdaw, he laid before them his suspicions, and demanded that they and their whole households should be executed. As the will of the monarch in Burmah is supreme, the order was given and the massacre took place. The two princes and eighty-six of their relations were slain. The immediate details of the massacre are described as horrible in the extreme.

—Another revolution in Hayti is reported. In one engagement that took place by moonlight the government forces lost thirty-five killed and eighty-nine wounded. The loss of the insurgents exceeded these figures, and all of them captured were promptly put to death.

—Seven or eight years ago there was no difficulty in obtaining statistics of nearly all the secret lodges. Confident in increasing numbers and wealth they were eager to publish the evidences of their enlargement. Now that the tables are turned, ashamed of their growing unpopularity, they seldom print for the public eye such tables as that below. The increase of Odd-fellows in 1871 was upwards of 57,000; the loss last year was several thousand. The list herewith given shows the order in its best days and is worth preserving as an item of history. It is from the Heart and Hand, an official organ, and compares the returns of 1871 and 1872:

—It is announced that Mr. Jeremiah Mahoney, principal of one of our city schools has become an editorial writer of the Educational Weekly. Mr. Mahony is said to be a cultured and able writer, but he is a strong Catholic and made his influence for the priesthood felt in the schools which he controlled. Unless his views are modified the teachers who read his journal will gain little from his pen to strengthen them in maintaining the nobler character of their great work. It is a well-planned scheme on the part of the church that would destroy our common school system to get an able man into influential positions with respect to it.

Trichina.

Two eminent microscopists of Chicago (H. F. Atwood, President of the State Microscopical Society, and Dr. W. T. Belfield, Demonstrator of Physiology at the Rush Medical College), have submitted to the Health Commissioner the results of their examination of the flesh of one hundred hogs, in answer to the following questions:

"To what extent is the pork supply of Chicago affected with trichina?"

"To what extent are these parasites dangerous to health or life?"

"Are trichinous animals generally out of health?"

"Can reliance be placed on thorough salting or smoking of the meat as destructive to trichina?"

"Are there any practical means by which our Meat Inspectors can detect parasites in a carcass of meat?"

The scientists report that they took two pieces from each hog—one from the tenderloin and the other from the ham—cutting the pieces into thin longitudinal sections, which were placed under a Bullock binocular instrument with an amplification of about seventy-five diameters. Eight of the hundred hogs were found to be infected, some badly, while in others comparatively few parasites were found. In all cases the hams were apparently free from trichina, those found always being contained in the tenderloin. In one specimen there were 13,000 to the cubic inch, the smallest number being thirty-five. To the question as to whether trichinous hogs are generally out of health, the microscopists answered in the negative, citing their experiment with a white rat three weeks old, to which they fed trichinous pork till it was nearly three months old. The rat thrived amazingly on the food, and when it was killed was found to be literally alive with trichina from the tip of its nose to the end of its tail. As to the means by which inspectors can detect trichina in the carcass of meat, they reply that a microscope is the only infallible means. It is found, however, that sulphurous acid not only kills worms instantly, but readily permeates the entire ham, and is as readily expelled. They recommend the use of a small quantity of this acid in the pickle for curing hams. Ordinary salting and smoking does not destroy the parasite, but a thorough cooking of the pork is a safe and sure precaution.—Enquirer.

Maxims for the Farmer.

1. Never get in debt when you can not see your way out again. When you owe, pay as fast as you can and promptly. Never allow yourself to be dunned for a debt a second time without paying it. Credit for promptness is of great advantage in any kind of business and all through life.

2. Never enlarge your farm when half of what you own is not half cultivated.

3. If you own more land than you can till well, are in debt, or need funds to make necessary improvements, sell part of your farm and use the money to pay debts and make your improvements.

4. Never borrow money to build a showy house when a less pretentious one would answer better, and never lend money when you have poorly-tilled land to improve.

5. Lay out a system of improvements for your farms and buildings, and, as your means improve, carry these plans out.

6. Do not enter upon any speculation with other people's money, or your own, unless you see clearly that you will make profits, and even then do not do it to the neglect of your farming.

7. Do not keep poor stock when you can keep good stock at the same expense and with much more profit.

8. Do not try to grow crops for which your farm is not well adapted.

9. If you have a good location do not sell out, expecting to better it, because you have been offered a good price.

10. Do not change farms often, for by so doing you can carry out no definite system of improvement.

11. Unless your crops are good, sow less and farm better.

12. Be present with your employes as much as possible, otherwise little will be done, and that little poorly. No business requires the master's oversight more than farming.

13. Keep ahead of your work, or your work will keep ahead of you.

14. Resolve that your farm shall be a profitable one, if industry and good management will make it so.

15. Invest your surplus earnings in making such improvements as will add to the profit, appearance and convenience of your farm.

16. Be kind, not only to those you employ, but to all the animals you work and feed.

17. Make yourself thoroughly acquainted with the principles of agriculture, and be guided by them.

18. Perform all labor in the right season.

19. Do all jobs in the best manner, if worth doing at all.

20. Take an interest in all improvements that have a bearing on agriculture.

21. In all you do, endeavor to get hold of the long end of the lever instead of the short end, if you would work to advantage.—Cor. Practical Weekly.

Another Diphtheria Remedy.—In a lecture before students at one of the best hospitals in France, the physician expressed his preference for lemon juice, as a local application in diphtheria, to acids, chlorate potash, nitrate of silver, per-chloride of iron, alum, or lime water. He uses it by dipping a little plug of cotton wool, twisted around a wire, in the juice, and pressing it against the diseased surface four or five times daily.

Renewals 109 and 97 new subscriptions (total 206) were received during the week ending Saturday, February 22nd.

THE PROSPECT FOR 10,000.

We have been been asked to rush the subscription list up by urging people to take the paper for two or three months each, thus in these hard times making it easy to secure a list of ten thousand. Subscriptions for any length of time, however brief, are always gladly received. The circulation of papers has sometimes been benefited by such a course. Send in subscriptions for any length of time. We are glad however to know and to say that the large proportion of subscriptions for the Cynosure are made for a year each. The 10,000 may come a little slower by this course but it will be much surer. Next week the whole number of subscriptions March 2, 1878, will be compared with the whole number on March 1, 1879 From this report our readers will learn that the Cynosure circulation is nearer ten thousand now than it was a year ago notwithstanding the hard times. Let us keep steadily pressing forward in the fear of God, watching and praying, and we feel confident that, in God's own good time, there will be a list of ten thousand subscribers for the Cynosure.

Jas. Miller, Yellow Springs, Ohio, sends $15.00 for a club of ten for a year each, and eight of the names.

J. V. Baker, Leesville, Mo., sends thirteen subscriptions for four months each and two for six months each. Let us hear from Missouri again.

P. Crownell, Ithaca, Ind., seventy-six years of age, sends three subscriptions for one year each, two for six months each, and one for three months.

Frederick Byrer, Etna Green, Kosciusko county, Ind., sends his "God speed in this reform" with four subscriptions for a year each, and one for six months.

Mrs. B. N. Cravath, St. Charles, Winona county, Minn., sends four subscriptions for one year each.

W. G. Waddle, New Athens, Harrison county, Ohio, sends three subscriptions for one year each and one for four months with wishes of "success to the anti-secret cause."

Richard Green, Wolcottville, Ind., sends three subscriptions for one year each and writes: "I will try to get more subscribers."

J. M. Gallaher, Weston, Oregon, S. McMcMurdy, Porterfield, Pa., J. W. Cole, Philadelphia, N. Y., Wm. R. Vance, Fairfield, Mo., N. Miner, Pike Station, O., also send three subscriptions each.

D. Molyneaux, Millview, Pa., sends three names for eight months each.

E. C. Town sends one subscription for fourteen months and two for four months each.

W. M. Beden, Hadley, Mich., sends one subscription for two years and one for one year. Eighteen persons send two subscriptions for one year each.

Red Clover Tea

A Cure for All Blood Diseases.

I am seventy years of age, am in good health for one of my years. Fourteen years since I had Scirrhus Cancer. Tea made from Red Clover Blossoms cured me. I have advised its use in many bad cases of Salt Rheum and it has proved a success. By permission I refer to Capt. David H. Small, No. 44 Winchester Ave., Chicago, who was cured by the use of clover tea of a cancer in the stomach after being pronounced incurable by physicians. I will gladly impart all the information in my power, and no charge, when a stamp is sent. I have the clover picked in full bloom and cured the same day with the Alden Dryer. It is not possible to have it better; also the Extract, equally good.

NEW ENGLAND.

It is very probable that I am going back to New England in a few weeks. In the event of my doing so I desire to say that every city and village in the Eastern States ought to be made to see that the worship of the Masonic temples of America to-day is the self-same worship that used to be practiced in the temples of Baal or Osiris. New England friends therefore are requested to write to Bro. Hinman at once, addressing him care of S. A. Pratt, Worcester, Mass., and make all necessary arrangements for a successful expose of the Masonic philosophy. I shall start for the East by March 15th, or immediately after shipping my new book and if friends in Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York will write me at once I can visit them as I move along.

SPRING WORK.

On the first of March the Cynosure lacks only 1,057 of 5,000 subscribers. We believe that a second 5,000 could be obtained much easier than the first. The gain of three hundred and seventy-one in a year of great financial distress is a success to praise God for. Let us thank God and take courage, as Paul did. On the fifth of next June we expect to publish the total number of subscribers, May 31st. Would it not be well to secure the number required to bring the list up to 5,000? Is there any more important spring work for the cause of reform that we could do? While thanking God for his blessing on past efforts let us press joyfully forward watching unto prayer with all perseverance so that instead of mourning over lost opportunities when the summer opens we may rejoice in having accomplished wisely, vigorously and promptly our glorious SPRING WORK.

Topics of the Time.

As we go to press Congress is finishing up its present session. Although most of the important bills are finished, yet for what remains it is a fine question whether or no it will not be necessary to call an extra session. Important appropriation bills, which must be voted or the executive department stop, are yet unsettled, and it rests with less than a score of Senators and Representatives to say whether an extra session with its great expense and political risks shall be necessary. In their haste to complete their work both houses sat all through the Sabbath and the night following. When the House was called to order in the morning a venerable man with a long beard arose in one of the galleries, and cried out with a thrilling voice: "Hear ye! Hear ye! The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God. This nation has forgotten God—this Congress has forgotten God, and will be cast into hell!" He was about to continue his prophetic warning against the profanation of the Sabbath, when a prompt doorkeeper seized and ejected him, and the heaven-defying work went on below without interruption. He may be called fanatical; it remains to be seen who were the most insane and foolish, the old man pleading for the Sabbath or the Representatives of our nation profaning it.

The appropriation bills are held till the last moment and all of them are loaded with obnoxious amendments. That for the general expenses of the government has tied to it a Democratic measure for the repeal of the election laws and the abolition of all power to punish fraud in general elections, in order to remove every obstacle to the rifle-clubs and buggy brigades of South Carolina and Louisiana. To the pension appropriation has been added a section giving a pension to every survivor of the Mexican war, Jeff Davis included! This little item means thirty million dollars. The river and harbor appropriations have been figured up to $8,500,000; one-fourth this sum is ample, and Senator Edmonds of Vermont moved to strike out the whole bill and put $2,000,000 in the hands of the Secretary of War for the purpose named. But there is too much political influence bought by this appropriation to allow of its reduction by our mercenary legislators. Edmonds attacked it with a sharp sarcasm, by making a point of order when the appropriation for some little Virginia creek was about to be stricken out. He explained thus: "My point of order, Mr. President, is that no motion to strike out an item for appropriating money for rivers and harbors is ever in order. Nothing was ever stricken out of these bills. The only thing in order is to increase the appropriation as much as possible. A motion to strike out is contrary to all precedent, and is clearly out of order." Over the two first mentioned bills is the great fight. There is too much political legislation involved to allow the ultra members on either side to yield their ground. The dispatches of Wednesday will tell us all. It is not easy to see at present what important business has been accomplished this session, which might not have been finished before January.

Last week came the startling intelligence that Cincinnati was "full of Masons," "gathered from every section of the country." What! another Morgan broke loose? or is it a great dinner at outsiders' expense? The lodge does not advertise its convocations when it has a victim on the altar; but if a mob of butchers, cobblers, tailors, briefless barristers and conscienceless preachers are to toil through the streets behind a "brass band," or to be dined and wined at a palace hotel, be sure they are Masons. Your proper lodgeman has a fine scent for such opportunities. So, very naturally, Cincinnati is "full" of such harpies, for a hundred "neophytes" are to receive the Scottish rite degrees, and each one of the hundred has a full pocket, for he knows what is to be expected. Cincinnati is not gaining a very enviable reputation with her beer-swilling musicians, and Sunday theaters. Is it beeause she is so leprous morally that she has become also a center of Masonic attraction, and for twenty-seven years these degrees have been conferred there on some eight hundred candidates? We are told that in "no place in the world" are these degrees conferred more effectively than there. Who can tell which, bad morals or lodge reputation, is logically first? What city could be more appropriately chosen for an "event the most brilliant in the history of Masonry in America?"

The fourth annual convention of the Illinois State Temperance Reform Club was held in Bloomington two weeks ago, and the neat pamphlet report is already issued. It was at the meeting of this body last year that the secret temperance lodges were compelled for once to retire, beaten in fair open debate. Their attempt to drag the reform clubs through their lodge doors was a total and significant failure. It is noticeable, nevertheless, that this State body is not wholly rid of their influence. Its secretary is a leading Good Templar and its liberality extends fellowship to all the temperance societies, and lodges too. This is a great mistake, and will be seen so eventually. The work of the clubs in other respects is cheering. Reports from different parts of the State show that prohibition is on every hand gaining ground. Clubs that started with cigar shop, cards and billiards, as at Kewanee, found their work destroyed, and the necessity is clear of prohibiting all these accessories of the dram bar. In many places the saloons are reported vanquished and shut up. Let this grand work go on. In the name of Jesus let every outcast and prostrate victim of intemperance be commanded to arise and be free.

Endurance.

'Tis bitter to endnre the wrong
Which evil tongnes and hands commit;
The bold encroachments of the strong,
The shafts of calumny and wit,
The scornful bearing of the proud,
The sneers and laughter of the crowd.

And harder still it is to bear
The censure of the good and wise,
Who ignorant of what you are,
Or blinded by the slanderer's lies,
Look coldly on or pass you by
In silence, with averted eye.

But when the friends in whom yon trust
As steadfast as the mountain rock,
Fly, and are scattered like the dust,
Before misfortune's rudest shock,
Nor love remains to cheer your fall,
This is more terrible than all.

Yet even this and these—aye, more
Can be endured, and hope survive;
The noble spirit still may soar,
Although the body fail to thrive;
Sorrow and want may wear the frame,
Thank God! the soul is still the same.

Hold up your head, then, child of grief,
Nor longer to the tempest bend;
For soon or late must come relief—
The coldest, darkest life will end.
Within the heart hope never dies;
Trust on! your day-star yet shall rise.

Conscious of purity and worth,
You may with calm assurance wait
The tardy recompense of earth!
And e'en should justice come too late
To soothe the spirit's homeward flight,
Still heaven, at last, the wrong shall right.

The Serpent's Trail.

BY ALEXANDER THOMPSON.

Among the many boasts made by Masons, two are conspicuous.

First, that no man can be a good Mason without at the same time being a good Christian; and Second, that Masonry girdles the earth with the bonds of an indissoluble brotherhood. that is everywhere the same. Leaving it to Masonic casuists to explain the seeming contradictions involved in these statements, we proceed to consider the latter, which is undoubtedly true.

On the pampas of South America, on the Alps of Europe, among the Moorish tribes of Africa, and the cunning and treacherous nations of Asia the lodge is to be found, and wherever found it performs the same work, and the same results spring from its existence. The hunter does not more surely know the nature and size of the wild beast he follows, from the tracks it leaves in the soft mud of the prairie; the common traveler does not more surely know the trail of the serpent in the dust than the man acquainted with Masonry knows its finished work.

There is the same arm moving from the darkness to protect the brother over whom hangs the sword of civil law; the same intriguing to put in positions of profit or power, the man whose only claim is often the fact that he has worn the cable-tow and sworn eternal allegiance to the dark government of the lodge; the same interference in all questions affecting the welfare of men, and ever the hound-like following of those who are bold enough to incur its enmity.

In this paper and in others that may follow, it is our intention to show from collected facts, that here in Canada the lodge is as busy and as fruitful as elsewhere, and that its dark plottings and movements in behalf of criminals, are causing the same feeling of insecurity which exists in the United States.

About three years ago, there came one Sabbath morning to the door of a respectable farmer in the township of Vaughan, a bloated looking half tipsy drunkard. It being against the laws to sell liquor on the Sabbath the good farmer asked the man where he got his whisky, and with but little difficulty learned the following: The man came to the saloon early in the morning and demanded a drink, which was of course refused. He then made the sign the Masons know so well how to use, and started on his journey, but had not gone far when he was overtaken by the saloon-keeper's son, with a bottle of whisky. "You know," said the half drunken man, "he could not refuse me when I made that sign."

Here was a plain case. God's law said, "Honor the Sabbath." The law of men reiterated the same commandment; but the lodge interposes, breaks both, and sets loose a drunkard upon society, furnished with the means to fire his passions and craze his brain. The saloon-keeper does not willingly yield, not till he sees the mystic sign; and remembering all that may be behind it does lay himself liable to civil law, in order that he may keep Masonic!

Take another case: It is in a court-room in Toronto. A man is being tried for a crime against a fellow-citizen. The evidence is clear and conclusive, at least so at once decide eleven of the jurors. But one dissents. He is not a man of great intelligence. He can offer no good reasons for his refusal to agree with the rest of the jury, and yet obstinately holds out. At last it is proposed by one member of the jury to return to the court-room and render a verdict of guilty, and dare him there to object, if he could show good reasons; and this somewhat novel plan was actually carried out; the man sitting sullenly in his place, but offering no objections to the verdict. One of the jurors, acquainted with the methods of Masonry, and satisfied that nothing else could occasion the extraordinary conduct of this man, gave him, at parting, the Masonic grip, which was strongly returned. My informant was the juror that gave him the grip. His name is Mr. Silas Hartman, of the township of Vaughan, Canada, a Christian farmer of unblemished reputation.

In my next article I may mention some cases where Masonry has spread its protecting shield over criminals of a darker die, and thus prove how well grounded is the belief, almost as universal as that there is a God, that Freemasonry is a dark conspiracy against the rights of all freemen in all lands where freedom exists; a poison in our body politic and a foul ulcer in the church of the living God.

Gt. Manitoulin.

Facts for Senator Blaine.

BY AMERICAN.

At times the most truculent cunning assumes the form of saint-like innocence. The Jesuits (proper) understand but the art of making innocence and fraud meet and kiss each other in peace. The Freemasons, or Jesuits of the lodge, rank second in this art.

Mr. Blaine of the United States Senate is a Freemason, it is said; and wears a stripe of some color down his legs, and puts on a great deal of toggery, such as swords, sashes, gauntlets, ostrich plumes, banners streaming in the wind, etc. Of course the Saviour of mankind has ordered the sword to be put up; and the tendency of his whole teaching is to do away with toggery. How does Senator Blaine reconcile this unmanly paraphernelia with the candor and the earnestness of the Christian religion? Reader, please observe the simple, child-like cunning with which Freemasons seek to commend to the acceptance of the Saviour the things which he has virtually forbidden. They put his cross upon them! They put his cross upon their swords, their guantlets, and their banners.

A cross of suffering and woe,
They put on mockery and show.

But one of the craftiest frauds of the Freemasons is to claim John the Baptist as one of their "order." Senator Blaine sustains this imposition before the young men of the country (it is said) as well as represents a State in the Senate. While teaching young men fraud in morals and religion, it seems to be expected of him by the people of Maine that he will be honest in politics!

The apparent innocence with which Senator Blaine now comes forward and tells the country that three fourths of its carrying trade has been lost to the English and other nations, without the least allusion to the real cause of the loss, is truly wonderful. The simplicity of this distinguished Freemason (Washington was a Mason) is equal to that of Loyola himself.

The facts are that not only the the loss of three-fourths of our carrying trade, which might have given employment to some of our tramps, but perhaps half, if not indeed the whole of our present national indebtedness; the grinding taxes, which must of course fall upon the farmers at last; the long delay in terminating the war; the loose manner in which it has been settled, together with other most manifest defects, may all be attributed to the intervention of the low, crafty, selfish spirit of Freemasonry. While the honest portion of the country were struggling to save the American constitution, Freemasonry, getting control of the Congress, of the administration, and apparently to a very considerable extent of the army and navy, was aiming to strengthen the constitution of the Grand Lodge (so-called) of the United States! And this lodge aims to subvert the Christian religion by such cunning frauds as the claiming of John the Baptist as a Freemason!

We would suggest to any one of our friends, to inquire of Mr. Blaine whether he really believes the shams taught our young men by Freemasons are harmless, and watch the amiable smile (confessing weakness) that he will probably put on. He might possibly summon up courage enough to say: "Though I help teach and inculcate such frauds; yet you must be green to credit them. All is fair in politics!"

Senator Blaine is a man of great natural ability; but if he is in fact Mason, all his suggestions at reform will prove to be utterly empty. One must be green to believe that he is any more sincere as a politician than he is as a Freemason. It is vain for him to come to the old stream of American character, history and influence, to be baptized in the pure waters from the revolting crimes of Freemasonry, unless he confesses and renounces his sins. He must first renounce Freemasonry before any one can give him credit of doing things worthy of repentance. For Senator Blaine to stand upon the bank of this stream as a reformer, appealing for help to save the Republic, without rejecting and denouncing Freemasonry, is a degree of innocence that is utterly amazing.

How it Appears to a Reformed Mason.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

Dear Sir:—In looking over some of the older numbers of your highly prized paper, I found in the issue of October 11, 1877, under the head of "N. C. A. Eyes and Ears at the Chicago Exposition," a letter purporting to have been written by E. P. Jones, Dayton, Ohio, denying Mackey's Ritualist as a Masonic book of authority regarding the new birth, and an extract from Scripture 2 Thess. 3: 6th and 12th, in which is omitted, yes, "wilfully rejected," the name of Christ.

Allow me to say that I have been a Mason; that I have been divested of all metal, neither naked nor clothed, barefoot nor shod, hoodwinked, with a cable of tow around my neck, my arm, and three times around my body; that I have been knocked down and raised, in the same manner as your books and papers set forth the raising of Hiram Abiff by the master's grip or lion's paw; and that on the five points of fellowship have had "Mah-hah-bone," or, as it was interpreted, "there's marrow in the bone," whispered in my right ear. Seeing you have already given so many quotations and proofs from their standard authors, viz., Mackey, Sickels, Webb, and a host of others, allow me, if you please, to quote from the "Freemason's Monitor," a book which I purchased in Toledo, Ohio, soon after I joined the lodge. This work, according to its title page, contains a delineation of the fundamental principles of Freemasonry, operative and speculative, as well in a religious as a moral view; with explanations and plates of all the emblems of the degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, Master Mason, Mark Master, Most Excellent Master, Royal Arch Mason, Royal Master, Select Master, High-priesthood, Knights of the Red Cross, Knights Templar, and Knights of Malta; also constitutions, regulations, etc., etc.; compiled and arranged from the most approved writers with additions, notes and remarks; also charges and songs: By Z. A. Davis. A new edition revised and enlarged. Embellished with a correct likeness of James Page, Esq., P. G. M. of the Grand Lodge of the State of Pennsylvania. J. B. Lippincott & Co., No. 20, North Fourth St.; Jos. A. Speel, 211 Chestnut St., Phila., Publishers, 1859.

On page 201 under the heading, the following passage of Scripture is read at opening, 2 Thess. 3:6 to 17, and I ask E. P. Jones, or any other of the fraternity, what right, if any, they have for denying it. It reads as follows: verse 6, "Now we command you, brethren, [How? Not in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, but] that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly and not after the tradition which ye received of us." "Ye" is inserted in place of "he." The remainder of the passage is quoted word for word with the exception of the 12th verse, where it again willfully rejects "by our Lord Jesus Christ," confirming what Christ told the scribes and Pharisees, Mat. 15:9, as being applicable to Masonry or Masonic teaching.

In a foot note on the same page are given the author's reasons for inserting this chapter in the manner he has. He says: "I have inserted this chapter because I find it incorporated in all the works in which this degree is treated of, and because I believe it is generally used in all regular chapters." In copying it, however, he says, "I have referred to the source from which it has been originally drawn, and leave experienced companions to judge of the motives by which I have been actuated, as well as to determine why the whole or any part thereof should be here introduced."

Mackey claims for Masonry that it is a religion; other standard authors claim that it has nothing to do with the Bible; while Webb, on page 285, comes in on the defense. From the way it handles and misquotes the Bible, both Old and New Testament, we claim it has too much to do with the rights of man. While it claims not to interfere with the candidate's religion or political interests, as is promised to the Entered Apprentice, another is made to swear that he will use his most decided endeavors, by the blessing of God (blasphemy), to bring such person (the person who violates Masonic law) to the most strict and condign punishment agreeable to the ancient rules and usages of the fraternity, and thus by pointing him out to the world as an unworthy and vicious vagabond; by opposing his interest; by disarranging his business; by transferring his character after him, wherever he may go; by exposing him to the contempt of the whole fraternity and the world, but of our illustrious order more especially, during his whole natural life. Thus acting in direct opposition to what our Master taught on the Mount. (Mat. 5.) It claims over the followers of Christ, without meddling with their religion, what Pilate claimed unto Jesus was vested in him, "Liberty and death," a power to release, a power to crucify.

Every individual who has been made a Mason, myself included, was taught to say in answer to the question, What makes you a Mason? My obligation. Hence a man, but more especially one who claims to be a minister of the Gospel sent out on his mission to preach the Word of God cannot, with those Masonic obligations concealed and cherished within his breast be a Christian. It places him or them upon the same footing with those forty men who of their own "free will and accord," without any just cause, bound themselves together under a great curse or obligation to kill Paul, because he had exposed their doings and teachings. It is impossible for any man professing a belief in the doctrine of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to carry out the Divine commands and Masonic obligations. The one says emphatically, "Thou shalt not kill." The other sanctions it in its obligations or law of ceremony, makes every candidate forswear himself in the same foolish manner, yea, worse, in a partial or semi-nude condition, though not under the same penalty and oath as that which the forty men took upon themselves who swore that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul, or in other words forswore themselves (by a freewill act of their own) under the curse of starvation to do what the Divine code forbids. The one party is bound by an act of their own, under a penalty of suffering bodily punishment at their own hands, the other under penalty of suffering bodily punishment at the hands of one another. Had the first party starved themselves, would they have been considered wise? Reader ponder this. C. H. ELLIOTT.

HOLLAND, Mich., Feb. 25, 1879.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

DEAR SIR:—I have read your very valuable paper only for a few weeks, but nevertheless plead guilty for not having sent you a few encouraging words.

Two years ago to-day it pleased the Almighty Lord and Saviour to check me in my mad career, and like Paul it was useless for me to resist, and dark and deep has been the way the Lord has taken with me since, but with all that I may say, by the grace of God, Abba Father. He has done all things well.

In 1864 I became a Freemason and posted up as fast as possible until I had finished the ninth degree, or the Royal and Select Master's degree. I have been Worshipful Master of Unity Lodge, No. 191, during the years 1869 and 1870, of which I was a charter member. Up to two years ago to-day I devoted all my energies and mind, time and money, which I dared to spare in the cause of Masonry, and no amount of money, number of men, nor anything, as I thought at that time, could ever have induced me to think of it as I do now. And how easy the change after all, when the Spirit of God opens the eyes, and shows forth clearly the corruption of false doctrines, the anti-Christian teachings by precepts and examples. When I look back and see how steadily my course was downward, DOWNWARD, DOWNWARD, while under such corrupting influences and examples of older heads, I am compelled to say that it is really high time that all true Christians not only preach but also pray against all secretism, and abolish it not only from the pulpit but from the churches also. And while I had never read any of your papers, nor knew of any State organization against secret societies, has it not been in answer to earnest prayers sent up to the throne of grace, that besides myself four other Freemasons and two Odd-fellows, all residents here and near by, have deserted secretism when they espoused the cause of Jesus Christ?

Continue then in the good work in all earnest; expose the corruption, the evil tendencies in all its glittering and pleasing forms, but surely and most certainly ending in a never ending punishment. And may the Lord prosper you in building up His kingdom. J. O. DOESBURG.

ANOTHER VIEW OF THE CONSTITION.

[The following is a strongly written passage from an article on the Christian features of the Constitution developed by the Supreme Court decision in the polygamy case.]

The inauguration oath taken by President Hayes did not differ in its appeal to God from that taken by other occupants of the Presidential chair. And even Thomas Jefferson, the only avowed skeptic among all our Chief Magistrates, speaks thus in his first message as President: "I shall need the favor of that Being in whose hands we are—who led our fathers, as Israel of old, from their native lands, and planted them in a country flowing with all the necessaries and comforts of life; who has covered our infancy with his providence, and our riper years with his wisdom and power; and to whose goodness I ask you to join with me in supplications, that He will so enlighten the minds of your servants, guide their counsels and prosper their measures."—Phillip's American Republic, p. 134.

Abraham Lincoln in freeing the slaves did not override the Constitution. The very clause "as an act of justice" stands in his emancipation proclamation, and part of the design for which the Constitution was ordained is declared to be in order to "establish justice." The Constitution was not the act of the government, but it was merely an instrument enacted by the people (most of them Bible-believing men), to protect them from the unjust legislation and oppressive acts which a government might inflict. All power exercised in a nation has an origin, either delegated or assumed. All delegated powers are sacred trusts. "There is no power, if it be not of God." All assumed power is mere usurpation. The people, in their governmental sense, get their authority from God, as the author and upholder of the nation; and to maintain their trust they ordain and establish a Constitution, setting forth the objects of the government and defining its direct duties. The government has certain duties to discharge, but it has of itself no rights. If it could make a law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, it could dishonor the God of the Bible and turn our nation over to the hoodwinked and cable-towed fellows who worship a Great Architect. However, I do not oppose the movement for making this a more perfect Christian nation. In fact, I favor the formal incorporation of Christianity in the Constitution, which is already in spirit (although not in express verbiage) a Christian document.

D. B. TURNEY.

—The Southbridge, Mass., Journal, Feb. 13th ult., prints some excellent remarks prepared by S. L. Morse of that city for a debate held a short time previous. For want of time this portion of the argument was omitted. In it occurs the following passage:

"And yet Masonry claims to be divine—'to come from God'—which last claim I admit to be true, in a certain sense. It is so far from him that the devil may well claim it as his own. The Grand Orient (France) is consistent. It expunges the rule requiring the candidate to believe in God. There is a vitiated sentiment in the community, brought about, I believe, through the influence of Masonry in regard to the numerous defalcations of the day. The hoodwinked press (including nearly all in New England) does not mention the fact that the defaulter was a Mason, but there is a point that in does dwell upon with evident delight, and that is his church relations. Pond, of Worcester; Winslow, of Boston; Hathaway, of Fall River; Calder, of Providence, and many others are defaulters, and almost simultaneously you hear they were church members. I find no fault with this, but why not tell the whole truth? They were also Freemasons. If I am a pagan and renounce paganism and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ I am no longer a pagan but a Christian. Now these men were professed Christians; they renounced Christianity and embraced paganism (Masonry). 'They denied the Lord that bought them.' Is it strange that they should hear the Saviour's voice saying, 'If any man shall deny me before men, him will I deny before my father which is in heaven!'"

At the annual Convention of the Illinois Christian Association, held at Wheaton last November, P. C. Stone, of Round Grove, Whiteside county, (now of Morrison) was elected one of the Vice-presidents. By some misfortune Bro. Stone's name was omitted from the list of officers published in the Cynosure, and though the omission should have been noticed long ago, still "better late than never," and so this opportunity is taken to make the correction. Bro. Stone is one of the staunch opposers of the lodge in Whiteside county, and shows his faith by his works.

—The Herald of Gospel Freedom Rome City, Ind., organ of the Northern Indiana Eldership, Church of God, says of our Good Templar Exposition:

"The Cynosure has commenced publishing an exposition of the Independent Order of Good Templars. The copyright of the work has been secured by Ezra A. Cook & Co., who will continue the expose until the whole secret is out. The room adjoining our sanctum was formerly occupied by this order, which does not now hold regular meetings, and it is supposed that the lodge has disbanded. If any of our readers want to learn the secrets of this order, they can have them by sending for the Cynosure, Chicago, Ill."

To the friends of Reform in Northern Indiana: We want to make arrangements for the working of the degrees of Masonry by Past Master Ronayne at Zanesville, and we would like to know if there are not other points that would like to join in a series of appointments. Let us hear from you, brethren. Address

Rev. P. B. Williams,

—The House of Commons, Canada, after a discussion, voted down the resolution declaring the necessity of a strict and uniform observance of the Lord's day in all departments of the public service, and that all postmasters be permitted to close their offices during the whole of the Sabbath day.

—Bro. Fenton of St. Paul, Minn., asks:

Will some one be kind enough to say something in defense of the title Reverend as applied to ministers? The word occurs but once in the English version of the Bible, and there it is applied to God. Psalms 3: 10. "Holy and Reverend is his name." And Jesus said—Mat. 23:8. "Be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master even Christ, and all ye are brethren."

Reform News.

Ronayne in Hicksville, O.

It was my good fortune at an auspicious time to fall in at Hicksville, Defiance county, O., with Edmond Ronayne of Chicago who came to this place to expose Freemasonry and work its first three degrees. Having read frequently the account of such meetings I thought myself quite well informed of their workings and results. I must confess that my ideas in no sense had even approached the real developments of such a meeting.

To be sure here as at other places Freemasons were in no little trouble at having such a thing occur, but united in the invitation assuring the people that such an expose would only assist in building them up. They resolved to keep quiet and await the results. They were charitable enough to send a good delegation to each meeting who seemed to be no worse people in a public assembly than their neighbors who never had been illumined with the "lights" of Masonry. It is due Masons to say that they have seen the folly of endeavoring to resent with anger publicly these exposures and now usually keep quiet.

The enthusiasm of the people was unbounded. The largest hall in the place was secured yet many had to turn away who could not get admittance. A thousand tongues in every direction talked and recited, and grew enthusiastic, and a thousand more only waited to continue the conversation when opportunity permitted them to speak. Well the subject was discussed. The delight of the people was equal to their enthusiasm. They rejoiced and congratulated one another giving the most emphatic appreciation of what had been done. Had their town been saved from a fire or their community from a plague there could have been scarcely more delight.

The expose was complete and perfect. To this a number of those who had taken the first three degrees testified, frankly confessing that Mr. Ronayne is the most expert master they have ever seen. Let me add that some of the most delighted were among the craft, who feel that this has been to them a sledge that has broken the spell of Masonry. The result was fatal to the cause here. A rumor is abroad that the craft intend to have some Rev. Grand to reply to Ronayne. It is hoped that this is true, as it would give opportunity to tear up the roots that yet remain here if any.

Wives and friends of Masons are indignant and humiliated to see that members of their families should be implicated in so foolish and wicked a thing as Masonry. Everybody, old and young, are shocked at the thought that a minister of the Gospel should be found at such a place participating in the wicked pagan worship of the lodge—a minister of the Gospel who assumes to teach Christ and his salvation to a dying world on the Sabbath day, who the night before bowed down at the altar of Baal and insulted God and humanity with oaths that would shock a Ku-Klux or frighten a Mollie Maguire! On this point Mr. Ronayne reaches a climax that involuntarily evokes the exclamation, "Is it possible! Is it possible!!" Well might the angels in heaven exclaim the same.

The speaker seemed to have some charity for an illiterate man who had no opportunity to inform himself and would fail to comprehend the meaning of Masonry; but for a teacher of the people, a minister of the Gospel, to stand at the door of the lodge-room more naked than clothed, hoodwinked and cable-towed, and to the question of the Senior Deacon within, "Who comes here?" should reply through the Junior Deacon, who has him in charge in the ante-room, "Rev. A. B. Jones, who has long been in darkness and now seeks to be brought to light," etc.; and then to the following question, "Is this of your own free will and accord?" he answers, "It is,"—toward a man who should so prostitute his sacred robes and so insult Christ as to claim that he "had long been in darkness," it was beyond the stretch of human goodness to be charitable.

Nothing can be more true than that such a man and every other Christian man parts with Christ at the lodge door and never after enjoys his holy communion unless he severs his relation with this wicked thing and repents of his sin. Nothing is more certain in its effects than the robbing of a man by Masonry of his manhood and cowing him to its edicts. Once in the history of our race God saw fit to let fall one drop of his wrath on its devotees when on Mt. Carmel he slew the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal. These prophets or priests in the worship of Baal were identical with the worshipful masters or priests of the lodge. This every candid person will discover in the study of the philosophy of Masonry. This Baal or sun-worship has been revived, and in the year 1717 it assumed the form of Masonry. I hope no reader of this will fail to procure Ronayne's late work (see notice in this paper). Every Mason in existence should get it, and learn, what in all probability he does not know, the philosophy of Masonry. If there is any secrecy in Masonry it is in that which he has never been able to learn, of which we have just spoken. The grips, signs, passwords, initiations and ceremonies of Masonry are no secret and have not been for sixty years or more, and no one ever presents a more ridiculous farce than a Mason when he attempts to say that the uninitiated know nothing of Masonry. The hoodwinks, chains, coffin with skeleton, masked faces, foolish, childish ceremonies and sacrilegious worship of the Odd-fellow craft deserve scarcely less condemnation than its idolatrous parent, Masonry.

Mr. Ronayne's memory is wonderful, he has every thing at instant command. His defense of God's word and his onslaught against infidelity is more than equal to the present cunning of scepticism. I would speak for him with other communities, that he should be kept constantly in the field, and that no people zealous for truth and right who feel to do something for its cause, can do better than have him visit their place and give these lectures. Your children will call you blessed when you are gone. There are many single individuals who feel prompted on this question who could well afford to defray all expenses and enjoy it the best of any money they ever spent.

Don't fail to write to Mr. Ronayne, at 104 Bremer St., Chicago, and arrange to have him come and when you have succeeded in untangling your neighbors from this net of Satan, though they insist on being let alone now, they will afterward be most grateful.

Later.—Following these meetings a few evenings later, the fluttering craft managed, through the agency of a few susceptible boys and boyish men, headed by the editor of their village paper, to give an entertainment which may be entitled, The Farce of the Killing of Morgan. No farce was ever so completely a farce in the history of farces, and it has acted like the gun which the man in the excitement discharged with the muzzle in the wrong direction. We recommend that Mr. Ronayne engage this "Dramatic Club" to go with him to conclude his entertainments.

A Good Word for the N. C. A. and Associated Churches.

Golden, Col., Feb. 21, 1879.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Please indulge a few lines in your Guiding Star. I am glad to see that the Associated Churches of Christ are gaining favorable notice. I do hope that all who are in sympathy with the great reform work will file into line. In union there is strength. Next to the noble Cynosure would the Associated Church es be a power for good, if properly sustained. I think that Bro. Tobey has made a proper mark in citing the National Christian Association as the chief center of co-operation, surely a good platform around which to rally and safe to stand upon. Let all in sympathy with this great work rally to this center. Every branch of the Christian church that is uncontaminated by oath-bound organized secrecy and hypocrisy, and others that are striving to be freed from the ruinous influence of that foul system, by all means come into the compact for strength and efficiency. Let each denomination manage their own work as suits them best, but by delegation, sympathy and counsel make the Association a grand power to meet the dark powers of organized secrecy, and the many popular vices of these days.

May heaven bless those noble souls that dare to stand for the right in the face of a wicked world, expose error whether in church or state, and stand ready for investigation.

Brethren, lean on the strong arm of the Lord, then your labor will be crowned with Heaven's blessing.

Ever with you,

ABRAHAM HARTZELL.

No Seceding Anti-Masons in Rock County, Wis.

FOOTVILLE, Wis., Feb., 1879.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have seen nothing in your paper from this county for a long time, and there is not much news to write, but what there is is most certainly very good. I am pretty well acquainted through the county, especially with Anti-masons, and I don't think we have lost a member from our ranks, but we have gained many, and every man and woman that has joined us in opposing secrecy stands as firm as the martyrs of old. The combined powers of press and pulpit, money and eloquence, cannot shake their faith, in fact they are people that cannot be sold, or bought, and these people are slowly but surely increasing in numbers. A few years since the Masons laughed at the feeble attempt to oppose them, but now they tremble with fear. Their secret tongue is confounded, and the Anti-masons know more about Masonry than the Masons themselves.

I was talking with an editor in the city of Janesville a few months since, who was a Master Mason. I told him that the name of Jesus Christ was left out of their prayers. He said it was not. I told him it was according to their own writings. Said I, "Every Mason that I have talked with denies the truth of what I have said, but not one of them will take their oath to that effect." Said he, "I will;" and he raised his hand to take the oath. I said, "I am not an officer. I cannot administer an oath; but if you will go before a justice or any officer that is qualified to administer an oath, and take your oath, I will give you one dollar to pay you for your trouble. He said he was very busy. I then told him I would give him five dollars, but he flashed in the pan, and would not go. I think the reason why Masons lie is because they are sworn to lie, and the reason why they lie so easy is because they lie so much.

I think it is about time we stirred the old hornet's nest of secrecy again in this county (it is amusing to hear them buzz and see them squirm); but if we get a man to lecture he ought to have at least five or six places to speak in, and arrangements made so that he could lecture every evening, and not have to find places after he gets here. I would like to hear from those who want lectures through the Cynosure or by letter. I make this as a suggestion, and I think we ought to have some time to work this matter up and get ready if we have some lectures within three months.

Very respectfully,

W. C. STEVENS.

Christian Voting from a Woman's Standpoint.

[A sister who has some thoughts upon this topic deserves to be heard for the wisely put reason that "a woman's opinion might be published from the fact that she stands outside the political arena, and it could not be attributed to any selfish or mercenary motives."]

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Please allow me to express my views from a woman's standpoint. From reading your paper I infer that there are some who doubt the Christian's right to the elective franchise because the fundamental principles of the government are not all pure. Now, allow me to ask, what is to become of our beloved country and our happy homes if pure-minded, Christian men refuse to vote or hold office? I do not see how any man can be a true reformer and take that position; for the Scripture says, "Honor the king," that is the ruler. Now is not the man who refuses to help place good men in office amenable to God by causing a nation to sin? For either we must honor those that are wicked and unworthy or dishonor the Scriptures.

As Christian men, your duty to God and your country is to vote—vote against all that is vile and impure, vote for what will tend to elevate and ennoble mankind, vote for the protection of your wives and daughters, who cannot vote for themselves. For how can you successfully fight wickedness in high places, but by the ballot-box?

If the politics of our country has become such a filthy pool that none can dabble therein without soiling their garments or sinning against their consciences, 'tis high time you set about cleansing and purifying it with a goodly number of Christian votes, and if the first few attempts cause it to thicken and throw up more mire and dirt, you may be sure you have the right remedy, all you need is keep on; and may God give to every pure-minded man the will and the power to use this remedy until it shall become so pure that not even ministerial robes will be soiled thereby. Paul said he could do all things through Christ who strengthened him. Brethren, pray without ceasing that Christ may strengthen you to go forward and to do your whole duty; not faint-hearted and faltering, but trusting in the Lord our God; shoulder to shoulder, a solid phalanx to win this nation to Christ. For this I pray, asking in faith believing. "For the heathen shall be given him for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession."

Christ mingled freely with the poor, the base and the sinful. The Pharisee's complaint was, "He hath gone to be guest to a man that is a sinner," for Zaccheus held an office under the government; but for all this Christ was not defiled by contact with sin. So let every one go forth, battling in His name, remembering the servant is not above his master.

From Tuscola County, Mich.

NEWBERRY, Mich., Feb. 21, '79.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I noticed an article in the Christian Cynosure, February 13, '79 entitled "Let there be light." I was glad to know that there were men so near by me who were renouncing the evils of Masonry. I have only been in this place a short time. There is a lodge of Odd-fellows with about twenty-six members, most of the number farmers. I have been here two months and have had several battles to fight with my neighbors, Odd-fellows and Masons, and I have come off conqueror; which is an easy matter, as neither party have a solid foundation to work on. It is a false worship and therefore cannot stand discussion.

An Odd-fellow came to my place the other day and said to me, "Soper, you must not say so much about our order. It might do you an awful sight of harm." That was all I wanted to know of him or the order to which he belonged. I told him that God was on my side and to him only did I look for help in time of need; and I thanked God that I had not gone beyond the word of Holy Writ for example to guide me among men and that I had never become a slave, bound to any order, God says let your light shine, etc., but they "choose darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." Any institution that will not stand public scrutiny should not be tolerated by any civil government.

I was surprised the other day at a statement made by my neighbor J. G. V., road commissioner of Tuscola county, a well known citizen in this part of the State, a man who came here in the earlier part of his life and has grown up with the country and the lodge, and he says he is a member of the old Lutheran church. He denied to myself and others every statement made in the Cynosure supplement, and the assertion made by J. P. Stoddard that there was a Masonic building in Ann Arbor exempt from taxation. He says it's all trash and Free Methodist lies. He said that the Odd-fellows and Masons donated ten dollars to one to the yellow fever sufferers in the South, and that the Christian churches never donated one dollar. When you have space in your paper I would like a correct statement of the donations. I would like an expose of Odd-fellowship, showing how the means are made use of. A man who had recently joined the Odd-fellows told me that if any of the funds went to support the Grand Lodge he would leave them at once.

There has been several questions brought up in the lodge since I came out here. I am told I am censured for the same. Some of the boys told at school that I was going to expose Masonry at the schoolhouse and quite an excitement followed. I think if we had a good lecture here now a great amount of good could be accomplished. I was showing the paper to an Odd-fellow. He said, "Why, I thought Ronayne was the only man that was exposing secret orders." I tell you, gentlemen, the lodges throughout the land are beginning to tremble at the great reform that is going on. The effect of Ronayne's lectures in Tilsonburg, Ont., in 1877, are long to be remembered. Several Masons that attended the expose have left lodge never to return. And I was surprised by a letter the other day saying that an old friend of the township of Norwich, had renounced Masonry and how it was brought about. It appears that the postmaster's boy gave out to him the wrong paper; the mistake was not discovered until he reached home. He read it and has read all he could get of them ever since; he has not been in a lodge for six months. Would to God that we had ten thousand Ronaynes to lecture, how great would be the result! I have received the Cynosure from home every week, and after reading hand them to my neighbors, who are all Odd-fellows. I am a stranger in this place, and can do little in circulating the paper, but I shall do what I can in the future. I would like to attend the convention at Adrian but cannot. Hoping all who are in the field against the great secret foe of Christianity will be there to assist Ronayne and Stoddard in the great reform work.

Yours truly, L. SOPER.

We always have reason to bless God whatever may be our present condition. Our mercies are great and multiplied and our sufferings less than we deserve.

How an Odd-fellow Grand Lodge did not Squelch a Member.

I have seen the evil tendencies of these secret societies among men, and suffered long at their hands years ago until by the force of circumstances I was compelled to open my mouth and expose their iniquities, which I did in the winter of 1846-7, traveling throughout New England with Dr. Willis's expose which went through the ceremonies of initiation; after which I addressed the people upon the dangerous tendencies of secret societies, as running counter to our form of government and contrary to the expressed injunction of Divine Writ, wherein we are commanded "to do good and communicate," and to "resist evil." If there is an evil in these clandestine meetings let them be "resisted." But no! these societies will not permit you under penalty of expulsion, consequently fear takes the place of true love, which casteth out fear.

I went through many miraculous escapes. More than once my life was threatened here in this Puritanic New England; but trusting in the God of all grace, and in the honesty of my purpose, I have the satisfaction of knowing that I dealt them heavy blows from which they did not recover for years.

The Grand Lodge of the State took a hand in the fight, and I was summoned to appear before a subcommittee of the State organization and answer to a charge made against me for misrepresenting the character of the order. Contrary to the earnest request of all of my friends at that time, I went into the presence of forty-five men in a lodge-room and defended my position against my accusers. I had proceeded but a few moments when the chairman of the committee (himself a clergyman) demanded my card of clearance which I got from the order when I left it. I said, "You promised me an impartial hearing if I would make my appearance, and I am here to defend the position I have taken, not to surrender the only testimonial I have that I left the order with as good a character as when I entered it." They refused to hear me and insisted that I give up the card of clearance, which I objected to; and when told I could not leave the room until I did, I walked back to the stove, armed myself with a billet of wood and advanced to the inside guardian and demanded an outlet for myself, which I was refused. I immediately put my foot through the panels, when to a man they rose to their feet and ordered me to stop. I said, "The first man that dares to lay violent hands upon me does it at his peril. I shall deal him a death blow. I am going out of here." And I did, no man daring to stay my going.

The ostensible object of the Grand Lodge of the State of Massachusetts was to rob me of my good name and make me an outlaw. This manner of attack was followed up until I had to take the field and lecture to them and the people upon those iniquities. I met this same clergyman and chairman in his town in a debate and used him up to such an extent that he preached his farewell sermon the Sunday following, although his engagement with his society had six months more to run.

I could give you many reminicences of those days, but I fear I have already wearied your patience.

Yours,

LUCIAN PRINCE.

The Lutheran Publication House and Masonry.

CANAL DOVER, O., Feb. 10, '79.

In the January number of the Augsburg Teacher, the Lutheran Sabbath School journal, there appears the following advertisement:

Only for F. and A. Masons R.·. A.·. M.·. and K. T. Separate rituals in cypher to make Rusty Masons Bright. For catalogue and useful information for Master Masons, address with stamp, Masonic Book Agency Cor. Broadway and Warren streets, New York.

"Mention this paper," inserted on the margin.

The above scarcely needs any comment and yet it contains some significancy.

1. It shows that even a publication house controlled by a Christian church will, for a price, link arms with Satan and aid an anti-Christian organization in duping men out of their money by a flattering advertisement.

2. The marks ∴ is a Masonic abbreviation which Mackey (Lexicon, p. 11) presumes alludes to the three lesser lights placed in a triangular form around the altar. It is simply a Masonic outrage on the English language, in which it (Masonry) presumes to have its own language, symbols, religion, etc.

3. While the New York Tribune is so zealous in exposing the "Cypher frauds" of Tilden, Marble & Co., let them and all other true American citizens, remember that there is a much more potent "Imperium in imperio" at work in our country, whose laws, principles and communications are "in cypher." And let them, after fully exposing this Tilden fraud, pursue the course in exposing this Satanic secret "cypher" government that is sapping the vitality from our free government. A man remarked lately, that the Tribune was doing one of the grandest things possible by exposing that gigantic fraud. It is true. But it can do a still grander mission if it will next purge itself of the "worm of the still," and then proceed to publish the "hidden mysteries" of Freemasonry, which are ten-fold worse than the revelations of the matter now in hand.

Yours for the progress of the work, C. W. KOHR.

Our Mail.

Thos. Osgood, Erie, Monroe Co, Mich., writes:

"We have to wrestle against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

J. W. Kendall, Shedd, Oregon, writes:

"This cause must succeed, because He who is leader never fails."

Richard Platt, Lockport, Ill., writes:

"I pray the Lord to bless the Cynosure, on its mission wherever it goes."

Geo. Currie, Cedarville, O., writes:

"I have been an Anti mason ever since the abduction of Morgan. Just about that time I became a voter, and the older I get the less I like these secret associations. Our town is cursed with a number of secret associations."

Jesse Adams, Bristol, Ind., writes:

"There must be a stirring up of the people before anything is done for this cause. Our minister has been holding protracted meetings here. The I. O. O. F. had an installation and annual ball. He (our minister) had a short service at the church, and then went over to the Odd-fellows' room and made a speech. I did not hear it, but have it from good authority that he said he wished the church had a grip and pass-word; and that their order had done more for mankind than all the churches."

M. Langhorne, Washington, D. C., sends a contribution for Tract Fund and writes:

"I have no doubt that there are thousands all over the country who would make you large contributions if they only KNEW there was such an organization. I only heard of it several months ago."

A friend, Waitsfield, Vt., writes:

"In the Cynosure of Jan. 2d, a correspondent asks if the man Boyden, who started the grange in Vermont, was a Mason. I answer, Yes. I live in the same town where he located himself, and where he formed a grange, and where he also had considerable influence. But his glory departed a long time ago. He has left for an adjoining town. We had yesterday what is called a Good Templars' Re-union, to promote the cause of temperance. Speakers from abroad were engaged to speak to the people in the evening. The main speaker, who stood before a large audience composed largely of the young people of this place and adjoining towns, was heard before and after his lecture publicly to use gross profanity before young men of this place.

"Furthermore he declared in his lecture that he was a Mason, and all men should be. And if Masons lived up to the ritual of their lodge, it was as good a religion as any one need. Another prominent speaker, who denounces all who do not join the Good Templars as not being temperance men, shows his consistency by renting a mill to make cider. Now let me ask in all candor, how can a temperance man with any moral principle look upon a public lecturer and reformer who fills himself with opium, tobacco, etc., besides filling the public house and streets with profanity? (But thank God all are not so.) I pause for a reply."

D. D. Beal, Hamilton, O., writes:

"I bid you God speed in fighting the grim monster lurking in secret, with shut windows, in the cover of the night, high up in the third story. Push the battle on."

U. D. Lathrop, Viola, Ill., writes:

"We are still looking for the triumph of the righteousness revealed in Jesus."

Ziba Finch, Capay, Cal., writes:

"I am a seceding Mason of three degrees. The Cynosure has been a great help to me in showing the dreadful wickedness of the order. I intend to do all I can to counteract any influence that I may have exerted in favor of such an abomination. I am a poor man, but will do all I can to aid in this reform. My father has his home with me. He is now in his eighty-ninth year. He lived in Ontario county in the Morgan times. He is thoroughly anti-secret. The next meeting of our County Anti-secret Association will be held here. We hope for good results. I send with this my renewal and two new subscriptions for the Cynosure. I cannot do without it. One of these subscribers is a friend twenty-five miles from here."

E. C. Spencer, Myersburg, Pa., writes:

"In this place the reform has but very few friends. Trusting that God will in due time root up all trees which are not of his planting, and establish his vine yard with free and honest watchmen a the gates, I remain a true friend of the cause you are laboring to promote."

J. Fetterhoff, Chambersburg, Pa., writes:

"I am in my eighty-first year, and know something of the dark workings of secrecy, and the trouble and curse it has brought in many places, both in church and state; thwarting justice, condemning the innocent, and justifying the wicked. (See Prov. 17:15.) These things have been done here in Chambersburg. Therefore the truly loyal members of the church were compelled to find a place for themselves where they can worship God in peace, and respect the laws of the church."

Rev. Ephraim Thomas, Oakland City, Ind., writes:

"The cause is good and I shall never abandon it. May God bless you and the good cause. We pray for it in our weekly prayer meetings. We are advancing here in Oakland City. God is on our side, and the victory will be ours."

Sam'l B. Allen, President of Westfield College, Westfield, Ill., writes:

"My interest in our good cause finds very inadequate representation in my feeble efforts to advance it. I am ever thankful to God that while I am so much 'consumed' in other labors, my dear brethren, so many and so strong, are able to throw time and power into the activities of our crusade. May God still prosper the cause."

Mrs. R. B. Ashley, Plainfield, Ill., writes:

"A gentleman not long since remarked that he considered secret societies a good thing, because the members were taught to keep a secret. We have seen that principle demonstrated recently in our once quiet town. No man dare openly to sell a glass of intoxicating drink, and yet intemperance is on the increase. How do men obtain the liquor? An investigating committee was appointed by our temperance club. They reported in our last meeting. Liquor is brought into town in large quantities under cover of darkness, and secretly distributed around to those who are in the habit of drinking. * * May the time soon come when Masonry will be banished to the dark regions below, where it originated."

Wm. Steel, Portland, Oregon, writes:

"Most of the anti-secrecy men are too much afraid of the dark orders to let their sentiments be known; yet even here the fight is coming. I was at one time acquainted with Dr. Bingham, and most of the eastern Ohio Abolitionists, and am glad to see that he and many others of them still live to fight in the ranks of reform. I hope none will become discouraged, as victory is certain and sure, for God reigns. It is only a question of time. How I would like to live to see the final victory over Masonry and all its vile progeny."

Chas. Smith, Knoxville, Marion Co., Ia., writes:

"Soon after the murder of Wm. Morgan I helped buy a printing press at Milan, Huron county, Ohio, and published a paper at that place for several years, showing the wickedness and abominations of Masonry. I have forgetten the name of the paper and also how long it was published. I learned then to hate Masonry and have hated it ever since. I am seventy-six years old, and I have for the last forty years cast my influence against all secret societies. I firmly believe I am doing my duty in that direction. This entire region is overrun with secret societies which are a curse all over this country."

John Swickard, New Albany, Pa., writes:

"O, if our preachers were not so much like 'dumb dogs,' the good work would go on with more speed. O, that our preachers would cry aloud and spare not, and show the people the evil of secrecy, the craft would have to give way."

Rev. C. Powers, Brookline, Mo., writes:

"I have withdrawn from the former church of my choice, and would be glad if I could succeed in getting a Free Methodist or United Brethren church in this new village. I am in sympathy with the principles advocated in the Cynosure. If some able lecturer should pass through southwestern Missouri from your place, ask them to stop at Brookline, 160 miles from St. Louis on the St. Louis and San Francisco railroad, and call at the residence of Rev. C. Powers, where they will be welcome. They will be desired to lecture in a meeting house near by. By the way here is a good place to hold Gospel meetings with good chance of success."

Act together in harmony, in honor preferring one another; strive to excel in good words and works, remembering the object for which our noble order was instituted, and its cardinal principles, as symbolized in our emblem and found in our motto—"Faith, Hope and Charity." The Grand Lodge expects a good report from you, and the community that you will do a good work. I return you the thanks of the Grand Lodge and my own for the past, and as you are now in a condition to continue your noble work, may Heaven bestow upon you increased prosperity.

And all are free indeed.

Stand up, stand up for temperance,
Against unnumbered foes,
Your courage rise with danger,
And strength to strength oppose;
Forth to this mighty conflict—
Go, in this glorious hour—
Where duty calls, or danger,
Be never wanting there.

THE END.

Temperance.

Alcohol is a poison to our organization. It is never digested and converted into nourishment.—D. Murray.

Beer, wine, spirits, etc., furnish no element capable of entering into the composition of blood, muscular fiber, or any part which is the seat of the vital principle.—Baron Liebig.

A small quantity of pure alcohol injected into the veins of an animal causes immediate death. The poison having been absorbed, carried to the heart and propelled to the brain, the nervous centers become paralyzed the heart ceases to beat.—Prof. Munro, M. D.

I never suffer ardent spirits in my house, thinking them evil spirits; and if the poor could witness the white livers, the dropsies, the shattered nervous systems, which I have seen as the consequences of drinking, they would be aware that spirits and poisons are synonymous terms.—Sir Astley Cooper.

If what has been said of the nature and essential properties of alcoholic liquors be correct, there can be no such thing as temperate or moderate use of them as beverages. No man in the enjoyment of health and vigor can need such beverages, nor innocently imbibe them, whether in large or small quantities—Horace Greeley.

I have no hesitation in attributing a very large proportion of some of the most painful and dangerous maladies which come under my notice, as well as those which every medical man has to treat, to the ordinary and daily use of fermented drink, taken in the quantity which is conventionally deemed moderate.—Sir Henry Thompson.

A correspondent of one of our religious journals writes: There are many professing Christians whose record will stand more for tobacco—a hundred-fold—than for the conversion of the world." A pastor corroborates this statement by the following significant statistics: "I have 267 members in full connection, and 100 probationers on my charge. Sixty-seven of them use tobacco, and on making inquiry of each one, I find they have spent for that article in a single year $845. The entire membership, with the aid of the outsiders, gave to pay the pastor and presiding elder, conference claimants, missions, church extension and freedmen, $841." The same pastor adds: "One member confessed to spending $145 for tobacco. His contribution for church extension was sixty-six cents. Another confessed to an expenditure of $91 for tobacco. His contributions stood thus: Missions, $1; conference claimants, $1." The tobacco waste, like that for strong drink, is enormous in the aggregate and far exceeds the amount paid for religious and philanthropic missions. The effort being made in the Methodist General Conference to exclude all tobacco users from the pulpits of that denomination is a timely movement in the right direction, and ought to be so extended as to embrace the ministry, and membership as well, of all other Christian churches. It is certainly no part of God's will pertaining to this world that professing Christians should continue to smoke, snuff and chew tobacco.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH. 6, 1879.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.—The article on this subject in the present number is from an old friend and college mate, Rev. Ezra Jones. He was Sophomore when I entered Freshman in Middlebury College. He had then taken seven degrees and was a Royal Arch Mason. This was in 1828. But Morgan had been murdered two years before and the lodge had screened his murderers and Mr. Jones in company with eight or nine tenths of the people of Vermont, at that time abhorred Freemasonry as a system of fraud and imposition. I remember how Mr. Jones told me of the persons in that vicinity whom he had assisted in putting through the degrees of the ritual. I hope this excellent brother will let the readers of the Cynosure hear from him on this subject. He sends us a couple of discourses on the post-millennial coming of Christ. I think the article we give to-day the best writing we have seen on that subject. It will repay a careful and thoughtful perusal, and if any of our readers wish to obtain the pamphlet, ten copies can be had for one dollar by writing to the author at Medina, Orleans county, New York. Meantime, though this is the best answer to and confutation of the idea that our little globe, which is but a volcanic cinder rounded, a reconstructed sphere out of a former wreck, is to be the capitol of Christ's Mediatorial Kingdom; yet this and all other discussions are poor and beggarly accounts of what the millennial world will be when we get to it, or what Christ will do with this planet which would not afford standing room for our race, if they were all here to-day. When he left here he said he was going to a house of many mansions to prepare us a place elsewhere. That mansion eye hath not seen nor ear heard its sounds.

OUR MAIL.—If the Cynosure contain no other article but this (Mrs. Cook's), it would, in our sober judgment, be worth more than the subscription price to the fathers, mothers, and friends whose loved ones have been saved thousands of dollars from the maw of the secret monster, which would have been fooled out of them by the tramps and vagabonds of the lodge, but for the information of a wide-spread reform afforded in "Our Mail," and the clear, ringing extracts it gives. Besides, it is a sort of common-place book, or album of reform, where old friends see each others names,

"And storied ages o'er the memory pass
Like shadows pictured on a sea of glass."

In "Our Mail" in the present number, I greet one of the Mr. Joslins, of Vermont, where I taught school while in college, now full half a century ago; and Mr. Wm. Steele, of Portland, Oregon, within hearing of the sea lions of the Pacific, hails the good Dr. Bingham and the eastern Ohio Abolitionists with whom he stood shoulder to shoulder and to give one more warm greeting before crossing to the "Celestial City." The remotest ends of the country meet weekly in "Our Mail." God grant the "ends of the earth" may yet do so. Its voice is as cheering as a bugle to God's troops.

"Bore the pelting scorn of half an age,"

SENATOR BLAINE AND THE CHINESE QUESTION.

"————Earth is sick
And heaven is weary of the hollow words
Which kings and statesmen utter when they talk
Of justice."—SHAK.

This gentleman has published in the New York Tribune, an exceedingly able letter in defence of his vote for the law restricting Chinese emigration. The letter has already produced a powerful effect on the country, and is destined to produce a still greater effect, if the facts given turn out to be true.

Our Burlingame treaty provides for free, voluntary immigration from China; but Senator Blaine alleges that the emigration from China is not of that sort, but is all emigration "under contract;" that, in short, it is thus far a huge deportation of convicts, paupers and prostitutes, against the admission of which the laws of reason, nature and nations provide; that there are as yet none, or next to no families, as we understand the term, among the emigrants; that a detestable system of polyandry prevails, by which one woman has many husbands; and that he (Senator Blaine) has seen and read translations of bonds and contracts for prostitution, made as ordinary business documents. The case he labors to make, and seems to have made out, is, that if Chinese immigration of this sort is unrestricted, the whole Pacific slope is as certainly given up to heathenism as causes are to produce their known and certain effects. If the facts and testimony which he gives are true, there is no escaping his conclusions; but if his facts fail, his case fails with them.

We had written thus far, when the Inter-ocean of Feb. 26, brings us a long and able editorial, with a letter from Secretary Powell, (Chicago) of the Am. Miss. Association, which we have carefully read. The Inter-ocean editor says well and piously, "Our civilzation is a Christian civilization;" and that, "It is our duty to love the heathen as our fellow men, and to freely contribute to their conversion to the ways of Christian civilization, but that duty does not reach so far as to bring them into our family circle." And he argues, in substance, that in the weak thought of converting the heathen Chinese, we are not to make a certain surrender of our Christian civilization to their heathenism.

Secretary Powell confines himself to the single statement in the Blaine letter, that "Not one in a thousand (Chinese) have even nominally professed a change from heathenism." and he gives church and school statistics by which he seems to prove that eight in a thousand have professedly dropped their heathenism; which, in a political view, would not make much difference on an election day.

The Cynosure is the nearest noncommittal on this question of restricting Chinese emigration that it has ever been on any point of like gravity and importance to human well being. If the early colonists of New England had admitted a majority of persons to settle and vote with them, like Roger Williams whom they banished, and Mary Dyer whom they hung, there certainly would have been no American Revolution and no United States, whatever else there might have been here. It is equally certain that China can send heathen enough in five or ten years, to heathenize the Pacific slope, and the fear is rational that she may do so.

Our remedy is to adopt the platform of the American party, which would make these pagans aliens, until Christianized. This was the policy of Moses in like circumstances and he had his policy from God. We await the developments of discussion.

Meantime let us examine the consistency, (shall I say sincerity?) of these three gentlemen in their Americanism. Senator Blaine says:

"The Chinese adhere to their own dress, speak their own language, worship in their own heathen temples and, inside the municipal law and independent of it, administer a code among themselves, even pronouncing the death penalty and executing it in CRIMINAL SECRECY."

Now Hon. James G. Blaine, who is, as we believe, a Knight Templar, has sworn to just such a code as he charges on the Chinese, without the palliation of heathenism to excuse him. He knows very well that in the courts of San Francisco and elsewhere, Masons have once and again refused to answer as witnesses, giving their Masonic oaths, as their justification; thus declaring the Masonic code "independent" of the law of the land, which the Chinese are not proved to have done in behalf of theirs. Mr. Blaine can plead neither ignorance nor unbelief. Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Vermont, all had statutes forbidding Masonic oaths on this precise ground, before Mr. Blaine began to swear those oaths, of which he has taken about sixty, more or less. If he is sincerely opposed to a Chinese imperium in imperio, "that solecism in government," as Samuel Adams used to call it, how does he justify it in himself? And how can he answer it to intelligent Americans?

The Inter-ocean clearly sympathizes with Mr. Blaine's letter, a part of which justifies excluding Chinese emigration more strongly than their secret Masonic government, and yet the Inter-ocean is the willing organ and publisher of just such a government in our midst, which has again and again executed the death penalty "in criminal secrecy;" and every Mason swears consent to be so executed in case he violates its laws. Nor is the moral status of Secretary Powell better in the sight of God, or much better in the sight of men. He represents the American Missionary Association which appoints Freemasons on its committees, and which did appoint Knight Templar Healy, its agent to found churches and president of one of its colleges! And while Mr. Powell is indebted to me for the appointment which he holds; and has received many dollars in money contributed by myself and by others through my hands, he has shown no disposition to shield me or Wheaton College from Masonic assaults, and has kept aloof from the reform as he would from the yellow fever, though no danger is more imminent to the ignorant ex-slaves of whom he should be the guardian, than that of their being dazzled by the gauze and glitter of Freemasonry, and swindled and sworn into the lodge or taken into its Romish mother beyond it. What can be expected of statesmen and politicians when ministers like Mr. Powell, supported by the funds of the churches, will do nothing to save them from danger and destruction by the worst elements of Chinese heathenism?

HABITS AND HAUNTS OF DEVILS.

The Saviour Jesus Christ met Satan at his entrance on his public ministry, refused to worship, denounced and defied him, saying, "Get thee hence Satan." (Mat. 4: 10.) When he sent out apostles the first clause of their commission was, "Power against unclean spirits." And the first sign following them that believed on him, under their preaching was: "They shall cast out devils." (Mark 16: 17.)

Where sin, Satan and wicked men came from? Why God, having power to prevent, permitted them? are questions which fools can ask, but philosophers cannot solve. We may have leisure for these things in eternity. But while robbers have pistols at our heads, demanding our money, we have neither time nor means, nor is it so material to inquire where they came from, or the nature and origin of their calling. The material thing is, there are devils, as there are angels. For "if the Bible is not true, nothing's true." But something is true, for let a man doubt what he will, he cannot doubt that he doubts.

And if the Bible is true these devils are like bandits who have their pistols at our breasts: and our national concern is how to stand against their "wiles," (or methods as it is in the Greek). And to this end we need to know their habits and their haunts; and, I need not repeat, these can be known only from the Bible. This only gives us reliable information of that belt of eternity which lies next to time.

Devils are not goblins, warlocks, and witches; though these may be their tools. They are real enemies, "principalities and powers" against whom we "wrestle," struggle, and contend. The Saviour informs us (Mat. 12:43) that when they are gone out of men, they go into "dry places;" the word "dry" meaning "desert," "unoccupied" places. Like savage beasts or bandits, they affect solitude, "seeking rest and finding none," to hatch new schemes of mischief, and plan devilish adventures, pursuing which they again seek to enter men. And they evermore give their profoundest attention to the men and movements which they most fear, and work steadily to conceal and deny their own existence, and to hide their agency. In Judas and Gehazi they hid themselves in avarice; in Ananias and Sapphira they hid under lies; and under sorcery in the Phillippian damsel. And as they are all unclean spirits they hide themselves, in all their victims, in hateful passions, vices and lusts.

If there be a class of men and women on earth who need to "watch and pray" against devils, it is those of us who are assailing their "strongholds" in lodges and false worships; and assailing the sins and vices of our friends and brethren, even, under which the evil spirits hide. Your average worldly professor, your craven, self-seeking editor, who prints only such religion as the world and Satan have ceased to resist, the false prophets of all ages,—these men are Satan's sentinels against reform. In their lifetime they "have their good things." But whoever will follow Christ "without the camp," bearing his reproach, must suffer with him; and we need incessantly to watch unto prayer.

Political Action.

A civil constitution is not a religious creed; nor is a civil government a church. Yet, "The civil powers that be are ordained of God," and "There is no power but of God." (Rom. 13:1.) While, therefore, Christians can vote and still be within the "ordinance of God," the children of this world are not disfranchised, deprived of their political rights, by the want of regeneration. This is the difference between church and state. The church is supposed to consist of regenerated persons. It is absurd to give the spiritual bread of Christ's Supper to a spiritual corpse. But the state is an institution in which all people are included but outlaws.

The prejudice, therefore, of some Christians against political action, is not well founded. If Christ and his apostles were citizens of the United States, as they were of Judea, there is no reason to doubt that they would vote here, as they paid taxes there. Voting is no more supporting the Government (and the Constitution is the Government) than paying money to support those who are voted for by others. And Christ certainly paid taxes, as his parents did before him. (Mat. 17: 27—Luke 2:5.) He was born while they were on a journey to pay a tax, to a power and under a constitution certainly as faulty as that of the United States.

But Christ's apostles refused obedience to the civil authorities when commanded to sin. They then obeyed God rather than men. (Acts 5: 29.) But where this right of refusing obedience to the civil power accrues must be referred to the enlightened judgment and Christian conscience of men—"the God within the mind."

The National Christian Association has, from the first, been careful not to confound and mingle these two distinct and separate jurisdictions. It has always adjourned when the "American Party" has held its sessions. Then all voters are invited to co-operate who believe in American principles as set forth in our platform And it contains the principles on which all American institutions rested at the first, and still rest at the bottom. But one part of one plank of it, that concerning return to specie payment, is obsolete. Nor, indeed, is that obsolete. It is justified by the return of the country to a metallic basis, but its doctrine is good while society stands and currency is needed.

Let every Christian reader resolve, by applying God's principles to the ways of men, to be, so far as in him lies, the salt of civil as of religious institutions, the state as well as the church.

—Secretary Stoddard is at Utica, Ohio, this week at the meeting of the State Association.

—The Michigan State Convention met at Adrian last week and was a successful meeting if we may judge from the press reports. On Thursday morning the following officers were elected: President, Cornelius Quick of Weston; First Vice President, John Phillips, Hudson; Second Vice President, the Rev. H. D. Inman, Coldwater; Corresponding Secretary, H. Day, Jackson; Recording Sec'y, W. H. Ross, Jackson; Treasurer, Nelson Perkins, Hudson; Executive Committee, Dr. L. L. Wicker, Holley; Elvin Jones, Palmyra. A committee was appointed to report a plan for an organized campaign against all secret orders in the State; and a motion was carried to ask aid to the extent of $100 from the National Christian Association.

—Another month's work for our Illinois State Agent is finished and with the sum now in the treasury at least $35 more will be needed to pay him promptly. Will not a twenty or more of the friends who have received the invitation to subscribe to this work each send in immediately $2 00, the amount of one share? Father Preston of Lockport, has done nobly. Beside paying for two shares himself, he has raised $9.00 among his neighbors—this from one town and a man nearly 87 years old! What ought to be expected from younger men in other towns?

—Boyden, who introduced grangerism into Vermont, is a Mason. Had it not been for Freemasonry, these pretended farmer's lodges would never have been thought of, nor their swindling operations set afoot with, for a time, such seeming success.

—An excellent article has been received from Midland, Mich., on the losses of Masonry from non-affiliation, etc. Through some inadvertence the author forgets to give his name. He will confer a favor by so doing.

—An important item from the Worcester convention which did not appear in our published report, is that the convention accepted the invitation of Rev. A. A. Phelps of the Bible Banner to meet in Philadelphia next year.

—If any one is curious to know the effect of applying the religious principles of Freemasonry to the Sabbath-school, they may find an illustration in the following item. What kind of consciences would be produced by such a course of "religious" instruction?

"The Free Congregational church of Florence, Mass., which belongs to the radical wing of the Unitarian denomination, has a large Sabbath-school. The school is opened with singing and readings of poetry and prose, the latter extracts of history or science, and selections from moralists—pagan as well as Christian. One class is devoted to the study of Shakespeare, another of Milton's Paradise Lost, and another to book-keeping. There are also classes in history, zoology and drawing. Neither prayer nor Bible-reading is used in the regular exercises, and the Bible is placed on a level of other sacred writings."

Literary.

Past Master Ronayne's new book, "THE MASTER'S CARPET, or Masonry and Baal Worship Identical," is now ready. It proves as conclusively as language can express it that the Masonic philosophy is the old Osirian or Baal worship revived, while it also points out the coincidence between Masonry and Romanism showing that if the Bible be the Word of God these two systems of secretism and idolatry must undoubtedly be "the mystery of iniquity."

It contains 377 pages and 48 engravings, 35 of which never before appeared in any Masonic exposition, and correctly represents the lodge and candidate in every ceremony.

It is bound in stiff covers like the "Gospel Hymns." A copy ought to be in the hands of every man and especially of every minister in America. Orders for this book can be filled in Chicago at Cynosure office and by E. Ronayne, 104 Bremer st.

Price post-paid $1 00.

—H. L. Hastings, publisher of the Christian, anti-tobacco tracts, etc., at the Scriptural Tract Repository, Boston, supplies Sabbath schools with papers at very low rates. The Christian, which comprises four distinct papers, is sent post paid for $3 00 per hundred, or three-fourths of a cent per paper. The Little Christian, for young children, $1 00 per hundred. Back numbers of the Christian sent by express are $10.00 for 500 copies or 2,000 papers.

Vick's Monthly for March with its finely illustrated pages is ready for all lovers of floriculture. No publication of the kind within our knowledge can compare with it for beauty and practical help. Life's West Windows.

We stand at life's west windows,
And think of the days that are gone,
Remembering the coming sunset,
We too must remember the morn,
But the sun will set, the day will close,
And an end will come to all our woes.

As we watch from the western casements,
Reviewing our happy youth,
We mourn for its vanished promise
Of honor, ambition, and truth,
But hopes will fail and pride decay,
When we think how soon we must pass away.

We stand at life's west windows,
And turn not sadly away,
To watch on our children's faces
The noontide of sparkling day,
But our sun must set, our lips grow dumb,
And to look from our windows our children come.

Still looking from life's west windows,
And we know we would not again
Look forth from the eastern lattice,
And live over all life's pain,
Though life's sunlight be brilliant, its sunset is sweet,
Since it brings longed-for rest to our weary feet.

The First Resurrection.

These words occur twice in Revelation, and there only. Of the differing views that have been entertained of them, one has regarded them and their context as a prediction of the rising of the premillennial saints from their graves a thousand years before the rising of the unrighteous dead.

Another view is that life from the death of sin through all nations is here figuratively foretold. and that this will be effected before the resurrection described in 1 Cor., 15th. We are convinced that this view is the one sustained by the Scriptures.

1. Because the other seems to contradict many passages which teach that the summons and attendance at the Judgment seat will include the whole race of both classes at the same hour. The other contemplates the early entrance of all the saints, both deceased and living, upon the glories awaiting their resurrection and change; and the continuance of all the unrighteous dead in their graves till after the close of the millennium.

Now, that the two classes will be raised, and changed and judged at the same time, is proved conclusively by the following inspired predictions:

Acts 17:31—"Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness. Rom. 2:6-16—Who will render to every man according to his deeds, in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ. Mat. 16:27—The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels, and then shall he reward every man according to his works. Luke, 9:26—Whosoever shall be ashamed of me, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's and of the holy angels. John, 5:28 29—Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation. 2 Thess., 1:6-10—Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you, and to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengence on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints and to be admired in all them that believe, in that day." How distinctly are we here assured that there is no thousand years between, but that when he comes to be glorified by one class, he then awards everlasting destruction to the other. Mat. 25:31-46—"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations. And he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom. Then shall he also say unto them on the left hand, Depart." The public award to the just and to the unjust, among all nations, will be enforced at the same time. 2 Tim., 4:1—"Who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom?" When he ascended from Mount Olivet to heaven, and a cloud received him out of the sight of his disciples, two celestial visitants assured them that he should so come in like manner as they had seen him go into heaven. So sixty years afterwards John declared in Rev. 1:7—Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eyes shall see him, and they also who pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." The wicked dead must needs then arise from their graves to see him. And the obvious meaning of all these testimonies is, that at his personal coming, his appearing the second time—Heb. 9:28—our whole race will be raised and changed, and forthwith stand before his bar, to receive their final, just and full reward. A majority of these predictions do not employ the word "day." But they specify that when the final award of grace is meted out to the saints, then full retribution is publicly enforced upon the unjust. These declarations, therefore, entirely discountenance the theory that the saints will be raised and welcomed by their King at all, before the rising and public rejection of the wicked. And we see not how any thorough Biblical student can lay all these agreeing testimonies aside for the figurative and indistinct passage in Rev. 20:4-6.

2. The theory that the sainted dead will rise so many ages before the summons to the unrighteous, assigns no adequate reason for the delay in relation to the latter class.

While the spirits of men continue conscious, after leaving the body, and are blessed or wretched, according to the moral character they possess, and carry with them into the unseen world, as Christ taught in Luke 16:21-23-25, concerning the rich man and Lazarus, and as Peter also, in Acts 1:21, concerning Judas, "That he might go to his own place," and Paul in Phil. 1:21-23, when he said, "To depart and be with Christ is far better;" we are also taught that Christian attainments and fidelity while here will not receive their highest reward until Christ shall appear.

Some expectants of our Lord's speedy appearing, opine that from that hour, living men will be found here no more, that the present dispensation of mercy will then cease. And that while the sainted dead will all be raised and all living believers will be changed, all the ungodly will remain under the power of death until the close of the millennium. We inquire, Can the advocates of this view find in the Scriptures any reason, or assign any, for the long delay? And if this planet is to be purified and transformed into a fitting abode for the risen saints, and if our Redeemer is to have his royal mansion changed, and to return from the third heaven to our globe, prepared for his pavilion, how is it? Will the new paradise remain the charnel house of all the unjust dead, till they shall in the distant future be called forth? Or as many expect that the risen saints will find the golden city actually removed down here, and shall enjoy here the presence of their Saviour and King during the whole millennium, and all this blessedness alongside of struggling believers and unreclaimed sinners, some other point needs solution. Unless we are mistaken, some writers and commentators expect that probation will be prolonged through the centuries to living men among all nations; that sin and its attendants will be found here. But with Satan's power restrained, the actual presence of the glorious Son of God and all the risen saints will wonderfully draw living men to the Great Healer. And so transformations from sin to holiness will be more rapidly multiplied. Now, if all this is taught in the inspired predictions concerning Christ's future triumphs, so let it come to pass. His way is the right, and the best way. But it is relevant to inquire, what will be the prospects of the renovated myriads of those ages? Are they to continue in this life till those ages shall pass away? As yet, the good must depart to be with Christ. But if this theory is Scriptural, will the real saints, after ripening into holiness, at length be changed, and take their places along with the risen saints near the Redeemer? As this theory includes the actual continuance of all the unjust under the power of the grave during the ten centuries, they cannot be publicly arraigned and judged till those centuries shall have passed. We were contemplating the wide contrast our Lord has given us to this view, in his prediction of the great harvest. In his parable of the wheat and the tares, in Mat. 13th, he describes the householder as commanding his servants to gather first the tares. He explained that the wheat, the good seed, stands for the children of the kingdom; the tares represent the children of the wicked one, the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels. As in the parable, the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of the world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire. And not before, but "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." With such definite predictions as these, from the mouth of the Lord Jesus himself concerning the great adjudication, we ask if it be possible for a half harvest of the just to take place ten centuries before the final one? Does not Paul, on the contrary, confirm this parable, by declaring that those who know not God and obey not the gospel, shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power when he shall come to be glorified in his saints and to be admired in all them that believe in that day?—From a Pamphlet by Rev. Ezra Jones.

Rain and Religion.

"I remember," says Mrs. J. M. Sadd, "the day we started on horseback to attend a meeting of the presbytery, on Apple Creek, sixty miles distant. At twilight we came to the end of the road. We stopped to think what next. Not a house had been in sight for hours. Giving the horses uncontrolled bridles, we began to sing, "Our little barque on dangerous seas." After waiting a little time, the horses took the same direction, and soon came to a creek. Following this brought us to a mill and large farm house. Here we took shelter for the night. Mr. Sadd went with a young man to care for the horses, and inquired what care he had taken of his soul. He replied: 'I am in distress about that, and no one to tell me what to do.' O, how Mr. Sadd loved to point young men to Christ! At bedtime permission was given to read the Bible and pray. The miller was present, who said: 'I do not believe in religion; and my mill has been idle for weeks, but if you will pray for rain, and get it, I promise to believe with all my heart.' Mr. Sadd made no reply. Kneeling, he prayed for the family and neighborhood, and then began to plead for rain, saying: 'The destiny of a soul is to be decided to-night, by the giving or withholding of rain.' On rising, all retired for the night. Before morning we were awakened by heavy thunder and rain. The miller was not at breakfast, but was grinding at the mill. As we passed he came out and bowed himself to the earth. Mr. Sadd appointed a meeting there two weeks from the next Sabbath. No room was found large enough and they met in an orchard. After the sermon, an opportunity was given for any who would come to Jesus. Almost the entire congregation came forward, the miller among the number. In a few weeks a church was formed, which is to-day a living, working church. A Sunday school was organized, and at the close of thirty years it had never been suspended."

The Fisherman's Daughters.

Chapter I.

On a dark and stormy night, the loud dash of wind and rain against the window-panes awoke me, and I lay listening and trembling, as the old casements shook again. I dreaded to hear them, perhaps torn from their frames, and hurled into the room. I slept with my sister, and as my fears increased with the increasing storm, I at last put out my small hand, and patted her on the face to wake her. She was ten years older than myself, and I knew I should obtain that soothing and care I was at all times sure of from her heart and arm—as far at least as it lay in her power.

She, like myself, was however already awake. Poor Elsie! never now did the sound sleep of health close her weary eyes as in bygone days.

She told me she had been awake a long time. She had counted eleven, and twelve, and one, strokes of the large old clock on the stairs near our door. "Oh! she should have been so tired, and sorrowful," she said, "but for the soul-comforting thought, that our Father, our friend in heaven, never slumbered nor slept; his all-seeing eye was upon us, both in the darkness of night, and in the brightness of day; and his holy angels were now guarding around our beds."

I told her of my fears; and at that instant, the wind, as though bent on giving me just cause to be frightened, dashed with such a skriek against the house, I shrank close to Elsie's side, pressing my little face to her shoulder, while my heart beat violently.

Oh, what a night it was! How shrilly the wind whistled through the keyholes of every door down the deserted passages, through the bare rooms, in on one side and out at another; then rushing round, and over the house, it strove to carry away the roof in its course, and flew to the wood, whose great trees it shook and tumbled to and fro, like reeds.

Our house—in our, I include my father and mother, two brothers, a sister, and myself—lay in a valley, a tolerably high hill standing between it and the sea. This hill ought, it seemed, to have afforded good and secure shelter to the building thus cowering at its back, but so far from such being the case, I suspect we should have been considerably more peaceful without it; for the wind sweeping round the end point, gathered together its power within the deep valley, and so bore down with terrible strength upon our poor dwelling. On the side of the hill that rose between us and the land, grew a thick, high wood, the swinging of whose branches, and the rustling of the foliage, often made a sound as though the great sea lay at the back as well as at the front of our house.

Nevertheless, despite my fears, and its discomforts, each year, as it came and went, I loved more and more the wild old home that sheltered us. A great rambling, half ruinous building it was! with many long passages, and empty rooms; with ceilings, through some of which the light, the rain, and the wind made their way; while the flooring was in parts too insecure for heavier footing than my own.

Years gone by it had been a fine place—a manor house they said—in the time of Cromwell; but now, with the exception of four rooms—three bedrooms on the second floor, and a huge kitchen on the first—and which rooms, father and my brothers—two strong lads, at the time my story begins, of sixteen and seventeen years of age—kept in good repair, the big old building did not contain a space sufficiently unimpaired by time and neglect, to have sheltered any one.

The kitchen, a wide-spreading stone-floored apartment, served for every domestic purpose; and here, too, father, assisted by one or both my brothers, mended his nets, when the weather did not allow of his sitting on the bench outside the door to do it. He was a fisherman, and three parts of his time was spent on the rough waters.

It was in this wise my father became possessed of the old house. A neighboring farmer having bought most of the surrounding land upon which it stood, the owners included it in the bargain with the rest. It was useless to Mr. Rusk, the farmer, who liking and respecting father—he was not then married—readily agreed to sell him the building for a small sum of money—I forgot how much. He and mother made it up between them, for she had saved a good deal when in service, as a servant; and at the end of a year, with the help of his friends and the kind farmer, who gave him many things, he managed to get in excellent order the four rooms I told you of; and then he and mother were married, and came and lived in the old house, where their four children were born.

But now I must return to my account of the night storm, and to Elsie, against whom I was clinging in childish terror.

"Pray with me, dear!" she said very, very earnestly. I was well used to doing so, and repeated the words after her as clearly as I could—words that seemed to rush out of her soul, so intense were they in their tone of entreaty for the destitute, the friendless, the homeless, for those exposed to the pitiless storm that night: but oh! how thrilling became her soft voice, as she petitioned the great and merciful God in behalf of the poor seamen, and of all those who were even now, perchance, tossing helplessly on the desolate stormy waters.

Just then came another sound, mingling with the fierce roar of the winds, and of which, young though I was, I well understood the meaning; for those things were of frequent occurrence in this our wild sea-coast home.

Elsie started when she heard it, and stopped praying, and listened. Then it came again—and again—the booming sound of a gun from some vessel hurrying to destruction,—perhaps already struck on the rocks, with which the coast abounded.

Once more came the dismal appeal; then it ceased. To my young mind it was a voice imploring God and man to save them. "Oh Gatty, Gatty! they will all be lost! What can we do?—oh what can we do!" cried Elsie, in agony. "Oh that I were a man! that I could only walk even!"

Poor Elsie! for nearly a year she had lain on that bed. Her spine was badly hurt, the doctor said, and her sole chance of recovery, perhaps of living, was by an almost motionless existence for years to come,—six or seven probably, but he could not say for certain. And now, with me for her constant companion, and generally her only attendant (I was a strong child of my age), and with her one book, the Bible, and her needlework, the once active girl uncomplainingly bore her heavy affliction,—all the heavier because of that poverty which she knew obliged the father and brothers she so dearly loved, to continually risk their lives to keep poverty from our door, and which effort she was now so powerless to aid them in.

When in health, it was Elsie's delight to carry the fish to sell at the little market town eight miles off. To reach this in time she would leave home by four and five o'clock in summer mornings, always returning to gladden our parents' hearts with the sight of her empty basket (empty at least of fish), and her small calico bag for a purse, well filled with money,—principally pennies and halfpennies, to be sure, but nevertheless sufficient to meet our simple necessities, helped out as they were by the constant supply in our own house of fish, salted and fresh. But now there she lay,—day after day, night after night,—still doing all that lay in her weak power to help others; her one great and ceaseless comfort close to her right hand, and usually lying open at some particular text she was committing to her own memory.

While yet she was wringing her hands and crying out, "They would all be lost!" a violent knocking and banging came to the outer door, and a strong voice, that made itself heard above the storm, called loudly upon Miller, and Sam and Tom (our father and brothers), to get up quickly and come out.

Thereupon the window was hastily thrown up, and father asked what was wanting; for he had not heard the signal guns.

"A big vessel had run upon the rocks," they told him, "and they wanted hands to try and save those on board her; but if they were not quick——"

The wind carried away the remaining words. In a shortness of time which only those could employ who, living with the sight of death constantly staring themselves and others in the face, are forced to be prompt of thought and ready in action to save or to be saved, our brave father and brothers were dressed, and down, and out, standing, with many another poor fellow as daring as themselves, on the beach, with the sea before them—as Sam told us in the morning—looking like a boiling cauldron of ink and foam.

They were only able to distinguish the position of the doomed vessel by the light of a single lantern placed in her bows. She was wedged in between two rocks, but not with sufficient firmness to prevent her being knocked to and fro by the fierce wind and waves, the movements being shown by the light, and which knocking about would, they knew, speedily break her to pi eces.

"Let us pray again, dear," sobbed Elsie, "and for father and brothers. Oh dear, dear father! God help and preserve thee!" And again I repeated the earnest prayer after her.

Then, having lit the lamp, Elsie took her Bible, and with a trembling hand found those texts which she and I learned by heart; and though years have passed since that night, they still dwell in my memory, fresh and clear as at that hour, when I lay watching her pale, sorrowfully resigned face in the lamplight, as it bent over the little well-worn Bible, which father had given her five years before, when she was strong and healthy as I was now.

But I must tell you the beautiful texts we learned that night. These they were:

"I have called upon thee, for thou wilt hear me, O God: incline thine ear to me and hear my prayer."

"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble; therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; and though the water thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof."

Just as we had learned them I fell asleep, and did not wake again until father and brothers came back, three hours after the time they went away; and father opened the door to speak a word of comfort to Elsie. He always did so on like occasions. He knew she would be sleepless until his return—praying, watching, and waiting for him.

LESSON XI—March 16, 1879.—DELIGHT IN GOD'S HOUSE.

SCRIPTURE.—Psalms 84: 1-12.

1 How amiable are thy tabernacles, O
Lord of hosts!
2 My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth
For the courts of the Lord: my heart and my flesh crieth out
For the living God.
3 Yea, the sparrow hath found an house,
And the swallow a nest for herself where she may lay her young,
Even thine altars, O Lord of hosts,
My King, and my God.
4 Blessed are they that dwell in thy house:
They will be still praising thee. Selah.
5 Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee;
In whose heart are the ways of them.
6 Who passing through the valley of
Baca make it a well;
The rain also filleth the pools.
7 They go from strength to strength,
Every one of them in Zion appeareth before God.
8 O Lord God of hosts hear my prayer:
Give ear, O God of Jacob. Selah.
9 Behold, O God our shield,
And look upon the face of thine anointed.
10 For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand.
I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God,
Than to dwell in the tents of wickedness.
11 For the Lord God is a sun and shield:
The Lord will give grace and glory:
No good thing will he withhold
From them that walk uprightly.
12 O Lord of hosts,
Blessed is the man that trusteth in thee.

NOTES.

[From the Scholar's Hand-Book.]

"Tabernacle." The portable structure made in the wilderness, by Jehovah's command, as the place of worship and sacrifice, for his people, Ex. 25 and 26. It contained the ark, the altar of incense, etc. After David made Jerusalem his capital, the ark was removed thither, and a new tabernacle erected, 2 Sam. 6: 17; 1 Chron. 15: 1. Hence its name was sometimes applied, at a later period, to the Temple which superceded it; and in a general sense it denotes the place of Jehovah's worship.

"Sparrow." The Hebrew word occurs upwards of forty times in the Old Testament. In all passages excepting two it is translated indifferently "bird," or "fowl," and is applied to a large variety of small birds.

"Swallow." Birds of the swallow tribe are very numerous in Palestine. They select, especially, the walls of cities, and the towers of churches and mosques, for their nesting-places. Tristram noted great numbers of them in the temple enclosure at Jerusalem, and they are continually skimming about the mosque of Omar.

"Valley of Baca." Some have understood this to refer to some peculiarly barren valley, through which pilgrims passed on their way to Jerusalem. It signifies "the valley of balsams," or "of tears." Most commentators take the latter signification, and understand it figuratively, as meaning any "valley of weeping," or "vale of tears."

[From International Quarterly.]

DWELL IN THY HOUSE—A friend of mine told me once that when he went to a boarding-house he could always tell who the boarders were, for they never alluded to family matters, but sat down to the table and talked of outside matters; but when the son came, he would go into the sitting-room to see if there were letters, and inquire after the family, and show in many ways his interest in the household. It doesn't take five minutes to tell that he is not a boarder, and that the others are. And so it is with the church of God. You see these boarders in church every Sunday morning, but they don't take any interest; they come to criticise. And that is about all that constitutes a Christian now a days. They are boarders in the house of God; and we have got too many boarders.—D. L. Moody.

STILL PRAISING THEE.—At a camp-meeting, last summer, one man remarked that for years he had lived in Grumble Corner, but had lately moved up on to Thanksgiving Street, and he found the air and the food much better. Those who dwell in God's house will find that house always to be on Thanksgiving Street.—P.

MARGINAL REFERENCES.

In whose house did David desire to dwell all his days? In what was the Psalmist like a hart? Who takes care of the sparrows? For what did Paul say he would glory in his infirmities? Who stood before Moses when he smote the rock in Horeb? How can one have a well of water always at hand? Whose path is always growing brighter? To whom did the Lord say he was he was a shield? How long shall they bring forth fruit who are planted in the Lord's house? As what piece of armor is God to them that walk uprightly?

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

Who is compared to a swallow on the top of a house? What Biblical comparisons with a swallow are there for our encouragement? What prophet ordered pools to be dug in a dry time, which filled with water by night? With how many kinds of weapons or pieces of armor can you find that God is compared in the Bible? Where was the tabernacle stationed last; and what became of it finally? In what sense was Jesus a tabernacle? What things now exist, or are to exist, which the Bible speaks of as tabernacles? In what passages is Jesus Christ unmistakably compared to the sun? In what passage is God said to supply the place of the sun? What divine person is called a morning star, and in what book of the Bible?

OUTLINE.

1. The preciousness of church privileges. Not their costliness or beauty, but their relation to Jehovah, constitutes their charm. Too many go to "hear" the pastor—too few to meet with Jehovah of hosts. The "something else wanted" is the Lord's presence.

2. The present blessing. A heart prepared to welcome God is the heart he will visit. The "valley of tears" becomes to such a place of blessing.

3. The future gain. True hope is founded on what God is. The benefit to be expected from worship is very great. Even a brief stay in God's house, and the lowliest places in it, are better than the best joys and honors of the haunts of wickedness.

PRACTICAL TEACHINGS.

1. God has given us ordinances with fuller light than had the Hebrews, and a larger share in the worship.

2. God's house ought to be dear to us, especially for his own presence.

3. In no way are men so strengthened as by waiting upon God in the way in which he would have them. For

4. He gives present and eternal good. The sorrows of life he turns into wise and gracious discipline, and the "grace" promised fits for "glory" hereafter.

5. The wants in men are only met in the "fullness of God." We need light. He is a sun (this idea can be illustrated widely), protection, a shield.

6. All this fullness is in Christ and for us. (See Eph. 3: 16-19; Phil. 3: 15; 4: 12, 13, 19; Col. 2: 9.)

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Congregational church, Hamilton, Miss., August 25th, 1878.

Pleasant Ridge Congregational church, Sanford Co., Ala., September, 1878.

New Hope Methodist church, Lowndes Co., Miss., October, 1878.

Congregational church, College Springs, Iowa, Dec. 7, 1878.

College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill., Jan. 4, 1879.

First Congregational Church, Leland, Mich.

—Eight were received on profession into the fellowship of the College church at Wheaton, last Sabbath, two being daughters of Bro. J. P. Stoddard. Another young lady who had been accepted by the church, was prevented from uniting at this time because of sickness. In the evening Mr. L. DeWolf followed Prof. Blanchard's sermon by a deeply interesting statement of his experience and reformation. He has been a resident of Wheaton for twenty-four years, and has been known of late years as a defender and patron of the saloons. He has lately by the grace of God been rescued from destruction and is now working for the salvation of others. He is a fluent speaker and his efforts in temperance conventions during the past few weeks are mentioned as very successful.

—The Illinois State Agent is at present providentially engaged in a revival in the western part of Whiteside county. God is doing a good work there in spite of the opposition of worldly professors and the Masonic fraternity.

CHURCH OF GOD.

—The Herald of Freedom says of the movement against Freemasonry in this body:

"In regard to the present condition of the new Eldership and the reform movement, it is increasing both in members and spirituality; and to insure more success, we have only to live at the feet of the Master, be obedient children, live holy lives, and God will continue to bless us. To this end let us live."

—Holiness meetings begun in Burlington, Iowa in December by Bro. E. P. Kyle have been blessed in the conversion of a number and the sanctification of others. In that city over half a hundred are reported who trust that love and faith have been perfected by the Holy Ghost.

CONGREGATIONAL.

"The First church, Oberlin, is issuing a new manual, which will contain its constitution, confession of faith, standing rules, etc., and list of members. Its constitution provides that any one who has served as deacon for the full term of three years shall be ineligible for re election until a year from the expiration of such term of office. One of the standing rules requires the name of any member absent for three years without reporting himself, to be stricken from the rolls. Another standing rule, which would revolutionize church business meetings if enforced in all churches, makes it the duty of all members "to attend all the meetings of the church for devotion or business." With the view of enlisting every member of the church in some form of Christian activity, the town is divided into ten sections. The members living in each section annually nominate by ballot a leader, and these ten leaders constitute the church board of Christian work, of which the pastor is ex officio president. This board looks after the membership, and is charged with the duty of enlisting each one in some form of work, sustaining neighborhood prayer-meetings, looking after the non-church goers, etc. During the forty-four years of its history this famous church—for twenty-six years under the pastorate, or, to be strictly exact, under the preacherate, of Rev. C. G. Finney—has had five thousand different members. The present number of communicants is about 560. It has a most excellent pastor in Rev. James Brand."

The above, from the Advance, omits to mention the very important action taken by this pioneer reform church on secret orders, entirely excluding them from its communion.

—It is said of Rev. W. H. Brewster, former pastor of the College church, Wheaton, now of Blue Island, Ill., that he has preached forty-six years, taken four vacations, and was never idle a Sabbath for want of a place, and never sought one.

FREE BAPTIST.

—An interesting and instructive session of the Rochester Q. M. and Ministers and Layman's Institute was held with the Free Baptist church at E. Hamlin, N. Y., Feb. 18-21. The Institute was called to order by the clerk, Rev. C. A. Hilton, Tuesday evening, Feb. 18. Rev. J. M. Crandall was chosen Moderator. The opening sermon for criticism was preached by Rev. C. B. Hart of E. Penfield. It was commended more than criticised. Papers were read on the "Mode of Baptism," by Rev. J. M. Crandall; "Biblical Authority for the Sabbath," by Rev. Isaac Hyatt; "First Resurrection," by Rev. C. A. Hilton; "Christ in the Believer," by Rev. L. A. Crandall; "Exegesis of John 8: 9," by Rev. J. B. Randall.

Wednesday P. M. at 1 1-2 o'clock, the Quarterly Meeting assembled. Opening sermon by Rev. J. M. Crandall. Rev. Isaac Hyatt was elected Moderator. Able sermons were preached by Revs. Hart, Randall, Hilton, A. Whitcher and L. A. Crandall. The social meetings were interesting and refreshing to the saints.

GERMAN BAPTIST.

—H. R. Holsinger, a former employe in this office, associated with J. W. Beer, has established a new paper at Berlin, Pa., the Progressive Christian, for the advocacy of the principles of the Brethren or "Tunker" church. Their efforts are directed to the introduction of more liberal ideas into that body, and their spirited sheet will doubtless have much influence in this direction. It is published weekly at $1.00 per year. Both the editors have been more or less interested in our reform work, with the Brethren church in general; both have contributed to the Cynosure, and Mr. Holsinger has suffered personally and pecuniarily for his opposition to the lodge. He met with much opposition in his efforts among the Brethren for the introduction of greater facilities or intelligence and enlarged views of Christian activity. This had an unfavorable influence on his religious convictions for a time and nearly made him an infidel. We are glad to mark evidences of returning faith in Christianity and hope that this new paper may reflect the pure light of God's Word upon the minds of this large body of believers.

—The Christian Pilgrim gives an instance of earnest evangelical work in one of the Brethren preachers: J. W. Smouse of Oakland, Pa., during 1878 traveled one thousand miles, seven hundred and forty-six on horse back, and preached one hundred and twenty-two discourses and had twenty-one accessions to the church.

FRIENDS.

—By special appointment of the Iowa meeting, Lawrie Tatum of Springvale, Iowa, will visit the Indian agencies now under the Friend's management to help and encourage all who may need, both whites and Indians. His work will not be altogether of a temporal nature, but he will minister to the religious necessities also. Friend Tatum has long been engaged in the Indian work, his last appointment being at Fort Sill, Indian Territory.

—Stanley Pumphrey, a prominent minister of the Society from England, attended Friends' meeting in this city on Twenty-sixth street, between Indiana and Prairie avenues, on First Day (Sunday) both morning and evening.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—Holiness meetings at Silver Lake and Warsaw, Indiana, were visited with the power of the Holy Spirit and large numbers received the blessing of his presence.

—Rev. I. C. Weidler of Boiling Springs, Pa., vice-president of the U. B. Holiness Association, has been encouraged by revivals at two of his preaching places.

—Rev. B. G. Huber of Shippensburg Pa., reports thirty conversions at Cleversburg and an excellent revival progressing at Shippensburg, at which about a dozen have professed conversion and others are at the altar. Bro. Huber is managing editor and publisher of the Highway of Holiness.

—The Highway of Holiness publishes the remarkable experience of Mrs. W. H. Millar, wife of a U. B minister at Cortland, Ohio. She was for four or five years a sufferer from a severe cough, and finally abandoned medical treatment and prepared to remove to Colorado as a last resort. Before the preparations were completed she was brought to consider the power of God to heal. The health of her body and the sanctification of her soul were the burden of her prayers. They were heard and in the midst of a wonderful and powerful manifestation of the Divine presence disease was banished, and for a year and a half she has been in good health. Her narration of these events are given in a straight-forward manner which impresses the reader with its truthfulness.

—Philomath College has been enjoying a gracious revival. Bishop Castle is located there and has been engaged in special work.

FREE METHODIST.

—A correspondent writes that a great blessing is attending the labors of Rev. A. F. Ferris at Freeport, Illinois. He himself writes to the Free Methodist: "The scene beggars description. Sometimes we have to dismiss the congregation three or four times before we can clear the church. The city is in a fever of excitement and the people crowd the church until there is not standing room, and then many go away."

—Bro. E. C. Best reports a new society organized at Atkinson, Henry county, Illinois, of fifteen members.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The standing committee of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod on National Reform, which was instructed to "watch passing events and, in any emergency requiring action, to act in the name and by the authority of Synod in the premises," has forwarded to President Hayes an able letter through their chairman, J. C. K. Milligan of New York, asking him to veto the Chinese bill, since in their judgment it is "in direct antagonism with the law of the great Jehovah the Supreme Ruler of Nations;" "adverse to the spirit of the Gospel of Christ;" and "an admitted violation of solemn treaty stipulations."

MENNONITE.

—The Gospel Banner, the organ of the United Mennonites, is published at Goshen, Ind., and is conducted under the supervision of the United States and Canada conferences. Its platform is thus given:

"Devoted to the dissemination of Gospel truth, vital godliness and experimental and practical religion. Its most prominent theme shall be, "Holiness to the Lord." Its leading or characteristic features, separation from the world in all departments of life; strict submission and obedience to all God's ordinances and commandments, and the unity of the church of Jesus Christ, upon Gospel principles." The peculiar principles maintained by this body of believers and by the Banner are: "Non-resistance; non swearing of oaths; anti-secrecy; anti-rum and tobacco; adult baptism; open communion and feet washing."

—At Newbridge province of Ontario, a four weeks' meeting led by Menno Bowman was visited by the power of God, the house was crowded with people for miles about. Some fifty were converted, among them were some of the worst characters in the neighborhood.

—The Mennonite churches are divided, the branches being known as United and Evangelical. There is a movement to unite the two the prospects of which are said to be favorable.

News of the Week.

--Pres. Hayes vetoed the Chinese bill last Saturday.

—The academy building at Lake Forest, a short distance north of this city was burned to the ground last Saturday. The fire started in the attic and was discovered while students and professors were at dinner. Part of the furniture only was saved. The building was insured for more probably, than it was worth.

--Field, Leiter & Co., the great dry goods house of this city have purchased the new building just erected on the site formerly occupied by their retail store, burned out eighteen months ago. They offered five hundred thousand dollars, but that was not accepted. Another dry goods firm leased the property and then Field, Leiter & Co. offered $650,000 which was accepted. They have also paid the rival firm $100,000 in cash to give up their lease. The store is probably one of the very finest of its kind in the country, if not in the world, and is built to be fire proof. The post-office now occupies the basement.

—Congress has appropriated a sum considered sufficient to complete the new government building in this city which has been already five or six years in construction. A part of the building will immediately be fitted up for the post-office.

—A Vienna dispatch says mention is made of a new Russian circular to the powers calling their attention to the treaty of Berlin. In the circular, it is said, Russia suggests that the powers devise means to obviate the difficulties likely to arise from the clause permitting the Turks to occupy the Balkans, and urges that a definite government for Roumelia be established before Russian evacuation. Russia also points to the necessity of hastening the settlement of the frontiers of the Dobrudscha, and refers to other matters still in controversy. The correspondent says if the circular is intended to hasten a settlement of the pending questions, it is likely to be successful, but if intended to be an excuse for the prolongation of Russian occupation, scarcely a single power will accept the excuse.

—The Mayor of Sheffield, England, states that in one district in that town there are 4,000 persons destitute and 400 families actually starving. The relief fund, except about £800, has been expended.

—A dispatch from Vienna states that an avalanche, near Marburg, killed twenty-one persons and destroyed nine houses.

—A great storm swept over Italy and southern France last week. The reports state that the whole coast was strewn with wrecks, and at many ports small craft were blown out to sea and lost. The new quay at Posilippo was almost entirely destroyed. In the interior the storm was equally violent. At Puagginolo, near Siena, the campanile of the church was blown down while the people were at mass, killing two persons, and wounding twenty-four. A similar catastrophe occurred at Aontauro, where the vault of the church yielded to the storm and killed the priest celebrating mass, and injured a number of the congregation. At Rome the force of the wind was unparalled. All the windows of monastery of Montealle Croci were destroyed, and a portion of the base of Michael Angelo's statue of David was swept off.

—On the French slopes of the Eastern Pyrenees there is more snow than the oldest inhabitant remembers. Between Bengo Mahame and Mount Louis horseback is the only means of communication. Floods are apprehended in the valleys if spring should set in suddenly. The inundations in the southeast are subsiding, but the foundations of houses have been so undermined that around Agentown, in the Department Liet-et-Garonne, quite a panic prevails. At Coulommiers, in the Department Seine-et-Marne, the floods caused a land slip.

—At about 5:45 Sunday morning a fire commenced in Reno, Nevada, in some wooden buildings at the west end of the business streets, back of the Masonic block. A fearful gale was blowing from the west at the time, and before water could be got on it the fire was beyond control. The flames leaped from house to house and from block to block with lightning rapidity. The panic-stricken, half-clothed people caught a handful of the most valuable articles and left all else to the demon of destruction. The firemen were helpless. The fierceness of the wind and the intensity of the heat rendered it almost impossible to get close enough to do any good. In three hours all the business part of the town was in ashes. Two or three of the Central Pacific trains, including a lightning train, were destroyed. The loss, as near as can be ascertained at this time, is about $1,000,000, with only about $150,000 insurance. Five lives are known to be lost, as far as heard from.

—The German Catholic papers in Cincinnati declare that the financial affairs of Archbishop Purcell have reached a point where a new course must be taken. The Abend Post places the indebtedness at $6,000,000. A creditor has brought suit to recover his money, and should other suits follow, the Volksfreund concludes that there is hardly anything left for the Archbishop to do but to make an assignment.

—The death of Shere Ali, Ameer of Afghanistan, is officially announced by Yakoob Khan, his successor. This relieves Russia of some embarrassment, and possibly opens the way for compromise with England. Yakoob is credited with considerable military ability, and has been reported friendly to England. The Russian commanders on the frontier believe that Yakoob will carry out the plans of his father.

Law.

To any readers of the Cynosure having law business in Chicago, we would recommend the firm of HECKMAN & BLANCHARD, who will attend promptly and carefully to Foreclosures, Collections, Examining Titles, Drawing Wills, Deeds and other legal instruments, and all legal matters in State or Federal courts. Chicago interests of parties residing in any part of the United States carefully seen to. Call or address Heckman & Blanchard, office 23, 170 State St., Chicago, Ill.

SHORTHORN CATTLE.—The breeds of cattle like everything else, run back into mystery; but within human experience, it is a curious and profitable study. A practiced eye can detect traces of several distinct breeds of animals in almost every ordinary herd. The Shorthorns, unlike the Devons, are a composite breed, almost wholly the result of culture from the Collinses, 250 to 200 years ago. Hence their diversity, while in an original breed, each individual is an exact likeness of every other as the antelope, deer, buffalo, etc., where each is a copy of every other. This gives the Shorthorns pre-eminence over every other kind of cattle, as they have been brought by crossing to contain every useful quality so far as breeding can do it. But this makes them liable to lose their peculiar traits unless handled with care. If any of our readers wish to obtain any of this interesting stock, they can obtain some at a bargain by writing to Mr. C. N. Wood of Sycamore, Ill., who has fifteen high grade young cows and three young thoroughbred bulls to dispose of. His father, Henry Wood, Esq., was a delegate and attended the second Pittsburgh Convention, of the National Christian Association.

PLATFORM OF THE AMERICAN PARTY.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—To an interviewer from one of the Chicago papers General J. C. Fremont lately gave the following opinion on Hayes and Grant:

"The next election is a very important one, and I could not predict the result. You say that it is claimed that the Hayes administration has weakened the party. Now I think President Hayes means well. The trouble is the people are not acquainted with him. If they were, they would like him better. In the case of General Grant, he was known personally to perhaps half a million of soldiers. I have always found that officers and men who have served together are always attached to each other. Give a man 500,000 friends in this country and you see what strength he may wield if he wishes to take advantage of it."

Home and Farm.

FIFTEEN FOLLIES.

First. To think that the more a man eats the fatter and stronger he will become.

Second. To believe the more hours children study at school, the faster they learn.

Third. To conclude that, if exercise is healthful, the more violent or exhaustive it is the more good is done.

Fourth. To imagine that every hour taken from sleep is an hour gained.

Fifth. To act on the presumption that the smallest room in the house is large enough to sleep in.

Sixth. To argue that whatever remedy causes one to feel immediately better is "good for" the system without regard to more ulterior effects.

Seventh. To commit an act which is felt in itself to be prejudicial, hoping that somehow or other it may be done in your case with impunity.

Eighth. To advise another to take a remedy which you have tried on yourself, without making special inquiry whether the conditions are alike.

Ninth. To eat without an appetite, or to continue to eat after it has been satisfied, merely to gratify the taste.

Tenth. To eat a hearty supper for the pleasure experienced during the brief time it is passing down the throat, at the expense of a whole night of disturbed sleep, and a weary waking in the morning.

Eleventh. To remove a portion of the covering immediately after exercise, when the most stupid drayman in New York knows that if he does not put a cover on his horse the moment he ceases to work in winter, he will lose him in a few days by pneumonia.

Twelfth. To contend that because the dirtiest children in the street or highway are hearty or healthy, therefore it is healthy to be dirty; forgetting that continuous daily exposure to the pure out-door air in joyous, unconstrained activities is such a powerful agency for health that those who live thus are well in spite of rags and filth.

Thirteenth. To presume to repeat later in life, without injury, the indiscretions, exposures and intemperance which in the flush of youth were practiced with impunity.

Fourteenth. To believe that warm air is necessarily impure, or that pure cold air is necessarily more healthy than the confined air of a crowded vehicle. The latter at most can only cause nausea, while entering a conveyance after walking briskly and lowering a window will, by exposing to a draft, give a cold infallibly, or an attack of pleurisy or pneumonia, which will cause weeks and months of suffering, if not actual death within four days.

Fifteenth. To "remember the Sabbath day" by working harder and later on Saturday than any other day in the week, with a view of sleeping late next morning and staying at home all day to rest, conscience being quieted by the plea of not feeling very well.—Hall.

A SEVERE LESSON:—Let everyone profit by this severe lesson. A man at Fulton, N. Y., recently laid his finger on the table in front of a buzz saw to feel the momentum of the air. The saw was going so fast that the teeth could not be seen. His finger was taken off. While he was looking at it the fireman came up with the question: "How did you do it?" "Why I put my finger down so," answered he, placing the other forefinger, as he thought, well away from the teeth. To his horror the saw took off that one, too, at the second joint.

—A pair of common cowhide boots may be made waterproof after the method of the New England fisherman. These people, exposed to all weathers, have for a century used the following compound: Tallow, 4 oz.; rosin and beeswax, 1 oz. each; melt together, then stir in neatsfoot oil, equal in bulk to the melted articles. The boots are warmed before a fire and this composition is rubbed into the leather, soles and uppers, by means of a rag. Two applications will make the leather quite water proof.—*Am. Every Freemason a Blasphemer.

As proved by the Highest Masonic Authority.

Red Clover Tea

A Cure for All Blood Diseases.

I am seventy years of age, am in good health for one of my years. Fourteen years since I had Scirrhus Cancer. Tea made from Red Clover Blossoms cured me. I have advised its use in many bad cases of Salt Rheum and it has proved a success. By permission I refer to Capt. David H. Small, No. 44 Winchester Ave., Chicago, who was cured by the use of clover tea of a cancer in the stomach after being pronounced incurable by physicians. I will gladly impart all the information in my power, and no charge, when a stamp is sent. I have the clover picked in full bloom and cured the same day with the Alden Dryer. It is not possible to have it better; also the Extract, equally good.

Topics of the Time.

Last Friday the speculators on the Chicago Board of Trade were thrown into the wildest commotion by the report that the agents of a New York broker were instructed to sell three million bushels of wheat for April delivery. The picture of five hundred men yelling, screaming, running about and frantically gesticulating was a scene for a Swift to satirize. After all the dispatch ordering the sale was found to be bogus, and the Chicago agent had to buy back the millions of bushels he had sold, or fail. By sharp management he deceived the holders of grain and saved himself the next day; but meanwhile numerous small dealers were ruined. The transaction well displays the nature of a broker's life in all its tempestuousness; and one of our leading dailies well says of the business on the Board, "There is nothing surpassing it in any gambling room in the world."

The committee appointed by the Senate early in the late session to investigate election frauds in Louisiana and South Carolina, made a report which was almost lost sight of in the hurry of the last hours of Congress. The enormous frauds by means of tissue ballots in the latter State was proved by numerous witnesses, and there was a repetition of the bloody stories from Louisana which have almost stunned us into indifference. Bishop Haven in a recent letter says truly that if such atrocities had been perpetrated by the Indians "their settlements would have been ravaged by fire and sword" by United States troops. Louisiana politicians have eloquent members of Congress to defend them and that makes the difference. The Bishop gives an instance under his own observation at Shreveport: "The very night I was there a boat was coming up the Red River bearing witnesses to testify in a United States Court concerning the outrages that had occurred in that vicinity. It landed ostensibly for trade or passengers. It was boarded ostensibly by officers of the State; two witnesses were taken off, and have never been heard of since. They will never be until the grave shall give up its dead and the great day of His wrath is come. Such is the protection the mighty majesty of the United States gives her witnesses. In Mississippi," he says again, "there is peace, so-called; but any sign of an attempt to exercise political rights would meet with direst vengeance."

The Roman Catholic Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati, was banker for his followers without the usual checks of law. With his brother he received and invested, and carried on a savings institution, even to blundering accounts and bad management. It was weeks ago that his financial failure was announced, and he turned over property estimated at $1,000,000 to secure the creditors. But the filing of claims has grown into the neighborhood of four millions and numerous suits have already been entered against him. The hierarchy are in consternation and have proposed amending the laws of Ohio to allow a lottery to be held for the relief of the aged Archbishop! Appeals have been made to the New York churches, but they are near the limit of endurance with their own burdens, for the support of prelates and the building of cathedrals. The German churches of Cincinnati are muttering a demand for a full statement of the archbishop's affairs before subscribing for his aid. The Irish, on the other hand, with the zeal of superstition and impetuosity of their race, submit to be taxed by their priests without complaint. The lottery scheme is too shameless to be undertaken; and as this is an affair which concerns the honor of the Catholic hierarchy of the country, the loss will probably be made up by a general taxation.

Over two years ago at the first exhibition of Masonry in Marshalltown, Iowa, an diabolical attempt was made to stampede the audience and fire the building with a gas explosion, the main pipe having been opened in the cellar and the gas escaping into the building. Since that time the lodge has been diligently reporting that three Masons were killed at that time. The facts are briefly, that not long afterward the superintendent of the gas works was engaged on the Sabbath with two of his men in the works. Failing to appear at the proper time, search was made and all three were found smothered with gas, and the coroner's verdict so stated. The superintendent was a high Mason, and on the day following his death it was remarked to a leading Anti-mason of the city by one who did not sympathize with his views: "I suppose the man who turned the gas off that night has gone to his long home;" and this expression has been frequently repeated on the streets. Surely judgment sometimes follows quickly.

DELIVERANCE AND SERVICE.

BY REV. GEO. R. MILTON.

The Holy Ghost speaking by the mouth of Zachariah, said: "That He would grant unto us that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve Him without fear in holiness and righteousness before Him all the days of our life." (Luke 2: 74, 75.) These words are pregnant with meaning, and full of comfort and joy to the soul of him who has an eye to see and an ear to hear.

Man's plan is, do good that you may be saved. God's plan is, be saved that you may do good. Man's plan is, service first and salvation afterwards. God's plan is, salvation first and service afterwards. Man's plan is, to earn redemption by good works. God's plan is, to redeem man first that he may serve afterwards by doing good works. If I am taken captive and bound hand and foot by my enemy, how can I while thus captured and bound serve my lawful and true master? Service under such conditions is impossible. Yet this is just what men—some men—are trying to do. While the servants of sin, while in bondage to the world, the flesh and the devil, they try to serve the living God. And with every setting sin they have to write upon the last page of the day's history—failure! And this is so not merely once or twice, but every day in the year. If the twenty volumes of the last twenty years of such a life should be carefully and accurately kept, upon the last page of the history of each day would be found the same word—failure. It cannot be otherwise with every one who endeavors to do service for one Master while held in bondage by another. This the dear Father above knows; and so before demanding service of us, comes and smites asunder the chains that bind us and sets us free and then demands our service. It is that he delivers us out of the hand of our enemies that we may serve him, etc., and not we that serve him that he may deliver us.

The children of Israel were not commanded to serve God in Egypt. "Let my people go that they may serve me," said God to Pharaoh seven times by the lips of his servant Moses. Pharaoh is a fair type of Satan, and Egypt is a fair type of the world; and no one can serve the Lord while a captive of the one making the devil's bricks in the other. Before we can serve God with joy and liberty of heart and soul; before we shall take pleasure in the Word of God, loving it "above gold, yea, above fine gold;" before the family altar will become a delight, and the prayer-meeting a place of communion of souls with the infinite and the eternal, we must have salvation, we must have redemption; in other words we must know that we are saved and delivered out of the hand of our enemy.

We are persuaded that the chief reason for so many lips being closed in the prayer-meetings, and so many tongues silent during the hours of the day, that should be speaking for the glory of God, is that they are trying to serve God in the land of bondage. They have not yet been completely delivered from the service of Satan, and hence find it difficult to serve God. It is more than possible that very many such have never felt their deep need of a Saviour. It is more than possible that very many such have never fel their utter helplessness and their absolute dependence upon the Son of God for all spiritual help and for all spiritual growth. Before any soul will have full deliverance and full liberty to serve God without fear, "in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of his life," he must have not merely a theory about it, but a feeling of utter helplessness and absolute dependence upon the divine being for deliverance. He must have some such feeling as a man overboard in mid ocean would have; an utter inability to save himself, and unless help came from without he is lost. Before he will appreciate Christ as a Saviour and a refuge, he must realize his danger and condition out of Christ. He must realize that as soon as he leaves the refuge that God has provided for him, he is treated as the Union soldiers are said to have been by the Confederates when they crossed the "dead line" at Andersonville, viz., shot at. Thus does Satan shoot at, wound and capture us as soon as we leave the bosom of Christ. When we realize this truth, we shall cling all the more closely and all the more lovingly to him who is our refuge. We shall then be in a condition to look at him and to him alone for deliverance. As soon as we look to Christ and to Christ alone for help, trusting all to him, body, soul and spirit, quick as a flash from the skies, deliverance comes, and we are saved.

While we thus continue to feel our entire dependence upon Christ and look to him, and to him alone, to fight our spiritual battle without, and by his Holy Spirit to purify us within, taking him to be our "wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption," we are kept by the power of God and the evil one touches us not.

In this state—and it is the privilege of every child of God to be in it—service for God is delightful beyond the power of language to express. "Now it is no longer I, but Christ. I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." (Gal. 2:20.)

Masons and Odd-fellows Excepted.

BY C. W. KOHR.

It is becoming a very common matter for legislatures to exempt the leading secret societies from certain requirements that are imposed on individuals and other corporations. A very short time ago, Bro. Stoddard reported such a case from Indiana. This latest attempt at favoritism by the people's representatives comes from Columbus, Ohio. The State legislature has been in session some time. (And here I remark in passing that a goodly number of these honorable (?) men have been "retreating" with their wives at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home, Xenia, boarding at the expense of the State. This institution lately burned down, and "Like unto rats they leave the burning crib.") One of these men, Mr. Dodd, has introduced a bill into the House, entitled a "Bill to Define Life Insurance in Ohio," the object of which is to wipe out of existence the various mutual life associations and beneficial societies of the State and make a monopoly for the "Life Insurance Company of Ohio," or some Eastern "old line" company.

My object is not to discuss the merits of the bill, but to call attention to the latter clause of Sec. 1, which reads: "Provided that the secret benevolent organizations known as Masons and Odd-fellows shall be exempt from the provisions of this act." I await with great anxiety the action regarding this bill. Men call us fanatics when we say that Masonry controls our courts and legislatures. Let this bill pass and become a law and the thousands of officers and policy holders of the various mutual life associations doing business in Ohio will open their eyes to the fact that Masonry and Odd-fellowship are protected by our law-makers. If our people cannot discern this fact without such a calamity coming upon them as the passage of this bill will bring upon every policy-holder of such an organization, I say, Let it come.

I agree with Bro. Stoddard that the sooner these things come to pass, the sooner our cause will triumph. Whenever this special legislation for the fraternities is no longer hid, the masses will then arise and blot out such a system of anarchy and despotism. Men laugh at us, when we tell them this is no longer a government of the people, but that it is controlled by a secret empire. Need we seek for any stronger evidence of this than such bold effrontery as this?

The editor of the Columbus paper, the Commonwealth, invites correspondence from the other secret benevolent associations of the State, as well as those not secret, looking toward some united effort to defeat this bill. Would it not be far better in order to eradicate such acts, to go to their source and unite upon some effort to pull down the stronghold of such legislation? The Commonwealth is a prohibition paper, and as such is first-class, and the principles it advocates regarding the liquor traffic are the only true and correct ones; and now why not work upon the same principles for the overthrow of another of Satan's devices? He ought to be just as eager to abolish the source of such unjust favoritism, as to prohibit the source of intemperance.

Oh, that the people may wake up and with the ballot drive out this monster from our legislative halls.

Canal Dover, O.

An Experience.

In the year of our Lord 1823, Nov. 10th, I made application by petition in due form to become a candidate for the mysteries of Masonry to a Masonic lodge meeting in the village of Clinton, Oneida county, New York; Theo. Woodruff being Master, Abnah Howe being Senior Deacon. January 14, 1824, I was initiated in due form an Entered Apprentice Mason. Feb. 11, 1824, I was passed in due form to the degree of Fellow Craft Mason. March 10, 1824, in Hanover village, Oneida county, New York, same lodge (removed), I was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason.

At only six lodge "communications" save the initiation, passing and raising have I ever been present.

April 16, 1824, by courtesy, being a Master Mason, I attended some kind of a meeting of an "Encampment" at Utica, Oneida county, New York. June 24, 1824, as a Mason I took a part in a celebration of "St. John's day" in Waterville, Oneida county, N. Y. Feb. 8, 1825, I was present at the meeting of Tavis Lodge, No. 348. This was the last time that I have been inside of a lodge.

My father was a Mason and from my earliest recollections and all along the pathway of childhood and youth up to manhood, hearing Masonry extolled by those that I regarded as men of sense and knowledge, I had it well established in my mind that when I attained my majority I would be a Mason. Having reached this period and having a friend some few years my senior who was an enthusiastic Freemason, with whom I had repeated interviews on the subject, his enconiums and glowing statements of its superlative value with my preconceived opinion of its excellence induced me to forward my petition, which was granted. I moved forward and having obtained all the light of the first degree it was but twilight to me. But receiving the assurance that the by and by would dissolve it, I concluded to "follow my leader and fear no danger."

I passed to the second degree traveling "from the west to the east in search of more light;" but found it not, in truth I found disgust taking possession of my mind. My friends said to me, Farther on will open the flood gates of light above the brightness of the noonday sun. So on I hastened. I took the third degree and I thought I could say as is said of Abram "And lo, an horror of great darkness fell upon him." (Gen. 15:12.)

In the winter of '23 and '24 was a time of much religious interest in Tavis, Oneida county, N. Y., the place where I resided. I became much interested, and then and there I found peace in believing in Christ. This absorbing event had a tendency to detract from my interest in Masonry, but having begun I concluded that I must go through, and on I went, but not without misgivings and disgust, for more than a year halting "between two opinions," trying to serve "two masters," Christ and Masonry. June 23, 1825, I was married. I then thought of my wife: if I go into the lodge the tyler and his sword forbids her entrance—there we must part.

July 11, 1825, I attended a Masonic corner-stone laying of an Episcopal house of worship in New Hartford, Oneida, county, N. Y. I took no part in the work, but in view of what I saw and heard then and there, I came to a decision.

In company with the father of my wife riding home, he said to me, "You did not put on the apron and join the work" (he being a Mason). I gave him my reasons. Moreover, I said to him, "This day terminates my connection with Freemasonry." Nor from that moment to this hour have I had the least desire to see the inside of a Masonic lodge or any other lodge of a secret order. It will be seen by my date that fifty-four years have sped on their way since that day, and that it was more than a year prior to the outrageous abduction and final murder of William Morgan. I am now in my seventy-eighth year, and wish to say that in all the years of my pilgrimage I have found in the family relation, and the religion of Christ, the institutions of his Gospel and the companionship and fellowship of the followers of Jesus, all that I needed in prosperity and adversity. One or two Bible testimonies: (Ps. 119:63.) "I am a companion of all them that fear thee. And of all them that keep thy precepts;" (Ps. 25:14,) "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will show them his covenant."

FROM OUR NEW ENGLAND CORRESPONDENT.

It would be in place that the Congregational churches and ministers of New England should lead the nation in enthusiastic remonstrance against the proposed anti-Christian abrogation of the Chinese treaty. The Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society at once protested by telegram to the President against his signing the bill; "as a crime against civilization which tends to impede, if not utterly overthrow, the efforts of the Christian world to evangelize that people." The American Missionary Association, in a similar message to the President, has characterized the bill "as a surrender to caste-prejudice, an injury to this country, a wrong to China, a violation to treaty stipulations, of the fundamental principles of the Declaration of Independence, and of the law of God."

The American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society of New York, through its president, Henry Highland Garnet, recognizing in the anti-Chinese bill the same spirit which for so many years oppressed more than four millions of descendants of Africans, makes known to the President their convictions that the Christian religion has nothing to fear by close contact with heathenism any where, much less in our own country. "And we believe that the treaty relations existing between our own and the Chinese government, and the consequent commercial intercourse and mingling of people, to be the great means which, under Divine Providence, will give that whole people the light and benefit of our Christian civilization. We therefore beg that your excellency veto the said bill."

Mr. Garrison, true to his antecedents of fifty years, and seeing the rights of man to be in danger, has twice addressed Senator Blaine in the Tribune, with a plea for human brotherhood as against all caste assumptions and clannish distinctions, with a caustic review of his (Mr. Blaine's) positions, closing with the words, "I take my leave of him hoping that he may be led to see and regret the great mistake of his public career." A mistake which he properly likens to the famous seventh of March speech of Daniel Webster.

The New York Independent worthily representing the Christian press says, "We most earnestly appeal to every lover of his country, to every Christian patriot, to every chamber of commerce, to every business man, to every State Legislature in session, to every missionary board, and to the entire press of the country, to protest immediately, loudly and solemnly against this great wrong. Yea, let patriotic words go forth from every hearthstone to President Hayes, praying him to stop this monstrous wickedness."

Other strong protests are filed from the New York Chamber of Commerce, from ex-Governor Chamberlain of South Carolina, from Joaquin Miller and others, and from the patriotic press in general, which it will not be easy for the President to ignore. It is generally believed that a timely veto will save the honor of the nation. But before this reaches you the issue will probably be known.

Rev. H. H. Hinman is now doing good service in this vicinity by a course of anti-secrecy lectures in the town of Southbridge, where one of your subscribers, Mr. S. L. Morse, has been lately stirring the elements in a public debate and arraignment of secret societies. Arrangements are also being perfected for another public meeting in this city to be addressed by Mr. Hinman and others. Mere training parades of Odd-fellows and Masons are frequently taking place in our streets at the burial of departed members, which advertise the order and tickle its adherents. Frequent demonstrations of the hollowness of its pretensions are a necessary offset to its impudent assumptions. H. T. C.

A member of the New York Legislature has placed before that body for examination a copy of the Swedish Excise Law, which is as nearly perfect as any provision for liquor traffic we know of, except prohibition. It has these features: licenses are granted by a board of excise with the limitation of one to each five hundred inhabitants. They are sold to the highest bidder at public auction. The place of selling liquor must be publicly recorded, and if in a month one half the owners of property within two hundred feet object, the license is not granted. Only persons of good moral character can have a license, and every city or village can limit the licenses or refuse them entirely. The enforcement of such a law in the United States would amount to practical prohibition.

—Such items as the following from the Scottish American would be ridiculous and amusing were they not notoriously false. It is difficult to conceive what object the author of these sentiments could have had: "The secrets of Masonry have been for ages the subject of anathema. But let us console ourselves with the contemplation that while the secret intrigues of political organizations have brought men to the stake, the gallows and the grave, the secrets of Masonry have not caused a single sigh, a tear to fall, nor one drop of blood to flow."

—A Chinese Religious Tract Society has been organized at Shanghai. It was resolved that the publishing committee shall consist of four foreigners and four natives representing Presbyterians and Congregationalists, English and American Episcopalians, Baptists and Methodists.

RELATION OF CIVIL GOVERNMENT TO CHRIST.

A SERMON BY J. BLANCHARD, PRESIDENT OF WHEATON COLLEGE, ILLINOIS.

TEXT.—"What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?"—Mat. 27: 22.

Eighteen centuries since, this question was put by a puzzled governor to a sinful multitude, misled by priests to clamor for the crucifixion of Christ. It has perplexed civil rulers ever since. What shall be done with Christ and the Christian religion?

Pilate must crucify or clear him. Neutrality was impossible. Clearing him condemned his accusers and recognized the kingship which he claimed over the realm of faith. Not to clear was to crucify him as an aspirant traitor to Cæsar in the civil realm. If he cleared him he might lose his office; if he crucified him he might lose his soul. He chose the latter: and ever since then the choice of the civil ruler has lain between recognition and crucifixion. For the nations which reject him are accessories to his murder after the fact; since rejecting him proclaims him an impostor, and sustains the charge under which he was put to death.

The Jews rejected him; and although their moral code is to-day the glory ot Christendom, their polity is but a page in history, and their name the by-word of the nations. Asia ignores him; and the children of the princes and nobles of China and Japan are sent around the globe to us for the knowledge which is had in our village workshops and primary schools. Africa ignores him; and adventurers from Christian lands are groping for her geography among the enslaved and wretched millions of her people. And if the civil status of the Christless nations is bad, their social and domestic state is worse. The ladies of the family of the late Secretary Seward, in their journey around the world, saw, in an elegant apartment of the house of one of the three richest men in the chief city of China, a rough iron pump against the wall, and asked its use. "I put the women under it when they quarrel," was their host's reply. The ornaments of those women thus subjected occasionally to the discipline of the pump, are described in the same volume (p. 164) as consisting of "pearls, emeralds, sapphires, rubies and amethysts." But they were ignorant of the "one pearl of great price,"—Jesus Christ. We have to compare the average child reared in a Christian family with one born, if it should survive, in a Turkish seraglio, or Chinese harem, to see how it could be that a single British war ship could bombard and dictate terms to a city of more than a million people. If the common belief is well founded that the difference between the Christian and non-Christian nations is caused by the difference of their religion; then our habitable globe is stamped all over with proofs of the prophet's declaration that "the nation and kingdom that will not serve Christ shall perish and be utterly wasted." Isa. 60: 12.

As the moral code of the Old Testament is one and the same with that of the New, viz: Supreme love to God and impartial love to man; and as the whole Old Testament is but a diversified picture and pantomine of Christ, as our atoning priest, and suffering victim, and teaching Prophet, and moral Conqueror and King; as Job, in the oldest of the Old Testament writings, calls him his Redeemer; and Malachi, in the latest, paints him to the life as the coming messenger of God; this Law and Gospel and Saviour, permeate and give unity to the whole book. We shall therefore speak of the whole Bible as one, and of Christ as the substance and subject matter of its revelations.

The burden of our present discussion ranges itself under three heads: 1. What is: 2. What ought to be: 3. What will be the relation of civil government, and especially our own civil government, to Christ and the Christian religion?

I. In the first ages and under the old world governments, outside of Judea, the world was one wide prison, and the civil state of men that of convicts under keepers. And to this day wherever religion is pagan, government is despotic. There is not one foot of free soil on earth where Christ is not recognized. Bayard Taylor's life pictures show that along the China Sea religion is mere conjuring with demons and the dead. And the Fetish of Africa, with names and follies changed, is but conjuring of the same sort, and men there are draft-cattle and slaughter sheep for their kings and priests.

Go westward toward the seat of the Saracen. Mohammed indeed recognized Christ, but put himself on a level with him. And as no one system can include two supremes, he soon absorbed into himself the reverence due to Christ, and destroyed Christianity by rivalship and substitution, yet leaving to men some faint light from his doctrine of the unity of God. Go westward still where the national banners mount crosses instead of crescents, and manhood stands up taller and more erect, till you leave the mainland of Europe and come to a British island of the size of an American State, whose morning guns answer each other around the globe. From the point in your westward march where Christ is recognized by civil governments, man becomes loftier, the earth richer, the air purer, home sweeter and heaven nearer to man. It is like journeying from a prison into a home.

The United States undertook to drop the superstitions of Europe and retain its Christianity. In the words of their historian, Bancroft: "The austere principle was announced that not even a ceremony should be tolerated unless it was enjoined by the Word of God." Blindly, it is true, and somewhat stumblingly, they sought to drop coercion and retain recognition of Christ.

In the first code of laws for Virginia written by the king of England, "religion was specially enjoined." (Bancroft, I. 123.) The first majority Constitution formed and signed on board the Mayflower, off Cape Cod, began, "In the name of God, Amen," and declared its purpose to be, "The glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith." (Bancroft, I. 309). As the Colonies spread, their laws, their wills, their charters and bills of rights, were all drawn as in the presence and by the authority of Christ. Their thieves even were charged in their indictments with acting "without the fear of God, and by instigation of the devil," and their one grand conception, everywhere appearing, was that of a Christian Commonwealth.

They may be charged, and truly, with retaining some feature of religious coercion. Truth comes to man gradually and through twilight. But they cannot be charged with ignoring Christ and the Christian religion. In 1774, two years before the Declaration of Independence, the House of Burgesses in Virginia proclaimed a fast for the Boston Port Bill, "devoutly to implore the Divine interposition for averting the heavy calamity which threatened our civil rights." Thomas Jefferson advocated and voted for that fast. He was a member of the House of Burgesses, and of course, had sworn to a recognition of Christianity in the charter of that colony, and in the English Constitution.

National fasts, thanksgiving, chaplaincies, etc., are national professions of religion. They enlighten every conscience but coerce none, even as the profession of pious parents makes Christianity the religion of the family; while in that family, no child's conscience is compelled, even to good. The children can and often do become atheists. The only coercion is that they keep the peace in a Christian house which they did not build. This is all that America asks of infidels, pagans and Jews.

In this country, which as we have seen, was founded in and for Christianity, no man is forced to his knees, as heretofore they have been in Canada and Rome. Jews, Arabs, atheists and pagans are, and of right ought to be free to believe or disbelieve; worship or not worship, as their conscience dictates. But to dechristianize this country, to drop the oath from its courts, and expel the chaplains from its Legislatures, to put out the Bible from its schools, to blot from the belief of Americans everything higher than their heads, or holier than imperfect human beings!—the man who should have seriously have made such a proposition in the days of Jefferson and Washington, would have been regarded as fit for the asylum or the jail. For the Declaration of Independence itself which Jefferson wrote, contains four distinct recognitions of the God of the Bible; and in his writings elsewhere, Jefferson was accustomed to recognize the true and living God.

How comes it, then, that the United States Constitution, only thirteen years after the Declaration, contains no recognition of the Almighty? not even in the oath which it prescribes to be taken by our Presidents? General Hamilton is said to have answered, "We forgot it." And, doubtless, some of them did. But the true answer is, that the fathers had not made the grand discovery of the difference between recognition and coercion. They remembered European coercion and sprung to the opposite extreme. They dreaded arousing a conflict of sects and took the short alternative of putting in the Constitution no religion at all. They did not see, as Pilate did not, that not to confess Christ is to crucify him; that protecting religion by their Constitution as they must and did, without saying what they meant by the term religion, was to put the pure religion of Christ on a level with the child murder, bauble-worship, superstition, and lust of paganism, and to throw the ægis of their Constitution over all alike. They did not see that to put Christ on a level with idols, is to deny that there is any Christ, for in fact there is no such being as a Christ who is on a level with idols. And as French infidelity was then popular and its disciples were partisans of Mr. Jefferson, in an evil hour for this nation, our fathers, for the sake of a Constitution, sheltered infidelity, by omitting Christianity, as they recognized slavery by the fugitive clause, though the mass of them abhorred both slavery and infidelity, and expected the extermination of both. Hoping and expecting this country to be and remain Christian, they washed their Constitution, as Pilate did his hands, hoping doubtless that Christ would take care of himself, and so, in effect gave him up to his crucifiers.

Thus they have given us a Constitution of government without a recognition of God in it, a thing till then I believe unknown on earth! a Constitution which President Woolsey in the Evangelical Alliance said a Mohammedan nation might accept without a change! A Constitution on which atheists take their stand, and demand that our laws and customs shall conform to it! that, in short, we shall join them and their Communist progenitors in proclaiming, "There is no God;" and "Death is an eternal sleep."

It would thus seem that Satan, in this country has reversed his old world methods. In Europe by uniting church and state, he inaugurated persecution and made Christianity odious. And since it had become unpopular to imprison consciences, he took to starving them. He dropped the Inquisition and opened an infidel club. He thus seeks his cruel end by another route. For when a government has put false religions and no religion on a level with the true, thus, in effect, denying that there is any true God or true religion, it slowly removes all moral restraint from crime, and, in the words of Robert Hall "leaves nothing but the slender power of the magistrate between our breasts and the daggers of assassins!"

Such is the actual relation of our civil government to Christ. The oath in our courts is the oath of Christ. Our origin, laws, customs and with meagre exceptions, our people are, at least in the geographical sense, Christians. But our Constitution is atheistic in its terms, though Christian in its substance. And as the same Constitution had within it, both slavery and liberty in "irrepressible conflict," by putting Christianity and atheism on a level, it has given us another conflict equally irrepressible, which must and will continue till our country is Christian or atheist. As the slaveholders never would let the slave question rest while one foot of free soil existed to reproach human bondage; so atheists, priests and spirit-worshipers will not let Christianity rest, while there is an oath in our courts of justice, a chaplain in a legislature, or a Bible in a public school. We meet the question of accepting or rejecting Christ in science, in literature, in government, in religion, in the schools, everywhere and on all sides. The moral conflicts are concentrating around Christ, until in the words of the Scripture, "It is very tempestuous round about him."

II. It is, therefore, of the gravest moment to ascertain our duty as citizens toward the Christian religion. What ought to be the relation of civil government to Christ?

While here on earth, our Saviour simply required men to confess him, and promised to confess those who did so at his second coming, (Mat. 10:32; Rev. 3:5) before his Father and the angels. This is all he asks of men or nations now, not to persecute, coerce, fight for, but to confess him. The relation of civil government to Christ, then, should be one of simple confession; no more, no less. He needed no jails or sheriffs; much less thumbscrews, fagots, racks, or other appliances of force. He asked no aid from the civil sword; displaced no civil officers; nor interfered with any. He refused to be judge of estates; fled from those who would crown him king; recognized civil government by the tribute; taught obedience to authority; and rebuked none for holding office, but only for misconduct in office.

Though he claimed to be a king, approved of his disciples calling him "Master," and "Lord," and said that he had all power in earth, as well as in heaven; yet he said that his kingdom was not of this world, "else," said he, "would my servants fight."

There is a National Association now seeking to insert in the preamble of the United States Constitution, such a simple confession of Christ and the Christian religion, that "ours is a Christian and not a heathen government." This movement for a religious amendment has sprung up within a few years, to antagonize the efforts of infidels, blasphemers, spirit-worshipers, atheists, pagans, weak Christians, priests and politicians, to obliterate the Sabbath; expel the Bible from the schools; drop the oath from our courts of justice; do away with all chaplains in the army, the navy and the legislature; discontinue public fasts and thanksgivings; set aside Christian for pagan morality; and, in short, to wipe out from our laws, constitutions and customs, everything which characterizes us as a Christian people. As the religious press has generally looked on in silence, some hearers may not be aware that there are "Liberal Leagues" so called, forming in many points of the country, which, under the title, "Demands of Liberalism," make every one of the above specifications. They claim, in clear and definite terms, that our Constitution is atheistic, and our laws, customs, and civil institutions must and shall become so. And this movement to dechristianize our country, under the lead of a newspaper corporation with a joint stock capital of one hundred thousand dollars, has enlisted every class and variety of talent, from the peddling sorceress, conjurer, and vulgar blasphemer, to the conductors of miscalled religious papers, and polished and cultured devotees of literature and science.

To show the length to which some advocates of the anti-Christian national movement go, I need only quote from a lecture by a self-styled professor on "The God proposed for our National Constitution;" delivered on the Sabbath in Boston Music Hall last May, in which the lecturer remarks: "I object to Jehovah, then, as our God, because he is a liar," and he proceeds to support his blasphemy by perversions of Scripture, and by other declarations even more revolting than this. These men have multitudes of communist followers, the filth and scum of our cities, like those of Chicago, who spend their money in drunkenness, idleness and vice; and when hunger follows crime, raise the cry of "Bread or blood!" and demand to be fed from the city treasury, and thus quartered on the labor of the industrious.

On the other hand the movement for the religious amendment has enlisted a host of venerable names from the various Christian denominations. They have held large and enthusiastic conventions in our largest cities, and propose to move by petition on Congress. And here the naked issue is joined, between Christ and anti-Christ; an issue, the working out of which is fraught with consequences which no finite mind can fathom. Be it ours to discover our duty and to do it.

Some reasons for a national confession of Christ and Christianity are the following:

1. There can be no legitimate government without God, and God is accessible only through Christ.

2. The Bible declares Christ to be "King of Kings;" the moral and providential Ruler of nations; and, this being true, nations should confess it.

3. Civil rulers are amenable to Christ. The magistrate as "the minister of God" bears the civil sword. This fact should be put into instruments of government.

4. The fact that Christ came, not as the head of the world's constabulary, to keep order by force; but as a suffering conquerer to subdue the world's heart and mind by love and truth, is a strong additional argument for his recognition.

5. We need this recognition to keep out false religions, and crimes practiced under the name of religion, as Mormon polygamy and assassination, which the terms of our Constitution, recognizing no religion, now shield and protect; for Mormons claim both as revelations from God.

6. We must, as a nation, recognize God, because the human conscience will not respond to any thing lower than God. Every man knows this who attends to what is within himself. No nation could keep up government for a single year, if there were not in the people a religious horror of crime, and nothing but the slender power of the magistrate shielded them from assassination and murder.

7. We need to recognize Christ to avert the displeasure of God, lest he leave us to those vices which dissolve governments, and which have strown the ocean of the past with the wrecks of dead nations.

8. All nations in Christendom, excepting ours, recognize Christ and Christianity in their Constitutions, and in this lies their strength and superiority to other nations.

It is objected to our national recognition of Christianity that it would re-inaugurate persecution by reuniting church and state. It is not pretended that the promoters the Christian amendment would favor it, as they, a thousand times over, declare themselves opposed to everything which enters into the idea or history of church and state, but that church and state would result from putting into the preamble of our Constitution a recognition of the fact that this nation, as such, believes in the Christian religion; and that when it protects the "free exercise" of religion, Christianity is the religion meant. This objection is refuted by the terms of the Constitution, which expressly forbid a legal religious establishment; which prohibition it is proposed on all hands to leave standing in all its force.

"But," it is further objected that, if we declare by the Constitution the well-known fact, that "ours is a Christian and not a heathen government;" "the Jew and infidel will of right complain." What right will they have to complain? All will still be free to every act but crime. The Jew to worship in his synagogue, the Mormon in his temple, and the atheist to rail in his club; provided only they do not molest their neighbors or practice crime for religion. But if any monster-mother turns the Mississippi into a Ganges and throws her wailing infant to crocodiles, to please her gods; if the Mormon practices for religion what our laws punish by the penitentiary; if the atheist curses the Sabbath and its Author; are we to be denied, not only all right to restrain such evil practices, but denied also even the poor privilege of saying that they are not American, and pointing to the Constitution to show that they are not? Or, worse still! Are we to be told that our Constitution protects such abominations because it forbids Congress to "prohibit the free exercise of religion;" and these things are religion?

There is one objection more. "Christians, it is said, are a sect, and Christianity is sectarian, hence a national recognition of Christianity would recognize sectarianism, which is not to be thought of." But it is not true that Christ is a sectary, and the infinite God whom he represents and brings within the horizon of mortals, a partizan Divinity. Mars, Jupiter, Apollo, Neptune and the rest,—these were sectarians, each in his petty realm. The rabble gods of the Chinamen; the saint gods of the convent and nunnery; the familiar spirit gods of the circle and the Mormon endowment; these all are sectarian; the "lords many and gods many" of the nations; and also those Christians, if there be such, who believe what they regard as truth, and would exclude from salvation all whom they cannot convince, these are sectarians.

But truth is not sectarian. The Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount, the Lord's Prayer—these are not sectarian. The infinite and eternal God, who fills the universe he has made—he is no sectary. Nor is the blessed Saviour, who is "the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person." He was neither Pharisee nor Sadducee nor Essene. He may have worn the garb and lineaments of a Jew, but he was neither Jew nor Greek, barbarian nor Scythian. In the words of another: "He stands above the limitations of age, school, sect, nation and race;" and without the suspicion of vanity or impropriety he could stand up and call on all men to forsake all things and follow him! Was Jesus the founder of a sect? No! ten thousand times, no! The angels proclaimed his mission as it was, and is and shall be; not peace to a party and good will to a sect, but "Peace on earth and good will to men."

If Christianity is a sect, where and what is the universal religion from which it is cut off? Shall we seek it in the jugglings of priests, the palterings of the circle, the pagoda, or the lodge? Or shall we kneel amid the herd of skeptics and seek rest to our soul amid the jargon of their negations while each lifts up his voice and proclaims not what he believe does but what he does not? If the two all-embracing principles on which the whole Bible is built—supreme love to God and equal love to man—if these be proved sectarian, then must we indeed lie down and die with Pilate's question quivering on our lips, What is truth? But, blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, he "is the Truth and the Life." Let us acknowledge him in our national Constitution, for "without him we can do nothing," either as nations or as men. "O come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord our maker. For he is our God, and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand."

In all this, I do not forget that civil government is but human might enforcing right. That the sheriff stands, with drawn sword behind every statute on the book, to enforce it if resisted; and that force can control the person but cannot change the heart. Therefore it is that civil government is a league in which regenerate and unregenerate share civil advantages alike.

But if we are not saints, still we are men, and men are the creatures of God, who said, "All souls are mine;" and hence it follows that no one man, though a magistrate, can justly lay his hand on the rights of another, "unless it be given him from on high." I infer therefore that Christ must be recognized in our National Constitution.

III. And what ought to be, in the counsels of God, will be. "He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth." (Zech. 9:10.) "For He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet." (1 Cor. 15:25.) For it is written, "As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue confess to God." (Rom. 14:11.) "For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted." (Isa. 60:12.)

Massachusetts Freemasons.

The printed proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts for the year 1878 are contained in a pamphlet of 283 pages. The most important question, it says, for the consideration of the lodge at present is the question how the expenses of the Grand Lodge are to be met after the end of the coming year, when the capitation tax ceases. The report shows that without temple, and without the capitation tax, the income of the Grand Lodge will not be sufficient to pay the necessary expenses, even by close economy. The lodge does not count many men of great wealth in its ranks; it can boast, however, that the character of the institution stands so high that princes in foreign countries are proud to patronize its mysteries. Two courses, the report says, are open to them; either to abandon to the creditors the temple, the pictures of the grand masters, the presents from lodges, the library gathered with so much care—for all will be needed to pay the debts under the forced sale—or to adopt some other plan of honestly meeting the difficulty. Looking at what has been accomplished in the past, there is little in the difficulties to discourage them, if they are willing to make the proper exertions and exercise a wise economy. When the temple was completed 16,000 Masons owed $450,000; in 1880 over 25,000 will owe $265,000. The institution, though it has been in great danger, is still sound and intact, its credit is unimpaired, its members regard it with affection, and not despairing because their great object has failed of accomplishment as soon as they expected, will give it the same generous aid for a few years longer which they have given it in the past. In accordance with the suggestions in the address, the following vote was adopted:

That, agreeably to the suggestion in the Grand Master's address, a committee of one or more from each Masonic district be appointed to consider the subject of the finances of the Grand Lodge; to confer with the board of directors; to examine the estimates in the Grand Master's address, and to report at the next quarterly communication some suitable plan for reducing or paying the debt of the Grand Lodge.

From the statistics, it appears that there are 25 926 Masons affiliated in Massachusetts, and it would appear that, by their united effort, the debt could be cancelled without being oppressive to any one of them. —Boston Herald.

The Medbury Article Again.

Editor Cynosure:—Having endorsed without reserve the essay of Bro. Medbury, as originally read before the Baptist Ministerial Union of Wisconsin, I felt not a little chagrined and mortified on reading in the Standard of December, the invidious clause in reference to the "Anti-secret society specialist." I now wish to say, in justice to myself, if that sentence was in the essay I did not hear it, and I find others equally dull of hearing as myself.

I can only account for its appearance on the supposition that it was an after modification for the benefit of the Standard readers. Brother Smith being present suggested some slight modification, and with such modification volunteered to publish it; hence, as I suppose, the change.

Freedom of Speech Suppressed —Work for 1880.

Ogden Center, Mich.

Editor Cynosure:—Your valuable paper reaches us regularly and I think the last one is always the best, revealing more of the hidden things of dishonesty. As time passes the real spirit of the lodge is seen in its true light. When freedom of speech is once denied the American people we will be near the end of our free institutions.

At our State election last November everything seemed to pass off quietly until about two P. M. I had been telling the boys and a few of my neighbors that I would make my speech on election day, which aroused some interest. I gathered the statutes of Michigan, copies of Morgan, Finney, and three or four Cynosures under my arm and mounted a wagon without saying a word, and laid the documents in the seat and spread them out, and the people came around with considerable loud talking and laughing, but they became quiet and I addressed them as my fellow citizens.

My object was to compare the statute with the laws of Masonry. I took up the statute and turned to page 1034 and read part of the act chartering the lodge and part of the article that it should conform to the laws of the United States. The people had become quiet, they wanted to see what I would make out of it. I then told them I had three witnesses to examine, two of them were dead and one living. That raised quite a laugh. I told them the three told the same thing and that they were all Masons. I had reference to Morgan, Finney and E. Ronayne. I took up Morgan and commenced reading at obligation of first degree, and soon the craft commenced asking questions. I finished the first and commenced on the third and that was too much for them. A rather good looking man about sixty years old, and well trained in the lodge for perhaps twenty-five years opened his battery on me, and some of his friends assisted him so I could not hear myself read. He called me a liar and the rest of the abusive epithets that generally follow. Such are some men's ways of convincing people of their own good standing in society. I thought myself he was a good example of the Masonic church. By this time a tall slim man was seen running up to the polls, saying "Amen, amen"; and another one close behind with a complaint against the speaker for breaking the peace and making disturbance. The complaint was duly considered and the supervisor, a Mason, came down into the street to the wagon where I was standing, and with great authority ordered me to stop making disturbance. I remonstrated, but nothing would do but stop. So ended my first attempt to speak in public.

I am not discouraged, but waked up. I will keep the Cynosure informed of the result. My Masonic friends feel cheap enough after they come to reflect over the matter. The whole thing was over in ten minutes, but I feel well paid for making the attempt to make an American speech.

I want every reader of the Cynosure to help make up a history for the campaign of 1880. How many Anti masons are there in the United States Senate? How many Anti-masons are there in the House of Representatives? How many Masons in Hayes' Cabinet? How many governors of the States are Masons? How many Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and how many generals of the army are Masons? Who can tell of a Mason that was starved to death in Libby or Andersonville prison? Was General Wirz who was hung for starving Union prisoners at Andersonville a Mason? If he was, why was not Jefferson Davis and his cabinet served the same way? Why was Mrs. Surrat hung for being implicated in the assassination of Abraham Lincoln and every Southern general and every Southern officer let go free and restored to citizenship? Was the "salary grab" a Masonic grab, or did the Anti masons have the majority in Congress at that time? Who were the fifteen men that elected President Hayes? Is he a Mason? Is Samuel J. Tilden a Mason or not? Do the Masons of the United States keep their obligation that they will not cheat their brother Masons out of one cent; if they do who pays all the victims of defaulters, broken-up merchants and bankers? If the Masons break that oath why don't they cut their throats and tear out their tongues?

Look up the matter Anti-masons, and see what a fearful bill is set apart for you. I have plenty more to ask you. Will you still vote them into office? Will you still pay the preacher for always concealing and never revealing the hidden things of dishonesty? Wake up and look around you and see what Mah-hah-bone is doing for you. Is he doing unto others as he would have others do unto him?

Let every reader see that these questions are answered and there will be such a volume of corruption revealed as this nation never saw.

Perhaps in my next letter I will give the political complexion of Lenawee county, Michigan, and the State and Congressional, as far as I can, and hope every Anti-mason in Michigan will help ferret out our evil-doers and let the light shine in the dark places.

I will do my best to double my list of subscribers for the Cynosure.

D. B. Heckert.

From an Aged Massachusetts Clergyman.

Pittsfield, Mass.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I am now within a few days of the close of my "three score and ten years;" have not stood upon my feet for the last twelve years, but can read some yet and write a little. Having tried to preach the Gospel to the poor while I had strength so to do, my confinement is attended with a degree of impecuniosity which no one I have yet heard of has seemed to covet. But in my deep poverty and long confinement the many expressions of sympathy and kindness have not failed to be appreciated, whether it came in the form of free papers from the publishers, or ordered to me by some other sympathizing friends. A Mrs. A. E. Jenks of Cheshire, Mass., (my native town) had sent me some numbers of your paper to read, and now, at the commencement of the new year, I have received the paper bearing a label with my name, which seems to indicate a present from somebody. One object in writing this is to assure that somebody that the present is highly appreciated and very acceptable, inasmuch as the Christian Cynosure is so much in harmony with the views I have long entertained touching the matter of secret, oath-bound societies.

It was my fortune to read the exposition of Masonry by Capt. Wm. Morgan, when I was but a youth, and the institution then seemed to me as one of the greatest monsters of wickedness that ever cursed the world. Really, I hoped the blow it then received would bury it beyond the power of resurrection. But, alas! when later it seemed to revive and even ministers were drawn into its wicked embrace, I felt a degree of astonishment which it is not easy to describe. My Master "said nothing in secret," never organized any secret associations, but ordered the proclamation of the whole truth of the Gospel everywhere. And believing "there is nothing secret that shall not be revealed, or hid that shall not be made known," I feel a confidence that the vail of man-made secrecy will be lifted, and hail with pleasure every effort of earnest workers for the truth in this direction.

Yours in Christian bonds,

James M. Whipple.

Facts from the Grand Lodge of Illinois.

Yates City, Ill.

Editor Cynosure:—Having succeeded in securing a copy of the Illinois Masonic Grand Lodge report for the year 1878, I propose to make a few extracts from the same for the information of your readers, who probably feel as much interest in the subject of Masonry as any of those for whose information the report seems to have been published.

In the first place then, for the purpose of exhibiting the decline of Masonry in Illinois, I go back to 1876. The reported net increase in membership for the year is 380. Then the reported net decrease for 1877 is 674; and the net decrease for 1878 is 770. And yet the Masons continue to reiterate the same old story that Masonry was never so prosperous as at the present time. If Masons wish to make the people believe such stuff they must discontinue the publication of the Grand Lodge reports.

In the matter of my controversy with Yates City Lodge, No. 448, I find the following in the Grand Master's report for 1878:

"The petition of Yates City Lodge, 448, asking reimbursement for expenses incurred in defending a suit brought by W. H. Robinson, an expelled member, to recover the fees paid by him for the degrees, was referred to the Grand Master with power to act. I decided that the lodge was justly entitled to reimbursement. An order was accordingly drawn on the treasurer, in its favor, for the sum of $108.10. The case, which was then pending in the Supreme Court of Illinois, has since been determined in favor of the lodge."

Now this last statement of the Grand Master, although literally true as far as it goes, is substantially false, inasmuch as it suppresses the most essential fact in the matter. Five of the seven judges of the Supreme Court were Masons, bound by their Masonic oath to sustain the lodge, right or wrong. So that the pretended decision amounts to nothing after all as a judicial decision. The judges knew all about the case and probably determined how they would dispose of it before permitting the clerk to place it on the docket. And now, having shown that the principal support of Masonry in Illinois consists of the fact that the Supreme Court is under the control of the Grand Lodge, I propose at some future time not far distant, to show by what means Masons obtain control not only of our courts, but of three-fourths of the offices of trust and profit in the State. But for the present I must content myself with showing up some of the beauties of Masonry as shown in the Grand Lodge reports.

On page 45 of the Grand Lodge report for 1878, I find the following from the Grand Master on the subject of demits, or certificates of voluntary withdrawal from the order:

"On the 24th of February, 1878, I issued a circular letter to the lodges of which the following is the substance. My correspondence indicates widespread confusion respecting the law regulating demits and the proper method of procedure under it. As amended at the last annual communication of the Grand Lodge, section 1, article 20, part second, Grand Lodge By Laws, reads thus:

'All applications for demits shall be made in writing, signed by the applicant, be presented to the lodge at a stated communication, shall be read in open lodge, and lie over until the next or some subsequent stated meeting, when if the applicant's dues are paid, and there are no charges against him, a demit shall be granted and a record made thereof.'

This section embraces all the conditions with which a brother is required to comply in order to entitle him to a demit and lodges are not at liberty to impose any others. All lodge by laws requiring applicants for demits to assign reasons for withdrawal are null and void. The law as it now stands recognizes the voluntary nature of the bond of membership and designedly provides that a brother may withdraw from the lodge without assigning any reason therefor."

Now if it were not that Masonry is always the same, it would look to a person who has been there as if this was the biggest kind of an innovation. If such a law had been in force on the 1st of March, 1873, I should be an unaffiliated Mason today. But as the law was then there was no escape from the lodge but by expulsion. Perhaps my suit with Yates City lodge with its disagreeable publicity has had some influence in inducing the worshipful brethren to abandon the idea of holding dissatisfied Masons against their will.

I see by the Grand Master's report for 1878 that he has been called upon to settle difficulties in about thirty-six lodges during the year. The principal cause of difficulty appears to have been the manifest unwillingness of the Worshipful Masters to obey the laws that they have made for the government of the fraternity. I have not, however, observed that any more severe punishment has been inflicted on any W. M. than temporary deposition from office.

No more at present, but I expect to write again soon.

Yours,

W. H. Robinson.

God's Warning to Watchmen—Ez. 3: 16-21.

Can any minister of the Gospel examine the above Scripture and fail to learn that he is held responsible for the sins of the wicked, if he fails to warn them? Also for the righteous, if he turn from his righteousness and commit iniquity, and the watchman, or minister, fails to warn him and he die in his sins, "his blood will I require at thine hand." How can the minister escape the righteous judgment of God if he fails to warn or reprove or even rebuke with all long-suffering and doctrine? Can a minister omit or refuse to thus obey the Gospel, and expect to hear the applaud, "Well done?" How many ministers are refusing to cry aloud and warn men against the idolatry of the lodge and the deceitfulness of men who lie in wait to deceive, and who receive into fellowship those who are in sympathy and fellowship with men who belong to an institution founded in falsehood and deception? Would to God that all ministers who are convinced of the wickedness of Freemasonry, and kindred fraternities, would be consistent, and discharge this indispensable duty, as all others, in the fear of God; then would Zion "come up out of the wilderness leaning on her beloved," "clear as the sun, fair as the moon and terrible as an army with banners," which may God grant in answer to prayer.

Yours in Christ.

J. J. Hayden.

Masonic Statistics.

Mr. Editor:—We of the Cynosure have been too negligent about gathering Masonic statistics. The lodge now begins to take the alarm, and will naturally try to hide the cloven foot, which at one time it was too arrogant to conceal. But now that the attention of Christian men and women is being turned to that same ugly hoof, the gentry of the sly craft are getting to be a little skittish.

I have heard that not long since a dirty, mendacious, Masonic periodical, which lauded Thomas Smith Webb, was edited in the library of Brown University, Rhode Island. Will some of our Rhode Island Americans give us an account of this periodical, for future reference?

It is believed that almost every newspaper stand in the United States is jealously monopolized by Freemasons, so that not an Anti-masonic tract, pamphlet, book, or paper could be bought there at any price. Will some of our co-laborers learn the facts in this case concerning their own neighborhood, and report to the Cynosure. By so doing they would give us a curious insight into the sly and crafty workings of the lodge.

WIDE AWAKE.

ANOTHER USE FOR MASONRY.

YORK, Pa., March 1, 1879.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Not long ago I noticed in the Cynosure a suggestion that there may be an inside ring to rob the members of secret societies.

Now we are told that

"Fleas have other fleas to bite 'em."

And as no honest man needs secret grips, signs, signals, etc., we can only conclude that rogues use all secret societies, in one way or another, to put gold and greenbacks "where they will do the most good" for those most active in secret society works.

Masonry is in fact nothing but ringism. A Mason is only a graduate from a great ring school. And the Masonic order is simply a very old and very expert London ring, which has robbed the British people of many millions of pounds sterling during the past one hundred and sixty-two years. The robberies of the Masonic Tweed ring were child's play if compared to the great London ring robberies.

As we all know, Masonry is a series of rings; each ring fools and swindles the next lower ring, and those on the top step of the Masonic ladder fool and swindle all below them, outsiders included.

The Masonic word "fleeced" is not generally understood even by seceders and investigators. An American freeman is never fleeced until he is made a Mason by lying and deception, furnished with a fleecy apron, fooled and insulted, branded as "not being in good standing," robbed of his property by due form of law, hounded and shot twice through the heart.

I have long been of the opinion that men who believe in free government are often initiated into Masonry so as to ruin and murder them with greater ease and with what seems to the Masonic mind as a good excuse. They certainly take in men knowing that they cannot approve of Masonic rascality. Is it not their intention to rob, hound or murder such persons? There can be no doubt that Masonry and the Masonic order are kept up by the very slyest and most cunning thieves, in order to plunder and oppress with as much secrecy as possible. And while outsiders are robbed in every possible manner, the secret society dupes are themselves swindled in numerous ways by the expert leaders and workers of the great secret empire. Yours truly,

E. J. CHALFANT.

OUR MAIL.

C. P. Paget, Smithdale, Ill., writes:

"The Masons here don't like me. I give your paper to my neighbors."

M. Ambrose, Mt. Pulaski, Ill., writes:

"I have not been able to be out since early winter, and am yet confined to my room. But I can hope, believe and pray for all engaged in the Cynosure cause."

A gentleman of Henry county, Iowa, writes:

"I saw a copy of your paper a few days ago for the first time. I had thought of becoming a member of the Masonic order, but will wait a little while until I see more clearly."

E. P. Sellew, Windsor, N. Y., writes:

"I hold the Cynosure in very high esteem, and expect to be a subscriber for it during life, or until secretism is banished from this land."

Jas. Squier, Trempeleau, Wis., writes:

"I am heartily intercsted in the anti-secret cause."

Albert Carlton, Kalamazoo, Michigan, writes:

"Secretism prevails in this part of the country. * * When the weather moderates and my health will admit, I am going at the work."

A. C. Hall, Wakeman, Ohio, writes:

"I have been a member of the church here ever since its organization; composed at first of only twenty members, organized by Prof. Henry Cowles of Oberlin, the 31st day of August, 1844. It is a child of Oberlin—the Oberlin of forty years ago. Only eight of the original members are now living, seven only left in the place. The church now numbers over 280. I was employed to write the history of the church, to be read on taking leave of the old meeting-house on December 31st, last, the day before dedicating our new one. I saw a notice of the same in the Cynosure. But I think with old Dr. Bingham that Oberlin has backslidden. I know not how many adhering Masons belong to the Second Congregational church of Oberlin.

"Although greatly discouraged in regard to the reform here, yet it greatly rejoices me to hear of progress in other places, and I am still laboring in my poor way in the cause. I give my Cynosure away, our pastor, Rev. C. C. Creegan, receiving his full share. I gave him two lately containing the addresses of Gen. Phelps and Bishop Wright. Get the church right and it would almost seem that I could rest satisfied. But Masonry and tobacco are polluting the church, 'the body of Christ.'"

F. R. Hill, Wilbur, Oregon, writes:

"The people of Oregon are waking up to the warning given by the Cynosure that Freemasonry is no friend to free government. The last legislature in Oregon appointed an investigating committee to look after those whose watchword eight years ago was, 'Retrenchment and Reform.' The committee has now reported that $100,000 have been squandered and lost to our people by these men. Who were these parties? Were they Masons? Yes. Were they Democrats? Yes; high Masons and high Democrats. What will be done with these gentlemen? Who can tell? My opinion is there will be nothing done with them. The matter will be hushed up as soon as possible. What cannot a high politician do if he is a high Mason? O, if the truth of all the vile acts of the leading Freemasons and politicians was made known to the people of our State, there would be a general waking up. * * Let us take courage from what we have gained through the movement made by the friends of the Cynosure. Although the beginning was small, and only about ten years have passed since the war against secrecy was commenced, let us not despise the day of small things. Let us work while the day lasts. 'The wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the righteous are as bold as a lion.' * * Dr. J. W. Watts, a temperance lecturer, has been traveling for the last three months. He is doing more good in the temperance cause than all the secret orders ever organized on the Pacific coast."

G. P. Loomis, Fairfield, Iowa, writes:

"We need lecturers in no place more than in Fairfield, for here secretism rules. None can buy or sell or get a job of work unless he has the mark of the beast, or the image of the beast."

O. C. M. Bates, Constantine, Michigan, writes:

"When will the time come when the people will consent to leave the devil's cause and come over on the Lord's side? I think it is the duty of every church member to leave a church that fellowships Freemasonry, and not to pay one dollar for the support of a minister who worships the devil a part of the time, and reads sermons for God to the people on Sundays."

Mrs. A. B. Hubbard, Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

"I am tugging at the car of prayer that moves the arm that moves the world."

Mrs. C. H. Richardson, Bloomsburg, Pa., writes:

"Secret societies abound here of every kind. My nearest neighbor is an Odd-fellow, and also a class-leader in the M. E. church. He says a man must be a Christian to be an Odd-fellow."

Christ says, "Follow me;" and in secret he said nothing.

J. B. Crall writes:

"I think that I will succeed in getting a few more subscribers for your fearless advocate of moral reform. I have no selfish motive in introducing the Cynosure, as I feel that it is an imperative duty to do all that I can to advance God's innocent cause. The few at this place whose mouths are not muzzled have a hard battle to fight. We have the avowed adherents of secretism on the one hand, and on the other mealy-mouthed preachers who are willing that almost every abomination should be made a matter of conscience, except the commendable act of refusing to pay them for their evasive preaching. But we keep the sword of divine truth unsheathed. And as we advance upon the enemy's works we remember that it is said, 'Blessed are ye when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake.'"

E. Darling, Paint Creek, Mich., writes:

"May that Infinite Being, who carries forward the administration of his moral government upon the principles of eternal right, be your protector in this tremendous conflict."

Levi Savage, Lockport, Ill., writes:

"May the Lord bless your efforts in this battle against one of the strongholds of Satan."

Geo. Jackson, Cedarville, Iowa, writes:

"I hope that every church member will abandon secret societies, for they cannot serve God and mammon."

Stephen Allen, Adrian, Mich., writes:

"Consider me enlisted for the war against secretism."

Lawrence Miller, Syracuse, Nebraska, writes:

"I cannot do without the paper that gives us the truth in revealing secret societies; of which societies the devil is the author."

C. C. Stowe, Deadwood, D. T., writes:

"I esteem the Cynosure, as one of the best religious newspapers in the land. I esteem it for its bold and fearless advocacy of the principles it maintains."

A. N. Allen, Longmont, Col., writes:

"The Masons run things here, and those who are not Masons do not like to take the Cynosure for fear of offending members of the order."

A. Giel, West Union, Iowa, writes:

"If the Cynosure remains what it has been, and is now, I shall be a life subscriber. I have taken it from the first number."

E. R. Harris, Mauston, Wis., writes:

"God bless you in the good work in which you are engaged, in bringing to light through the Cynosure the hidden works of darkness. I always read the paper, all of it, and think it the best paper published that I know of, and will do what I can to extend its circulation. The lodge and the popular churches that work in favor of secretism have such an influence here that it is difficult to get men to subscribe."

H. H. Hinman writes February 3, 1879:

"I have had some very successful meetings in West Hartford, and go to Glastonbury to-day."

Abraham Cox, Galion, Ohio, writes:

"Do not be discouraged, for the cause is of God and surely will prevail."

L. B. Lathrop, Hollister, Cal., writes:

"Weather cold and dry, with no good prospect of crops about Hollister."

He encloses a letter written to him by his friend, H. E. Campion, San Francisco, Cal., of which the following is an extract:

"This Masonry business is getting very interesting to me. It seems to draw a dividing line between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."

Mrs. Susannah G. Reed, North Hannibal, N. Y., writes:

"I always dislike to be a dead weight or a clog on the wheels of a good cause. * * I pay a widow's mite to forward this reform."

TRUE MORAL COURAGE.

Some time ago, in one of our great ships of war, there was a solitary sailor who was not ashamed to own himself a follower of Christ. For a long time he was alone; no other sailor joined him. His place of prayer was amid the noise and din of the sailors. One evening he perceived a shadow by the side of the gun. Another sailor was creeping along, who said, "May I come?" O, the joy of the young sailor to have a comrade with him! They met for many nights behind the gun, reading and praying. They became the butt of the men in two or three of the messes, but still they continued bearing and forbearing. It came to the ears of the commander—who was a Roman Catholic—but I mention this to his honor.

The moment he heard that two of his sailors were meeting for reading and prayer behind one of the guns, he sent for one of them, and instantly ordered a portion of the lower deck to be curtained off, and gave orders that no one should molest them. For some nights they were the only occupants, but by and by the curtain was opened, and a blue jacket said, "May I come?" He was welcomed. Another came, and another, and the last account I heard from the ship was that every night thirty-two were meeting for prayer. And there, by "standing fire," by standing firm, true to what was his duty, God has blessed that solitary sailor, and made him a spiritual father to at least thirty men on board the ship.—Ex.

OVERCOMING ENEMIES.

A Chinese emperor once heard that his enemies had raised an insurrection in one of the distant provinces. "Come, my friends," said he to those about him, "follow me, and I promise you that we shall destroy our enemies." He marched forward, and the rebels submitted on his approach. All now thought that he would take the most signal revenge. Instead of this, however, they were surprised to see the captives treated with great mildness and humanity. "What!" cried one of his officers, "is this the way in which you fulfill your promise? Your royal word was given that your enemies should be destroyed, and, behold, you have pardoned them all, and even shown special favor to some of them!"

"I promised," replied the emperor, with a generous air, "to destroy my enemies. This I have done. For see, they are enemies no longer; I have made them my friends."

How well might Christian people learn to imitate so noble an example and learn to "overcome evil with good."—Bible Banner.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH. 13, 1879.

"How will You Keep Lent?"—Bishop Cheney in his "Lenten Letter" to the congregation of Christ church, Chicago, gives to his people the excellent Scriptural advice to give God their hearts and enter anew into covenant with him. But this is not "Lent," which is a name derived from an old Saxon word which means "lengthen," and applied to the season kept in memory of Christ's forty days' fasting, which season has been fixed so as to fall when the days are growing long.

The proper answer to the above question is, The way to keep Lent is not to keep it at all. And these are the reasons:

1st. It is a "commandment of men," which tends to make God's worship vain and his law void. (See Mark 7: 7, and Mat. 15: 6.)

2d. It is not commanded of God. Fasting is commanded, but keeping a forty days' fast each year is not. And hence it is a human religious imposition. For Christ's commission ran to teach the nations to observe whatsoever he had commanded. No more. (Mat. 28: 20.)

3d. Christ declared that every plant in religion which God has not planted "shall be rooted up" (Mat. 15: 13), and Lent is one such plant.

4th. Experience coincides with Scripture, and witnesses against Lent. The grog-shops in Chicago are sustained by Lent-keeping Christians.

5th. While Bishop Cheney keeps Lent his Bishop Fallows keeps Masonic St. John's day. Both are human inventions, rivaling and eclipsing God's appointments.

6th. Every such religious invention, though not so intended, insults God by adding to his Word; as if he had given us a defective religion needing amendments and additions.

Leonard Bacon on Churches and Denominations.

Dr. Bacon of New Haven, Conn., is giving articles on the above subject in the New York Independent, which, to our mind, excel most that has been written by that wonderful man. The series has reached the fourth number, each replete with historic learning concerning original Congregationalism; clear, clinching logic, and cool, quiet sarcasm, which he mercilessly pours out on those who wish to denominationalize (sectarianize) the Congregational churches, that they who are weak with the people may be strong with the sect, and live on its spoils. But for the crowd of other matter which the Cynosure is bound to give its readers, we would give the whole series of Dr. Bacon for its great power, comprehensive views, general excellence and power of thought. What our readers are interested in, is the animus of the writing and the causes from which it sprung.

Dr. Bacon is an old-time Antimason of the school of Woods, Stuart, Hawes, Ide, and a trifle farther back, Hopkins, Edwards, Emmons, Burton, and a host of their compeers and predecessors, "of whom the world was not worthy."

A new set of men have crept into the seats of these fathers who resemble the "illustrious predecessors" about as much as Jeroboam's priests resembled Ezra, Nehemiah and the Hebrew prophets. Of this last class Quint of New Bedford, is the type and Henry M. Dexter is the scribe. Quint is a Mason of thirty-two degrees, with something more than a hundred oaths in what was once his conscience; and Dexter is an outside supporter of the lodge, bearing the less honorable title and degree of "Jack-Mason," or Mason's "jack."

These new lights of Congregationalism, soon after the National Christian Association was organized with the aid of President Fairchild, Professor Henry Cowles and other Oberlin men (Prof. Cowles writing the Constitution) moved on Oberlin and organized The National Congregational Council. Oberlin was pleased. The sainted Finney, who did not always see what causes were producing the effects around him, gave the Council the benison of his presence; and, not least, Dr. Leonard Bacon gave his attendance, and in his own words, his "acquiesence under protest."

But Dr. Bacon is a patriot, and if he worships any idol it is his country. He begins to see that this republic cannot stand in the hands of men who practice the completest possible sworn despotism in lodge by night, and fulminate on freedom by day. He sees, too, that Quint & Co. have no respect for him further than they can use his influence with American Congregationalists.

Dr. Bacon published in the Advance, a cautious letter advising a church to keep clear of the lodge, and Quint, who doubtless had by his Masonic glozing, made Bacon believe that he cared little or nothing for Masonry, in his New Bedford speech, defiantly said: "I am Grand Chaplain of Massachusetts Masons, and if any body don't like it, he can help himself." (Jan., 1872.)

This was really a glove of defiance thrown at Dr. Bacon, after the manner of Quint's Grand Master, who by obsequious flattery leads a man astray and then snubs and insults him. And now, having consolidated the Congregational churches into a compacted sect, and already laid that sect under tribute to himself to the amount of five thousand dollars, voted by ring-led State Associations, such as met at Galesburg, Ill., last May, Quint and his compeers who hope to profit by the wooden horse of sect, set up within the walls of their Council, now say in effect, if not in words, to Dr. Bacon, You must keep quiet about Masonry and go along with us, or you will cease to be a Congregationalist; in other and familiar words: "We will read you out of the party." This is what Dr. Bacon is writing about, and when he is read out of the denomination

"May I be there to see."

If readers of the Cynosure in any considerable numbers wish to know what Dr. Bacon says, I will report him for them.

Colors at Half Mast.

We print entire in another column, from the Boston Herald of Feb. 22nd, a coaxing article on Massachusetts Freemasons in which there is evidently a

"Whistling loud to keep their courage up."

Time was when the favor of weak foreign princes like the present Prince of Wales would hardly go down sweet with Massachusetts people. And the "temple-tax" and "capitation tax" added to ordinary Masonic taxes imposed on Massachusetts Masons, in addition to legitimate taxes of the State, would once have recalled to mind the stamp tax and the tax on tea, which were not popular in Boston. But "Times change and men change with them."

But what is this "Grand Lodge" and what are its "expenses," which 25,000 Masons are called to provide for? Not one of the twenty-five thousand can ever have a seat in that Grand Lodge if he is nothing but a simple Master Mason of three degrees. He must have special qualifications to be eligible, while any citizen can be sent to Congress, and a rail-splitter may be President. And what are the "expenses" of the Grand Lodge and its temple?

A few years since being in Boston I went to the Masonic store for books and regalia and asked for a Masonic almanac or book containing the general statistics of the order. The gentlemanly clerk told me "there was such a book printed but not for sale" (!) and that by going down to the Temple and inquiring of a gentleman whose name I have forgotten (as I did not find him) I could get the book.

I went as directed, and wound my way up stairs and through corridors and halls where tables loaded with the dishes and remnants of the last night's "festival of St. Andrew" were surrounded by troops of colored waiters, who were talking, joking, laughing and feeding on the remnants of the feast. As I passed through apartment after apartment, following each last direction, hoping to find the man to whom I was sent, I saw many bed-room doors standing open in the middle of the forenoon, revealing beds whose tumbled condition showed that many people had lodged there, but not a white man did I see.

I gave up the search and wound my way back as I had entered. Coming out, I took up the Boston Journal, and found four columns devoted to a gorgeous and grandiloquent description of that feast; the awful and mysterious rites which preceeded it were duly hinted at, and the dance which followed it, even to the dresses of the women and girls who went there to dance with strange men in that strange temple between 12 o'clock and morning, was described with tedious and disgusting minuteness. If the 25,000 men of Massachusetts can be brought to pay such "expenses," it is a free conntry and no dispute about tastes.

But Rev. A. H. Quint, D.D., is chaplain of that temple. And the State Congregational Association of Illinois met in Galesburg, May, 1878, voted to tax Illinois Congregationalists their quota of $5,000 claimed by the said Quint as expenses of the National Congregational Council of which he is the sole permanent officer!! If the Congregationalists of Illinois knew the exact state of these and similar facts, the denomination would be revolutionized in a single year. They will yet learn them.

But read the article from the Boston Herald.

—Bro. Hinman is now in Massachusetts pressing the battle so well as his health will allow. He has spoken at Cochituate, Acton and Southbridge, and is also looking after the Connecticut State meeting at Putnam. His first meeting at Southbridge was on Monday evening of last week to a large audience largely made up of the rough class of the community, but also including a large number of intelligent listeners, who paid the closest attention, among whom were the Congregational and Methodist Episcopal pastors. Bro. Hinman's health is quite poor and almost compels him to return home, but he hopes with care to continue until May and do a thorough month's work in the Green Mountain State. New England friends, be faithful to your part of this good work. Communicate with Bro. Hinman for the present at No. 20 Front St., Worcester, Mass., sending in your subscriptions for New England work and making any suggestions you may be able.

—Bro. Needles of the American Freeman, has made a proposition to his patrons in response to a demand for enlargment. The Freeman is good and they want more of it; as an Indian is said to have wished his throat was a mile long. The plan is to enlarge one-fourth if the friends of the paper will bear about one-half the expenses, or $100. This is not the tone of failure, and we expect to see an enlarged paper ably representing the reform interests of Missouri and the southwest.

—Elder Rathbun worked the first and third degrees in DeWitt, Clinton county, Iowa, last week, to the amazement of the lodge. The elder's health is not yet confirmed from last winter's sickness; he hopes, however, through the goodness of God and proper care to be able to answer any calls in Iowa. His efficiency and accuracy in Masonic work is well attested in our correspondence.

—Our thanks are due to a number of friends who have favored us with original poetry for publication. Some of these articles we have been compelled to refuse on account of their length, and others because the sentiments, though excellent, might have been better expressed in plain prose, while using less space in the Cynosure, of which we are becoming somewhat jealous. The advice of the old Roman, Horace, is as good for writers of poetry now as 1800 years ago, to wit, that before venturing their productions before the public they often revise, and keep for a time when maturer judgment will suggest improvement. While we cannot fill these pages with poetry, we do want every reader to write for their paper. Let us have facts, facts, FACTS, especially respecting the operations of the lodge against the churches of Jesus Christ, and in politics and the courts. Send, especially, every seceder's name. Write often, and always when you have an item that may serve for a sling-stone against the Philistine.

—A correspondent of the Christian Standard, Cincinnati, not long since exalted the lodge against the church because it gives protection to himself and family in case of want. Another replies that the real comparison from such a standpoint is between open and secret organization formed for the purpose of insurance. The church, he forcibly argues, is not conducted on that basis; if any one seeks admission to it from mercenary motives or for pecuniary benefits, he mistakes the mission of the church altogether. The argument continues, that the only real comparison of the church with the lodges is in respect to worship; whose nature in the latter must always clearly condemn them.

—Rev. Stephen Wright of Glens Falls, N. Y., a valued correspondent, has reprinted a sermon preached at Killingly, Conn., on a public Thanksgiving day, Dec. 5th, 1776, by the brother of his great grandfather, Eliphalet Wright, then pastor of the Congregational church, and a sturdy patriot. It is an interesting paper when we remember the trying times upon which the country was then entering.

—The secret printers' union has been for some time past in this city obliged to yield to the times and give up the effort to maintain a high price for their work. If they "struck" there were too many non-union men ready to take their places. Under the pretense of having given up their scale of prices they have been at work on these outsiders, and last week secured a vote in an indiscriminate meeting in favor of all joining the union, men and girls. After they have "bagged their game" they will again dictate prices to the papers and printing offices as of old.

The patriotic self-denial with which many secure subscriptions for the Cynosure gives us new courage and hope. Let us not slacken our efforts until the Cynosure is in every sense widely circulated.

The Ohio State Convention.

FROM SECRETARY STODDARD.

UTICA, Ohio, March 7, 1879.

DEAR K.:—The State meeting closed here last evening with a full house and talk by your humble servant of two and a half hours. The meetings were interesting, entirely harmonious and audiences good day and evening. Ten speakers were announced and most of them responded to roll call: Drs. H. H. George, Wishart, J. P. Lytle and H. P. McClurkin, and Revs. Warren Taylor, George (of Mansfield), John Martin, George Richey, John Kemp, Boyd, Dysart, Smith and several others spoke with excellent effect, and taking it all in all, the convention was among the most effective ever held in the State. While sufficient time to make the meeting interesting to the audience was given, business was not neglected, ways and means for future operations were devised and it was evident that the friends here are determined to have more energetic and systematic work. Very much of the success of the convention is, under God, due the indefatigable labors of Bro. McClurkin, who has given himself, his time and means to the work whenever and wherever the Master calls. The secretary will send you a full report, including resolutions, etc., and others will probably have something to say. Meetings have been arranged for me each evening and several afternoons up to the 16th, when I shall leave the extreme eastern part of this State expecting to reach the State meeting in Iowa on the 18th. I desire to see brother Rathbun and the friends there, and to witness his work in a lodge of Master Masons. I have myself serious thoughts of obtaining enough of the regalia, etc., to prepare a candidate for the third degree; not to open a lodge in "due and ancient form," but as a "specimen brick" to be used in connection with a lecture on the Master's degree. I have done so in a few instances with good effect, and friends with whom I have consulted approve, as it would meet a want existing in those places where they do not feel able to meet the expenses of having the degrees worked. The Lord in whose hands we are and whose honor we seek will direct.

I hope Bro. Mathews will look up the case of the Knight Templar seceder of whom he spoke and report. I will send you a list of subscribers as soon as I have time to make it out in due form. In great haste while friends are waiting to consult.

Grand Success in Southern Iowa—Elder Rathbun Unlimbers his Guns.

BIRMINGHAM, Iowa, Mar. 6, '79.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—That "pestilent fellow," Elder D. P. Rathbun, was here last week and the week before and gave us in this place and neighborhood five lectures, including the working of the first and third degrees and also worked the first and third degrees, with lectures, in the city of Fairfield, nine miles distant. The meetings were all well attended and a deep interest was manifested, many people inquiring, "Are these things really so?" The Masons told us here, sometime ago, that we could not have the degrees worked in Fairfield, but it has been done nevertheless.

Mr. Rathbun, as a lecturer and in working the degrees, has proven himself a "success," a workman that need not be ashamed. The writer, behind the scenes, held Ronayne's handbook and followed him through while working the degrees, and in the language of a seceding Mason here, "He never made a bobble." We can heartily endorse and cheerfully recommend him to the friends everywhere as a faithful and indefatigable laborer in the cause of the great reform. Mr. Rathbun has made a host of warm friends here.

The churches of this place, of which there are four, are almost entirely free from the contamination of secretism, with the exception of the Old School Presbyterian, which is very slightly tinctured with it, and the M. E. church, which is worm-eaten through and through with it. It was a matter of conjecture for some time whether the present M. E. minister was a Mason or not. Some affirming, others denying, till it got so hot that the minister found it necessary to confess his sin in this thing to an old, faithful and tried member of the church (an Anti-mason), "that he was a Mason and did not want to deceive him any longer." The consequence was that a number of the members of his church who had attended upon his ministry while his true relation to Masonry was in doubt have quit hearing him. One, a long-time and faithful Christian has severed her connection to the church by letter; others refuse to hear an adhering Mason preach in that or any other church, "knowing him to be such;" others again hearing occasionally but refusing any pecuniary aid to a Mason. It must be admitted, however, that in one thing the minister has succeeded admirably, and that is in drawing around him a set of men, some of whom openly avow that "Masonry is a good enough religion for them," and who declare "they would rather see all the churches in the land go down than to see Masonry go down." Some of them are not members of any church but are warm adherents to the minister and quite regular attendants upon his ministry; but I opine that if he were to shoot even the lightest paper wad at the "ancient handmaid" they would fly off as sparks do from a flint when a piece of steel is brought into sharp collision with it.

What a nightmare, what a deadly upas are the churches that foster this gigantic fraud, this monster imposition, this infernal conspiracy against humanity, Christianity, equal justice and good government—churches that settle down in the path of progress and reform, that will not move a peg in the right direction themselves but will growl and snarl and snap at the heels of every one who has the courage to pass around or over their rotten carcasses in his onward march.

We are thankful that we are able to see, in the utter contempt which the ridiculous and wicked rites and ceremonies of ancient craft Masonry are held by the thinking and Christian part of this community, the glorious fruits of the labors of such eminent reformers as Elders H. H. Hinman and D. P. Rathbun, Edmond Ronayne, and last though not least the Christian Cynosure. Long may they wave.

W. PITT NORRIS.

Pennsylvanians, Take Heed!

The next quarterly meeting of the Northeast Pennsylvania Association opposed to secretism, will convene at the Universalist church (now used by the Methodist Episcopal society), in Clifford, Susquehannah Co., Pa., on the 28th, 29th and and 30th of March. The meeting will commence on the evening of the 28th at 7 o'clock. Lectures may be expected on the evenings of Friday and Saturday. Business and free conference in the day sessions on Saturday with the usual devotional exercises. Lord's day the people may expect preaching as hereafter to be given out in the previous meetings there. Elders Post and Raynor are requested to be there prepared for work.

The arrangements to secure the services of Past Master Ronayne at the said meeting could not be perfected by your Corresponding Secretary without becoming responsible for funds and other considerations not in his reach. Only part of the money to secure the end is pledged and remains good till enough is pledged. The campaign is postponed till then. When we reach the requisite means we expect to go into the larger places in Northeast Pennsylvania.

By order of executive committee.

THE CHRISTIAN HOUSEHOLD.

O happy house! where thou art loved the best,
Dear Friend and Saviour of our race,
Where never comes such welcomed, honored guest,
Where none can ever fill thy place;
Where every heart goes forth to meet thee,
Where every ear attends thy word,
Where every lip with blessings greet thee,
Where all are waiting on their Lord.

O happy house! where two are one in heart,
In faith and hope are one,
Whom death can only for a little part—
Not end the union here begun;
Who share together one salvation,
Who would be with thee, Lord, always,
In gladness or in tribulation,
In happy or in evil days.

O happy house! whose little ones are given
Early to thee, in faith and prayer—
To thee, their Friend, who from the heights of heaven
Guards them with more than mother's care
O happy house! where little voices
Their glad hosannas love to raise;
And childhood's lisping tongue rejoices
To bring new songs of love and praise.

O happy house! and happy servitude!
Where all alike one Master own!
Where daily duties in thy strength pursued,
Is never hard nor toilsome known;
Where each one serves thee, meek and lowly,
Whatever thine appointment be,
Till common tasks seem great and holy,
When they are done as unto thee.

O happy house! where thou art not forgot,
When joy is flowing full and free;
O happy house! where every wound is brought,
Physician, Comforter, to thee.
Until at last, earth's day's work ended,
All meet thee in that home above,
From whence thou camest, where thou hast ascended,
Thy heaven of glory and of love!

HOW A SPIRITUALIST MEDIUM WAS SAVED.

[From "Spirit-Possession," a pamphlet by H. M. Hugunin.]

For about three months I was in the power of the spirits, having a dual existence, and greatly tormented by their contradictory and unsatisfactory operations; but as I had sought their companionship for no evil purpose, and had grace enough given me from on high to call upon the Lord Jesus Christ to pity me in my miserable and helpless condition, I felt that the spirits were often restrained from doing me extreme injury by a power that was mightier than themselves. Still they tormented me to a very severe extent. I desired to be freed from them. I lost much confidence in them, and their blasphemy and uncleanness shocked me. But they were my constant companions. I could not get rid of them. They tempted me to suicide and murder, and to other sins. I was fearfully beset and bewildered and deluded. There was no human help for me. But almost from the very first I had been inspired (as it were by God himself) to make friends with the Lord Jesus Christ—the result, I think, of my early religious teachings in the Sunday-school—who had delivered so many from the evil spirits that overcame them during his earthly life. Amid the phenomena, delusions and filth of Spiritualism, I prayed almost constantly for help to "the One mighty to save." The reader will remember the object with which I plunged into spirit-mediumship—to ascertain what good it possessed. I found out. It is the same goodness that exists in the "outer darkness" of the Bible. I am not going to enlarge upon the wickedness that was poured upon me like vials of wrath by the spirits because I would not yield and be as wicked as themselves. I praise God to day, and I expect to through time and eternity, for the divine care and watchfulness that he accorded me. Giving me faith to trust in his mighty power to deliver, bidding me hope, yet withholding deliverance until he was pleased to send it in all its fullness, in his own good time, he still restrained the spirits from doing me any important injury. It is true they led me into some extravagances of action, and to believe, in a measure, a few of their delusions, often combining religion and deviltry in a most surprising manner; but, after all, beyond a certain extent, they could not influence me. A higher power controlled them. One day, after they had been peculiarly annoying, they threatened to kill me, and, tired of their torments, I told them to do it. At once there was a temporary peace, as if they had been suddenly driven back. Often they reviled me, once telling me that my prayers had not been heard in heaven for six weeks. On one occasion I intimated a resolution to send for a godly minister to come and pray with me, and they threatened if I did, to tear the house down before morning. I sent for him; he came, and during the night they seemed to be more restrained than usual in their demonstrations.

I was now really at war with the spirits—not trusting in anything or anybody to deliver me from them except the Lord, yet opposing them and their efforts to overcome me. If I yielded to them in the least, even for a moment, they would take advantage of it in some way to deceive me; if I opposed them they tormented me, their power sometimes extending to my body as well as to the mind. But still I prayed in faith, believing that deliverance would come.

Almost every sin that I had ever committed of any importance the spirits paraded before me, so that I could read it as out of a book. They instituted courts to try me (or pretended to), in which God the Father was supposed to be Judge; but the trials were nonsense and awfully blasphemous. One good effect arose from this. I began to hate wickedness in myself and everywhere—I was disgusted with it, and sick of it; and then I continued praying earnestly to be delivered from the spirits and all sin. Oh, how I hated it in all its forms!

I believe that at one time Satan himself, hearing my prayers, and finding me so bitterly opposed to his servants and wickedness, and being in danger of losing so faithful a servant of his as I had been in the past, came to the aid of the spirits to overcome me if possible. There was more of malignity, horrifying blasphemy and awful delusion manifested against me than before; but I praise God for the grace that led me to have a deeper faith and hope in Christ in that trying hour; and I have reason to believe that then God and the devil fought for the possession of my soul, and that he who never lost a battle drove away my mortal enemy. I felt that I was in awful peril, yet no new harm came to me. The very language of the Bible was apparently changed by the evil one, as if to destroy my confidence in it and in God himself. But with the dreadful temptation I received new grace, even under the bewilderment that beset me, and clung to Jesus through it all.

After a season of these varied and wonderful experiences, I began to receive intimations from God and from the spirits (as I think now after a lapse of years) that my deliverance was near at hand. I had been among the spirits for about three months, and tried in body and mind to a certain degree by their constant warfare upon me, but not permanently injured in either, and enjoying very good physical health. I had exercised by taking long and frequent walks, and been nourished by healthful food; I had thoroughly repented of every sin and become a believer and follower of Jesus, who had been my friend through all, and I felt that I was really soon to be delivered from the labyrinth of wickedness and mystery in which I had existed for so many weeks. One morning I was asked by an unseen and mysterious associate (I know not whom) to give my promise never more to have anything to do with Spiritualism. It may have been a messenger from the Lord, or from my spiritual enemy—I know not; but a positive answer seemed to be required. That promise I solemnly gave, and have solemnly kept for seven years, and by the grace of God I shall keep it until I am called into the world of spirits. I think it was either on that day or the next that my communication with the spirits ceased, and I was at liberty, filled with praise and joy at God's deliverance of my soul from the peril through which I had so marvelously passed. From that hour I have been a Christian.

BIBLE WINES.

It has been said again and again, that the wines of the Bible were intoxicating. We admit that two kinds of wine are spoken of in the Word of God, unfermented and fermented wines; the latter God most unequivocally condemns. "Woe to him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor and maketh him drunken," etc. "Look not upon the wine when it is red," etc. "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven." "The priests have gone out of the way because they have followed strong drink," etc. The unfermented wine was that kind that Pharoah's butler said, "that he took the grapes and pressed them into Pharoah's cup." That was the kind of wine used by the Saviour at the sacrament of the Lord's supper. The same that Paul recommended Timothy to take.

Archbishop Potter, who lived two hundred years ago, in the Grecian Antiquities, says: "The Lacedemonians used to boil their wine till a fifth part was consumed; then after four years had expired began to drink them." Aristotle, who lived some three and a half centuries before Christ, says: "The wine of Arcadia was so thick that it was necessary to scrape it from the thin bottles in which it was contained and to dissolve it in water." Columilla, about the same period, says: "In Greece and Italy it was common to boil their wines." Horace, who lived the century before Christ, says: "There is no wine sweeter to drink than Lesbian; it was like nectar, and more resembled ambrosia than wine." It was perfectly harmless and would not produce intoxication. Modern missionaries and travelers in Syria state that the custom of boiling wine to prevent fermentation is still observed in that country, and also the habit of boiling their wines is also universal. Volney, in his travels in Syria, says: "The wines are of three sorts; the red, the white, and the yellow. The white vines are the most sour and so bitter as to be disagreeable. The red and yellow are too sweet and sugary—this arises from being boiled." Dr. Newman, professor of chemistry in Berlin, says: "It is observable that the sweet juices boiled down is an article of domestic use in nearly every home." The Mohammadans of Arabia thus make and use their wines at the same time at the present day. These authorities (and many more can be used) will assuredly be accepted as establishing the statement that certain kinds of wine extensively used and highly prized by the ancients were free from fermentation. In the face of such undoubted authorities, should we not discountenance the use of intoxicating wines and all other alcoholic drinks? God never designed that such drugs should be drank. Water, good cold water is the drink of the animal creation and also for the human family. Water as a beverage will not cause the mania a potu, will not beggar a man's family, will not cause him to commit suicide and murder. Let water be the only beverage, and soon our prisons, alms-houses and houses of correction will be tenantless. Our taxes will be greatly reduced, and the dark cloud that rum has thrown over the country shall be driven away.—Selected.

A Short Sermon.

BY ALICE CARY.

Children, who read my lay,
This much I have to say:
Each day, and every day,
Do what is right,—
Right things in great and small;
Then, though the sky should fall
Sun, moon, and stars, and all,
You shall have light.

This further would I say:
Be you tempted as you may,
Each day, and every day,
Speak what is true,—
True things in great and small,
Then, though the sky should fall,
Sun, moon, and stars, and all,
Heaven would show through.

Figs, as you see and know,
Do not out of thistles grow;
And though the blossoms blow,
While on the tree,
Grapes never, never yet,
On the limbs of thorns were set;
So, if you good would get,
Good you must be.

Life's journey through and through,
Speaking what is just and true,
Doing what is right to do
Unto one and all.
When you work and when you play,
Each day, and every day,
Then peace shall gild your way,
Though the sky should fall.

The Fisherman's Daughters.

CHAPTER II.

It was broad daylight now, the cold dark light of a wet, stormy morning, but not near so stormy as in the night; and there was a hopeful look in the sky, which though still wild was breaking open here and there.

How weary and white father looked, I thought, as he put his large head in at the door—white for him, he was always so red. He was wet all over, as if he had been in the sea—which perhaps he had—and his hair was matted, and some of it lying in streaks across his forehead, which was covered with deep lines and furrows—that it always was, only just now they seemed deeper than ever.

Elsie leaned forward and stretched out her arms to him, with such an eager anxious face. "No, my lass, not noo," he said, "I be too wet to touch thee. I'll coom and see thee again afore I go down."

"Give me your hand, father! oh, just give me your hand!" she cried in a voice that trembled with deep feeling; and he came to the bedside, and gave her his large strong hand: and she grasped it between both her own, and kissed it again and again, and laid her soft cheek upon it; and then she loosed it of a sudden, and bid him go and take off his wet clothes. He smiled fondly upon her as he went away, and said, "Oh, there was no fear for him, he was well used to being wet," and so shut the door.

And now Elsie and I said a prayer together—a grateful prayer at the safe return of those we so dearly loved. As yet we knew nothing of the fate of the poor vessel, and of those on board. Father would be sure to come again to Elsie's room, on his way down stairs to the bright warm fire, and to the hot coffee mother was certain to have had a long time ready for her brave husband and sons; and then we should learn how it had sped with them while they were away.

It was father's custom every morning the first thing to "turn in," as he said, to see how Elsie was, and how she had slept, and how she looked; and to give her a kiss and his blessing before he went away to his dangerous toil: and he would pat me on the head, and bid me, as I valued his love, to be careful of his poor little lass till his return; and then tell her to pray for him. He felt as though no good winds would come to his vessel, he said, if she didn't. But, ah me! little need had he to bid her do that; however he liked to say so, for he knew it pleased her.

All those of us who were able, were generally down stairs on summer mornings by five o'clock; and as it was near that hour now, I jumped up and dressed myself, though still feeling rather sleepy from being disturbed in the night; but I was anxious to get Elsie's breakfast at the usual time. She had not slept at all, and looked so white and weary. As I said, I was almost her only attendant; and dearly I loved it, I was so fond of her.

Having said the few little prayers Elsie liked me to begin the day with, and father not yet having come from his room, I ran down to the kitchen, where I found my brothers already in dry garments, sitting and warming themselves on each side of the large blazing wood fire, while mother stood between, preparing breakfast. Kissing mother and brothers, after our manner, and with my arm round Sam's neck—he was my favorite, though why I could not have explained, for they were both as good, kind-hearted fellows as ever lived—I asked, in a low voice, if any one had been drowned last night?

"All!" Sam said, in so grave and sorrowful a tone, I felt too distressed to speak again; and looking at him in silence for a minute, I turned and took up the couple of pieces of bread mother always placed for me to toast for Elsie. This was quickly done, the fire was so hot; then I poured out a cup of steaming coffee, putting a little goat's milk into it, and some sugar, and with a fresh boiled egg (poor Elsie had quite lost all her once hearty appetite), I arranged the whole on a small wooden tray, which father and Sam had made expressly for her, with a beautiful edging all round, to prevent the things from slipping off. As I carried it up, on the stairs I met father; his kind eyes were full of tears, and I wondered what she had been saying to him, or he to her. I was coming up slowly and cautiously, not to spill any of the coffee, and stopped to let him pass.

"I 'ont take it from thee, little maiden, for I know thee beest proud as a young peacock of thy handywork for the poor lass," he said. "God bless thee, my child, and help thee to do thy all to make her cheery and comfortable;" and his gruff voice broke down, and he left me and went on to the kitchen.

Elsie was crying when I came in. I didn't know what for, but I put down the tray and began crying too. "Father had told her about the wreck," she said. "Oh! never was a sadder one! They could do nothing to save them; the boat was every time thrown back upon the shore, and several of the men a good deal bruised; and they were at last forced to give up the attempt, and had nothing for it but to stand there, and as the daylight came, watch the fine vessel—a noble one he said it was—knocked and thumped about; her masts, to which dozens of poor creatures clung, dipping into the raging water, until at last all gave way, and she broke to pieces, and men, and masts, and vessel, sank out of sight. But oh, Gatty! we know not what God in his mercy saved thee, and me, and mother, and all of us from. If father—if they had managed to even reach the ship, how could the boat ever have come back again? laden as it would have been with human beings, and with such a sea, and such wind!"

I was too young to know what to say to comfort her, and only stood beside the bed with wet cheeks and eyes, looking at her mournfully. I longed to say something, and at last bethought me of the one thing which I had never yet seen fail of soothing her, so in a low voice I begged her to pray. I did not think at the moment what to suggest as the subject of her prayer, but told her to ask God not to let her cry any more, that being the point just then most distressing to myself.

The sound of my voice, I suppose it was, more than my words, called her attention to me, and putting her arm around my neck, she kissed my wet cheek, and smiling sadly, told me she would, and begged me also to pray for her often—to pray that the merciful God would give her grace to bear her afflictions more patiently, and to be more grateful for the many great blessings he still spared her.

Now as Elsie was, in my opinion, the most perfect of human beings, I thought such petitions were very unnecessary. However, I did not gainsay her, and placing the tray near her hand, and the stick beside it on the bed, with which to knock on the floor in case she needed anything else (for our kitchen lay partly underneath this bedroom), I went down stairs again to get my own breakfast.

When we had all finished and father had said grace, as was always his custom, and gone out with brothers, I ran up and brought down Elsie's breakfast things to wash up and put away, and then helped mother to wash up and put away hers and ours, and did sundry other matters I was in the habit of for her; after which I returned to Elsie, and read my morning chapter in the Bible to her. I read very badly, to be sure, and had to spell all the long hard words; but then, you know, I was only learning to read; besides, it didn't put Elsie out at all—I mean my not reading well—for she seemed to nearly know the whole of the Bible by heart. And she explained the difficult parts of what I read, and then we prayed for its blessing upon our hearts and souls; and, as Elsie thought I was looking a little pale to-day, she sent me to ask mother if I might take a run on the hill or in the valley, to refresh myself.

"Yes," mother said, I might. So away I went very joyfully; for the weather was now quite bright and and warm again, and I was anxious to gather a bunch of beautiful wild flowers for poor Elsie, who I knew loved every blossom that grew.

Round and about our old house lay many an out-building that had fallen completely to ruin, hardly a roof remaining to any of them. Here and there also were deep, dungeon-like places, whose original use puzzled us all greatly. Father put it down they must have been cellars; and I don't see what else they could have been. One was a very frightful thing to look at in the dark. It was a deep black hole, with a narrow opening into it, and a steep flight of little earthy, half-worn-away steps to go down by.

Sam and Tom crept into it one day, carrying a lantern with them; but the darkness was so great, the little light was scarcely of any use, and it was only by groping all round the wall with the lantern they managed to make out the size and form of the place. It was large, and on one side was another opening that led to a smaller cellar or dungeo whichever it might be. After that day, however, when the strangeness and the fear had worn off, they often made excursions into the "black hole," as father called it, and frequently I went with them. Sometimes when I was out alone, and a shower of rain has come on, I have taken courage and even crept down in the dark, and stayed there until the rain was over.

LESSON XII—March 23, 1879.—THE ALL-SEEING GOD.

SCRIPTURE.—Psalms 139: 1-12.

1 O Lord, thou hast searched me and known me.
2 Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising;
Thou understandeth my thought afar off.
3 Thou compasseth my path and my lying down,
And art acquainted with all my ways.
4 For there is not a word in my tongue,
But, lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether.
5 Thou hast beset me behind and before,
And laid thine hand upon me.
6 Such knowledge is too wonderful for me;
It is high, I cannot attain unto it.
7 Whither shall I go from thy spirit?
Or whither shall I flee from thy presence?
8 If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there:
If I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there.
9 If I take the wings of the morning,
And dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;
10 Even there shall thy hand lead me,
And thy right hand shall hold me.
11 If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me;
Even the night shall be light about me.
12 Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee;
But the night shineth as the day:
The darkness and the light are both alike to thee.

"All-seeing God." When we perceive that the images of a vast number of objects enter in at the eye by a very small passage, and yet are so little jumbled in that crowd, that we gain a distinct apprehension of the many objects, some of which are at a vast distance, and of varied natures, sizes and colors....we shall find it less difficult to apprehend how an infinite mind should have a universal view of all things ever present before it.—Bishop Burnet.

"That Eye." A noted criminal was on trial in New York for stealing from stores. It was found that he had entered, or tried, every store in a certain portion of the city, excepting one. On being asked why he had passed that, he answered that he had been told of a great eye or opening in the ceiling of that store, and through it some one was always looking, and was sure to detect any thief trying to steal. But in all the world there is a great eye observing every wrong-doer, in whatever place he may be.

CONNECTION WITH THE LAST LESSON.

The spiritual connection with the last lesson is the joining of worship in spirit and in truth, to love for God's house. It is probably one of the psalms composed by David towards the end of his life. Others suppose it to belong to the time when he was made king over all Israel, and to have in view what is promised in 2 Sam. 7. The first six verses form one strophe, or stanza, showing the omniscience of God; the remaining six another strophe, showing his omnipresence.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

When did God see everything that he had made and find it good? What did God see in men's thoughts before the flood? What passages show us that Jesus saw what was in men's hearts? Where does the Lord challenge the false gods to prove their divinity by showing that they know the future? What kind of darkening is produced by uninstructed talking?

[From International Quarterly.]

What two things has God done? Who is thus searched and known? (verse 1.) How minute and careful is the search? verses 2-4.) Why are we thus searched and known? (Jer. 17:10.) What benefit is there in this? (verses 23:24.) What has God said concerning our thoughts? (Gen. 6:5; Mat. 15:9; Isa. 55:78.) What has he said concerning his thoughts? (Is. 55:9; Jer. 29:11-13.) What has he said about our ways? (Ps. 1:6: John 14:6.) What about the tongue? (Jos. 3:8-10) What controls the tongue? (Mat. 15:18) How can the evil be cured? (Ezek. 11:19, 20.)

What is the difference between seeing and watching? What kind of watching is this? How did God watch Israel in the sea? (Ex. 14:19, 20.) The pillar was his presence. Why do we need a watcher? Can you tell how his hand is laid upon us? (Neh. 2:8; 1 Pet. 5:6.) What is said of God's knowledge? (verse 6) Where can we go to escape from him? What lesson may we learn from this topic?

Repeat Ps. 32:8. What is meant by a guide? How did God guide Israel? (Ps. 106:39.44; and especially Isa. 63:9.) Why did they need a guide? What promise did God give to Moses? (Ex. 33.14) What to Isaiah? (Isa. 43:2.) What to those who believe in Jesus? (John 14:6; 10:9; 11:22.) Where will the guide lead us? (John 14:3.) What results will follow when we see him? (1 Cor. 15:51, 52; Phil. 3:1; 1 John 3:2; Ps. 17:15; Ps. 16:11) Why is the Christian always safe? Why is the sinner never safe?

"I remember hearing of a girl who went into her master's room, a room not much frequented, to steal. Now there was a portrait in the room, and the eyes of the portrait seemed to follow her wherever she went, and she felt annoyed by it; and, in order that she might steal without this rebuke, she took down the portrait and cut the eyes out. Poor, silly, wicked thing! If she could have plucked out God's eye, she might have sinned without remorse; but, so long as God's eye was upon her, it was a vain thing that the eye of the portrait could follow her no more. If the eye of man were on you it would keep you from indulging in sin. O, realize God's inspection over you!"—Wilson's "Scripture Doctrine."

Milton, as a young man, traveled much abroad; years afterward, he thus expressed himself: "I again take God to witness, that in all places where so many things are considered lawful, I lived sound and untouched from all profligacy and vice, having this thought perpetually with me, that, though I might escape the eyes of men, I certainly could not the eyes of God."—Masson's "Life of Milton."

It is said that Gen. O. M. Mitchell, the astronomer, once, looking through his telescope, saw a boy robbing a pear tree seven miles away. The boy was utterly unconscious of the eye that was upon him as sinners now are of the eye of God.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

STRUGGLES AND TRIUMPHS AT CHAMBERSBURG, PA.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—There are a great many of the members of the United Brethren church, especially in the West, who are aware that there has been a considerable difficulty in the church at this place (which has resulted in part of the church worshiping at another place); but who do not know the cause thereof. To that end I desire through your columns to present a few facts in order to show what nullificationists will do when they have the power.

About five years ago last November the late Bishop Edwards spoke here several times, when he used words to this effect: "When three or four secret society men are in a church they will either rule or ruin it." And if persons wish a demonstration of the assertion he made, all they have to do is to come to Chambersburg and be satisfied of the truthfulness thereof.

Several years ago the quarterly conference of this station on a motion, "That the Discipline be enforced," by a decided majority voted no; which vote they more fully enlarged on at the nullification conventions of Harrisburg, Pa., and Dayton, O.

At another session of the quarterly conference they put out of office four out of five trustees of the church property here, without any charges or complaint, but simply because three of them would not endorse the views of the majority. Of course they sacrificed one of their men so that it would not look to the public to be so revengeful. In their place they substituted men of their own stripe, such as could swallow the whole nullification dose with out straining.

These same men on several other occasions dismissed class-leaders and stewards, contrary to the Discipline, and for no crime known to the Discipline. The preacher himself being a leader among them, saying, "As regards their moral and official character they are all right, but they do not hear me preach, neither do they pay." That we would not hear nor support him we admit, and claim that under the circumstances we are justifiable, and would have been doing wrong had we done otherwise.

This same preacher had served us one year and owing to gross violation of Discipline, we represented to the annual conference that we would "neither hear nor support a man who would not uphold and defend our Discipline." The conference did not heed our paper, but sent the same man back again to do as he had done before, and we kept to our word because he stuck to his ways. We claim we had no right to pay a man for trying to injure the church and that that was no sufficient cause for setting aside leaders and stewards. They also set about and ordered the disorganizing of four classes, numbering in all more than one hundred members (contrary to Discipline), and when the said classes held their meetings regularly and were well attended and in good spiritual condition. They further ordered that there should be two new classes formed and that the members of the disbanded classes should join one of them, and they appointed officers for the same so as to be sure of the right kind of men. The reason they assumed to disband classes was, said classes would not elect officers of the stripe to suit them. All this illegal action was done with the consent of the presiding elder and the dismissing of officers in the presence of the Bishop of this district without one word against such action. If brethren from the far West were to visit some parts of the Eastern conferences they would hear some things that would make both their ears to tingle.

Now as to the the result of all this: As we could neither hear nor support the preacher sent among us we had to hold meetings by ourselves and for a long time we met in a private house, until last spring by the blessing of the Lord we were enabled to purchase a church property where we have been holding meetings since last May; and the Lord has abundantly blest us since we have been by ourselves with peace and harmony, and for the last seven weeks with a revival, about thirty-five being converted.

We are served in the ministry by such brethren who are not afraid of nullificationists, but who are in for the right and stand up manfully for the principles of the fathers of the church.

All the illegal action complained of has been appealed to the next General Conference, until which time we intend to patiently wait and try and do what we can for the Lord. If any of the brethren wish any information with regard to our affairs they can have the same by writing to the undersigned.

Yours in Christ,
GEO. BESSOR,
Chambersburg, Pa.

—Bishop Glossbrenner and Rev. M. Bulger of Greenville, Tennessee, agent of Edwards Academy, were both injured in a railroad accident at Chambersburg, Pa., on the 24th ult. The bishop was able to preside at the Virginia conference soon after.

—Rev. E. H. Caylor, who was at Hicksville, O,, during the recent expositions of Freemasonry, is agent of the Union Biblical Seminary, Dayton, and is meeting good success in his work.

—Bishop Milton Wright is arranging to minister to the spiritual necessities of any scattered Brethren in Texas and territories east of the mountains.

—The revival in Rev. J. M. Bishop's church, Chambersburg, Pa., has added 31 to the church, most of whom are heads of families.

FREE METHODIST.

—Bro. Edward Mathews is holding a series of meetings in Hudson, Michigan,in the Hall over Webster's flour and feed store at 2 and 7 P. M. daily. Bro. Mathews always preaches a Christianity well seasoned with the salt of true reform, and pushes his work into every unoccupied quarter he can reach. Let the friends in Hudson sustain him cheerfully.

—Sup't Roberts is preaching twice daily in San Francisco. Evidences of the good effect of his work is daily seen. The Free Methodist urges that prayer be continually offered for him.

—A new church has lately been occupied at Marion, Iowa, capable of seating three hundred and fifty. Last October the members numbered seven; now forty are enrolled.

—A revival accompanied the work of Rev. B. Burlington, at Mishawaka, Ind., and eight united with the church. The report in the Free Methodist says: "For three weeks we held the truth of God before the people. The devil raged not a little when sins were personated, such as secret orders, church gambling, festivals, Christmas trees, etc., etc. We found much opposition in a place like this where formalism has reigned for years, but God gave us victory—praise his name."

—Another blessed work has been going on in Gibson near Danville, N. Y., in which many conversions were experienced. One case is thus reported: "Among the converts was the hotel-keeper of the place, who was so powerfully convicted that he gave up his hotel keeping, tobacco, Freemasonry, with his life insurance connected with it, which cost him $250, with all it promised him in the future. He said to me that hereafter, instead of inquiring for Freemasons when among strangers, he should inquire after Free Methodists. A short time after his conversion (I think the next day), an old customer came into the tavern and inquired if he had any good whisky. He replied, 'Haven't got any.' 'Any good brandy?' 'Haven't any.' Have you got any good beer?' 'Not any.' Then with a profane expression, he said, 'What have you got?' 'The reply was, 'I have got salvation, glory to God.' This case is only one of many very remarkable cases among the converts there, a very large proportion of whom are heads of families, and the first men of the place."

—Bro. T. B. Arnold, associate editor of the Free Methodist, has recovered his usual health and is again at his desk in the office of that paper.

—Bro. A. J. Cook of Lime Springs, Iowa, writes of a good work of grace, saying: "We are now engaged in a protracted meeting and God is with us in power. Souls are being saved. Fifteen have been converted and reclaimed. J. S. Bradley, our pastor, is showing the line of separation between the church and the world and secrecy is feeling the power of his blows."

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Prof. E. D. Bailey of Wheaton College is now preaching regularly to the church in Tonica, Ill., whose pulpit was left vacant by the resignation of Bro. Henry Avery now of College Springs, Iowa.

—The little flock at Lisle in DuPage county, Ill., which was greatly strengthened by the labors of Bro. W. W. Warner, a student from Wheaton, has been ministered unto by a fellow student Brother Grinnell, brother of Rev. E. I. Grinnell of Blairsburg, Iowa, for some two months.

—The church at Farmington, Ill., is experiencing a temperance revival. The Gospel temperance work there is led by Mrs. E. B. Russell from this city, who is working under the orders of the Nat'l Christian Temperance Union. About two-thirds of the people have signed the pledge, those who have been drinkers are calling on God to help in earnest, and there have been several conversions. Mrs. Russell makes that clause of the pledge "God helping me," her grand theme, and every afternoon at 3 Christians gather for prayer that all may be brought to Christ. Old Farmington was never so stirred before and permanent results are confidently expected.

FREE BAPTIST.

—Elder Knapp is holding revival meetings in Dale, N. Y., which are attended with glorious results. On some evenings 40 or 50 are forward for prayers. Mrs. Knapp assists, also a Bro. Dennis and wife from Pike. A letter says: "The work has been going on for four or six weeks. Old gray-headed sinners were forward last night, pleading for mercy. The demon of Freemasonry has not a foothold in this church. Every church almost in the land has the mark of the 'Beast.' I took occasion last Sabbath in Bible School to enforce the injunction of David to 'Walk not in the council of the ungodly.'"

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Drs. H. P. McClurkin, of New Concord, O., A. M. Milligan, of Pittsburgh, and Rev. M. A. Gault, of Hazel Grove, Missouri, have all been speaking lately in the interest of the national religious reform. Their work met with great encouragement. Dr. R. A. McAyeal of Lawrence, Mass., Revs. R. J. George, of Mansfield, O., and S. Collins of the U. P. Board of Publication, Pittsburgh, are each expecting to speak for this reform during the present month.

—Rev. David McAllister resumed lately the course of lectures in Geneva College, Ohio, on Political Philosophy, the first part of which were given last year.

BAPTIST.

—Elder J. H. Austin of Burlington, Iowa, was laid up some three weeks from the blow received at the assault near the Union church. He was able to attend church on the 3d inst., but not to preach. The Union church is the one opened for the sittings of the ex parte council whose slanders have been ventilated in these columns. It has, moreover, transpired that it was purposed at this council, presided over by Dr. Whiting, to have the keys of their own church turned on Elder Austin and his people and shut them out of their own building, and also to prevent any reply on their part through the papers. Both these desperate attempts, however, signally failed in everything but to fasten greater obloquy upon the conspirators.

FRIENDS.

—A movement is in progress among the members of the Society of Friends in Philadelphia for the formation of settlements in the West, and active steps have already been taken. There have been many complaints, owing to the isolation of members of the Society in different parts of the West, that they were gradually losing interest in the principles and customs of their sect, and by these settlements it is hoped to bring them together. It is the intention to form an association which shall purchase tracts of land and sell farms and lots to Friends, or those in sympathy with them, and also to aid persons whose means are limited with help in the erection of dwellings and other necessary things in their settlements. The association will lay out roads, and erect meeting-houses and school buildings. In all deeds a clause will be inserted prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

—Lawrie Tatum, of Springdale, Iowa, who is expected to set out on his mission to the Indian agencies about the 18th inst., is spoken of by Secretary Schurz in a letter on Indian policy as "one of the first and worthiest agents appointed under the peace policy of Prest. Grant." His opinion is very positive that the proximity of a detachment of the army to an Indian agency was full of danger. The moral and Christian influence of the Indian agent is almost entirely vitiated by the lecherous soldiers.

GENERAL.

—It is said that the late Princess Alice of Hesse Darmstadt, who was for a time an ardent admirer of Strauss, completely changed her religious views some years before her death. On being asked the cause, she said, "A poor Scotch Christian talked to me about the Gospel; and since then I have been able to say I am saved."

—The Massachusetts Legislature has been petitioned for a law providing that no church which promotes lotteries shall hold its property exempt from taxation. At a hearing the other day the Rev. William Barrow, D.D., who is Secretary of the Home Missionary Society, said he understood "raffles to be a sort of kid-glove term for lotteries;" and churches which nullified the law slapped, he said the Legislature in the face and cuffed the Revised Statutes. The Rev. J. C. Foster, Methodist, took the same ground. The Rev. Mr. Whittaker, Methodist, said that in his churches the fairs had been held without lotteries, and the receipts had been about the same. The taxation of church property has also come up in the Connecticut Legislature in the shape of a bill providing for the taxation of all property of educational, religious and benevolent organizations which is not used for the purposes of such organization. Heretofore it has been exempt.

News of the Week.

—The criminal court in this city sent Angell, the absconding treasurer of the Pullman Car Company, to the penitentiary for ten years—the extreme penalty of the law. Angell had repented and made a full confession. Over $100,000 was stolen, most of which will be recovered.

—Last Tuesday Congress having adjourned at noon, without passing the appropriation for necessary government expenses, President Hayes issued a proclamation calling an extra session March 18th.

—The bodies of W. W. Chisolm, his daughter Cornelia, and his son John, all victims of the Chisolm massacre in Kemper county, Mississippi, were interred at Lock Haven, Pa., on Thursday. Not one of the murderers has been punished.

Mrs. Elizabeth Leonard, widow of Thomas Leonard, lately died at Graniteville, S. C., at the great age of 107 years. At her funeral was her only surviving son, over 80 years of age, and there also stood around the grave a grandchild 56 years old, several great-grandchildren over 40 years of age, great-great-grandchildren 25 years old, and a number of great-great-great-grandchildren—six generations in all. There are living at present eighty of her descendants and 210 have died.

—The free high schools of Maine have been closed, or are to be closed, by legislative enactment. The Republicans are in the minority.

—It is reported the Democrats at the recent election in Kingston, N. Y., took forcible possession of the polls, prevented their opponents from voting, and so conducted themselves that the Republican inspector of elections withdrew and many Republicans abandoned all attempts to cast their ballots.

—There is a proposition before the Missouri Legislature to divide the State into two, making the line the Missouri river, extended westward. This would give forty-seven counties to the northern section, and sixty-seven counties and the city of St. Louis to the southern section. Both States, according to the St. Louis Republican, would be Democratic.

—Julius Blum, the Austrian Jew whom the Egyptian Khedive has raised to the rank of Pacha and made Assistant Secretary of State, is said to be the first Israelite who has held so high a position in Egypt since Joseph's time.

—A dispatch from the Herald correspondent at Tashkend, says: "The Afghan ambassadors have been notified that their powers have expired. They will, therefore, return shortly to Yakoob Kahn, who is said to be still at Cabul. The official report of Dr. Javarsky would go to show that Shere Ali died a natural death. No autopsy was made. The Ameer died on the 21st of February, after ten days' agony. His sufferings were mitigated, as far as was in his power, by the Russian doctor, Javarsky, who was sent for at the last moment. Immediately after the Ameer's death massacres were begun by the three rival parties, those of Yakoob Khan, the present occupant of the throne; Azim Khan, Shere Ali's brother, and the dead monarch's nephew. The second named was Governor of Mazar-I-Shariff. He is now a prisoner, and his house has been delivered up to pillage. The party of Yakoob Khan having been victorious he appointed a new governor, who, at ten o'clock on the evening of the 22nd, sent and released Dr. Javarsky, the Russian surgeon, who had been thrown into prison.

—A Paris dispatch says a report recommending the impeachment of the Ministry of the 16th of May and the Rochebuet Ministry will be presented to the Chamber of Deputies Saturday, and the Ministry will demand that the debate be fixed for Monday or Tuesday. The committee arrived at its decision notwithstanding the remonstrances of Ministers Waddington, Leroy and Lepere, who attended the last sitting, and declared that they were more than ever opposed to impeachment.

—A famine is raging in the most fertile portion of Bolivia. In the district of Cochabamba in different localities of the department from eight to ten persons die daily of starvation. In one small town 206 persons died from want of food in twenty days.

—The principal speech in the debate on the parliamentary discipline bill in the Reichstag Friday was made by Herr Windhorst, leader of the Prussian Catholic party, who declared that the clericals were ready to support the Chancellor in the struggle against the socialists, but he disapproved of the means suggested. Herr Windhorst suggested co-operation of church and state instead of the state attempting to crush the Socialists with one hand and persecute the church with the other. Main force, he said, was powerless against the Socialists. He hoped he would not live to see the explosion which would follow repressive measures.

General Melikoff telegraphs to St. Petersburg that the foreign physicians, at a meeting held in Wetliakna, have declared that the epidemic may be considered to have died out, as there has been no case since the 9th of February, but as it is impossible to guarantee that it may not reappear, especially at Wetlianka, they recommend a continuance of certain precautions. The cordon around the government of Astrakan which the foreign physicians judged no longer necessary, has been withdrawn.

Home and Farm.

AN EXAMPLE FROM HEATHENDOM.

Edward S. Morse, writing in the Popular Science Monthly of the habits of the Japanese, makes this reference to their treatment of animals: "My attention was called to the very important service performed by the crows and a kind of hawk which act as scavengers. We are so accustomed at home to find these birds especially wild and wary, that it is a somewhat startling sight to see them perching on the buildings in a crowded city like Tokio, and swooping down in front of you in quest of food which might otherwise decay and vitiate the atmosphere. The destructiveness and brutality, generally speaking, of the children of Christian nations, lead to the stoning of dogs, cats and birds of all kinds. In Japan such a thing is unknown, and a stone thrown at a dog (I speak from experience) is generally answered by an inquiring look, hens hop out of the way, and even cats do not take the hint! In other words, the crows and hawks are never molested, and the result is that all carrion and other stuff left in the streets are pounced upon and carried off immediately.

A TAG FOR KEROSENE CANS.

Professor Burt G. Wilder of Cornell University, has patented what he calls a "Kerosene Warning-Tag," to be attached to all packages of oil On its reverse side the professor gives these timely hints as to the proper use of kerosene oil and lamps: "Buy the best oil. The lower priced varieties are apt to be more volatile and explosive. Have your glass lamps securely hung. Select those in which the end of the burner is elevated considerably above the lamp. Lamps to be carried should be of metal, have handles, and be of some 'safety' pattern. Fill the lamps by daylight, and never while lighted. If obliged to fill them at night, have the light at least a yard off, and not in a current of air. Lamps should be filled daily, and never lighted when partly empty. Never carry a glass lamp lighted. A lamp with the wick turned down is more liable to explode. Keep the can closed, and in a safe place. Never pour oil on the fire. If burning oil gets upon the floor, smother it with a woolen blanket, rug, carpet, or clothing. If the clothing takes fire, wrap a blanket or rug about the person, or roll upon the floor."

SUNSHINE AND SLEEP.—Sleepless persons should court the sun. The very worst soporific is laudanum and the very best sunshine. Therefore, it is very plain that poor sleepers should pass as many hours as possible in the sunshine, and as few as possible in the shade. Many women are martyrs and yet they do not know it. They shut the sunshine out of their houses and their hearts, they wear veils, they carry parasols, they do all possible to keep off the most potent influence which is intended to give them strength, and beauty and cheerfulness. Is it not time to change all this, and so get color and roses in our cheeks, strength in our weak backs, and courage in our timid souls? The women of America are pale and delicate, but with the aid of sunlight they may be blooming and strong.

THE HENS' MEETING.—There is a story told of a certain country grocer who was in the habit of buying his eggs from a widow woman named Mrs. Jones, at the rate of eighteen cents a dozen. One day he devised an ingenious scheme, and promulgated it to the aforesaid Mrs. Jones, by informing her that the grocers of the country towns in the vicinity had held a meeting and determined to pay only fifteen cents per dozen for eggs thereafter. The scheme worked to a charm, and by successive reports of fictitious grocers' meetings, the unhappy Mrs. Jones was induced to reduce her eggs to twelve, and even ten cents per dozen, respectively. But there the old lady stuck, and on the appearance of the imaginative grocer with the report of another meeting, she burst forth with, "Now, Mr. Brown, this can't go on any longer. The hens have had a meetin', and they've concluded that they won't lay eggs for less'n ten cents a dozen for all the grocers in the country—there!" This settled the egg question.

A CURE FOR HOG CHOLERA.—A farmer who had suffered from the loss of over one hundred hogs this year, has a remedy which he says cures in every case. My informant is Mr. G. W. Baker, of Chapman's Creek, Clay county; P. O. Wakefield. He breaks a box of concentrated lye into a barrel of clean water and when the lye is dissolved, gives it to the hogs to drink. Mr. B. said he had in his feeding lot, a hog which would weigh four hundred pounds, so near dead that he thought it useless to try to save him, but on second thought said try anyhow. So he rolled him on to his back and poured a pint of the liquid made a trifle stronger than that in the barrel, down his throat, and in less than an hour porker was on his feet, cracking corn nearly as lively as ever.—Kansas Farmer.

Rev. Wm. W. Blanchard, Paxton, Ill., will give one dollar to a fund to pay for Cynosures for ministers unable to take it. He mentions two who have expressed a wish to read it but are not able to pay for it. Mrs. Annie Dupriez, Osage City. recently sent $3.00 which has already been appropriated and hopes to add another $1.50 soon. David Hinman, Southington, Hartford Co., Conn., writes: "I hope the liberality of some man will be moved to send a yearly subscription of the Cynosure to every Christian minister of the Gospel in the State of Connecticut.

Red Clover Tea

A Cure for All Blood Diseases.

I am seventy years of age, am in good health for one of my years. Fourteen years since I had Scirrhus Cancer. Tea made from Red Clover Blossoms cured me. I have advised its use in many bad cases of Salt Rheum and it has proved a success. By permission I refer to Capt. David H. Small, No. 44 Winchester Ave., Chicago, who was cured by the use of clover tea of a cancer in the stomach after being pronounced incurable by physicians. I will gladly impart all the information in my power, and no charge, when a stamp is sent. I have the clover picked in full bloom and cured the same day with the Alden Dryer. It is not possible to have it better; also the Extract, equally good.

PHILO CARPENTER, Pres.
J. P. STODDARD, Sec'y.

—Bro. S. E. Orvis of the National Soldiers' Home, Milwaukee, Wis., has kindly copied for us a large part of the article on Freemasonry from Appleton's revised encyclopedia. Though many of the statements are not new yet the publication of all or a part will be of interest to such of our readers as have not access to that work, and we shall endeavor to find a place for it soon.

Topics of the Time.

We seem to be walking over the same cinder crust which broke through eighteen years ago into the volcano of the rebellion. The Forty-sixth Congress promises to be such a convention as twenty years ago in those same halls prepared the way for a "Let us alone" secession. But there was some conscience then concerning the main point at issue and its representatives, men like Sumner, Seward, Wilson, Chase and Giddings, fought for the eternal principles of right, and in the trial hour found the nation at their back. The assembly of politicians from the North and ex-brigadiers from the South meeting this week in Washington presents no cheerful view to the nation. There is sectional strife as before, but it is all in the name of party. No great principle is involved, or is likely to be called up; but no one supposes that the roots of bitterness now for years strengthened in our soil will be pulled up. No wise legislation, no measures of justice toward the poor, nothing is expected from this Congress that shall quench the smouldering fires of war. We can almost say that the President might well have been excused from calling such an assembly together, notwithstanding the demands of the Constitution, which are doubtless wise as a rule, but which may be believed to have exceptions.

If Congress is bad the Southern churches are in a no more hopeful state. A correspondent of the New York Times says: "The Southern pastor brave enough to preach against the inhuman and ungodly practices of the Ku Klux and the White League has yet to be heard from." But there are such Southern pastors and Southern papers too — thanks be to God — though they be few. But wherein are the great bulk of our churches at the North any better. Were they transferred to the South is there conscience enough left to oppose and overthrow these "assassins of Freemasonry?" They dare not even meet the lodges of the North, where we boast at least that conscience and speech is free. It does little good to reprove the Southern pastors while at home we cannot meet a less formidable evil. How shall we of the North see clearly to cast out the sins of our brethren at the South while such beams obscure our sight?

The Philadelphia Union League the headquarters of what remains of that order, has apparently no longer any mission to save the country or to keep it in a safe condition, but has taken up with small politics and billiards. The other day to assist in keeping the organization together by giving it employment, the introduction of cards was proposed, but was rejected by a vote 217 for to 230 against. A correspondent of the Christian Instructor says that since the war it has had no influence "for patriotism or public probity." Respectability and intelligence no longer control it, but have been superseded by "pot-house politicians and ward strikers," while pool, billiards and other methods of gambling are the customary amusements. Such is the end of the secret order which above all others was capable of vindication.

The question of enforcing the State law against saloon opening on the Sabbath has been before the Chicago aldermen for some time. Pending their decision the liquor dealers have been visited and generally express themselves in favor of closing but want no discrimination. Last week the majority and minority report of its committee was read to the City Council both favoring the enforcement of the law. Fifteen thousand citizens petitioned for a city ordinance under which the Mayor and police could act, and the favorable action thus far taken promises much for the good order and morals of Chicago. If the saloons close theaters should be made to follow suit.

The Brooklyn Presbytery of the Presbyterian church have undertaken to discipline the erractic Talmage of Brooklyn; and a committee has been appointed to prosecute him on the following charges: "Deceit and falsehood in statements regarding his withdrawal from the editorship of the Christian at Work. In stating that the sittings in the Tabernacle were free. Of accusing J. W. Hathaway of dishonest practices and then denying it. Of falsehood in collecting subscriptions to pay the church debt. Of deceit in the difficulty concerning the organist of the Tabernacle, and of stating that he was to be arraigned for hetrodoxy, when he knew that such was not the case." The confident attitude of Mr. Talmage makes it a question whether the presbytery is trying him or he the presbytery. Meantime the case does not gain importance when three witnesses for the prosecution protest through the papers against the use of their names in the business and declare they know nothing in support of the charges. Mr. Talmage's eccentric course has in many respects been prejudicial to religion, but the presbytery would have done well to have waited for a stronger case before proceeding to extreme measures.

No one will accuse Miss Willard, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Illinois of lacking ability and energy in prosecuting the "Home Protection Petition" to allow women to vote on temperance issues. In company with several colleagues she presented a petition signed by 110,000 names to the representatives at Springfield in a ringing speech; and now she calls on the women of Illinois for 40,000 names more to take in addition before the Senate. The liquor interests in Illinois must soon show the white flag, or follow the Mormons into an unmolested wilderness.

There is a marked expression of sympathy for the Romanist Archbishop Purcell in his bank failure by the papers which barely two years ago were denouncing the broken down bankers of Chicago. The losses of the Cincinnati failure are estimated at $6 000,000, more than all the half dozen savings institutions here. The money power of the priesthood is something to be dreaded even if it is not respected. The New York Catholic Protectory, in its report for 1878 acknowledges the receipt of $227,673.32 from the city treasury; $8,563 41 from the Commissioners of Charities and Correction, and $50,000 from the State, of which not less than $20,000 was paid by the taxpayers of the city. This one institution, therefore, had $286,256.73 of the public money, and of this, $256,236.73 was taken from the tax-payers of the city. There were expended by the commissioners of the charities of the city in 1877, $761,123.22; hence the Romish Protectory receives from the public funds more than one third the amount spent by the public charities of the city. Another case is that of New Mexico, whose legislature under the control of the Jesuits incorporated a body of the Jesuit fathers with power to hold land to an indefinite amount, exempt from taxation. The bill was passed over the veto of Governor Axtell, but has been stopped by Congress.

Ode to Liberty.

BY GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

——— Jamque arva tenebant,
Ardentesque oculos suffecti sanguine et igni,
Sibila lambebant linguis vibrantibus ora.
——— Et jam
Pis medium amplex, bis collo squamea circum
Terg. dati, superant capite et cervicibus altis.
—[Virgil's description of the death of Laocoon.]

When the genius of Freedom
Crossed over the sea,
She made of New England
The home of the free.

Men honored the Sabbath:
On their mouths laid the hand,
As God in his silence
Passed over the land.

The church and the school-house
Stood then as the gate,
By which all men entered
The heavenly estate.

Peace and prosperity
Shone over each home,
Till the kingdom as prayed for,
Seemed to have come.

But lo! two snakes followed
Our fair Liberty!
The LODGE and CONFESSIONAL
Came over the sea.

They seized priests and deacons;
Enfolded them quite,
And hissed o'er their shoulders,
In cunning and spite—

Smeared over the Bible
With venom and blood;
Then crawled to the temple
Where Liberty stood.

O Liberty! fair Liberty,
Once held so divine!
What monsters doth now
Thy temple enshrine?

Lay open thy altars,
And let the world see
What monsters they're feeding
While worshiping thee.

A Suggestive Charge.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

It is sometimes instructive to scan the complaints of our accusers and behold how their charges against us point at their own vitals. Truth is a unit and "light maketh manifest" and every effort to suppress them recoils on the antagonist. We here allude to the charge so often repeated and in some minds so potent, "Opposition to the lodge disturbs the peace of the churches." This charge is most frequently made by those who know and often concede that speculative Freemasonry is a system of infidelity. Does opposing infidelity disturb the church? Why? It could not disturb a church free from infidelity; but would disturb one half of whose members belong to some infidel fraternity. Here then is the significant and revolting facts involuntarily and inadvertently avowed by our accusers, viz., Resisting an infidel system disturbs our churches.

When the churches of our land were filled with slaveholders and their sympathizers, agitating the question of making merchandise of the souls and bodies of Christ's little ones disturbed the harmony of the churches; but since God has wiped out the foul spot few would now be disturbed by agitation of the question, and hence the necessity of agitating it passes away. The fact that opposition to an abomination excites and disturbs a class of people argues the necessity of such opposition. Had we any doubt before whether this opposition to Masonry and its brood were needed, those doubts are now dispersed by the outcry of secretists and their sympathizers intrenched in our Zion. Do not our accusers see that the fact they are so forward to proclaim sounds out in trumpet notes the dire necessity of routing the lodge viper from the churches. The viper is in the church, hence when he is opposed the church feels the shock. What then? Why, let him alone to breed his serpentine armies in our beloved Zion and so let us have peace! If Romanism, Mormanism, pantheism, deism, any ism, no matter what, is intrenched in the church, let it alone. We must have peace. For peace and harmony in the church let Lot in Sodom conform to the customs of his city; let Noah conform to the antediluvians; Daniel to the abominations of old Babylon; Christ and his followers to the sins of Jerusalem and Judea; Paul to the abominations of Corinth and Ephesus and so foster the spirit of peace among men.

Oppose intemperance in a liquor cursed church and you disturb the church; so if we oppose the systems of false worship in lodge-ridden churches men of the lodge will cry out, "What have we to do with hee? Let us alone. Why hast thou come to torment us before the time." Now this outcry shows the guilty complicity of the church with the lodge. We have several Christian bodies, to their praise be it said, which entirely disfellowship the lodge. It does not at all disturb these worthy bodies when secretism is discussed by their pastors. They are free from these infidel fraternities and feel no shock when they are exposed and put in their true light.

But we are often reminded that we do not oppose the lodge wisely. We are expected to so oppose it as not to offend its votaries. We must so oppose them as to even get their good will, if not to call out their enthusiastic praise! Had the sages who make such demands only lived in the days of the old prophets to show them how to get along more smoothly, Micah, Elijah, Jeremiah and John the Baptist might have escaped a world of trouble. Even the beloved disciple and Jesus himself failed of the tact to please the wicked by faithfully telling them the truth. Can good men, can angels, or even God himself contend with wicked men who adhere to their sins in a way to please them or not to kindle their wrath and opposition? All experience is against such a supposition. Angels tried their skill on the Sodomites and the brutes sought to violate the celestial ones and were restrained by a miracle. God's loving Son spent three years in pouring out his infinite love on fallen humanity, and received the death of the cross from their hands. Our accusers pay us too high a tribute, and one which even Divinity itself does not claim, when they ask us so to resist evil as to get the good will of its persistent votaries. All history, sacred and profane, controverts such absurd hopes. Reproofs, by whomsoever administered, have but two results: turning with disgust from the sin reproved, as David and Peter; or with malice and wrath against the reproof and its agent, as Ahab and Jezebel against the prophet Elijah. Apply this rule to the lodge worships of these days and we can see what it is that disturbs the churches.

The Mistake of our Higher Life Friends.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

I thoroughly sympathize with those excellent brethren who are laboring to promote a higher type of Christian character in the churches. Such is my object also. I only criticise what seems to me a wrong method.

Most of those who are engaged in this work preach holiness as an abstract doctrine, and fail to apply it to the actual sins of the church. "Make the heart right (say they) and the life will correspond." "Our mission is to teach holiness as a general principle, and not in detail. We cannot stop to discuss the relation of this doctrine to dress, the use of tobacco, Freemasonry and the like." "We leave these things to every one's conscience." "We only insist that men seek for the blessing of a pure heart, and this will result in an upright life." "Others may have a special calling to point out specific sins, but that is not our work." The mistake is in supposing that we can ever persuade men to repent of the sins which by our failure to reprove we practically endorse.

The Bible rebukes specific sins. It teaches men to be holy by forsaking all sin. Isaiah was a teacher of a higher life, and God said to him, "Lift up thy voice like a trumpet and show my people their transgressions and the house of Israel their sins" (Isa. 58:1), and he proceeded to point out the sins of those who had been reputed as most truly religious. Nathan was a higher life preacher, but he did not exhort David simply in general terms. "Thou art the man," was the telling application that brought him to repentance. Both Jesus and Paul told men of their specific sins, and then called on them to repent. Paul wrote Titus specifying certain sins that he was to preach against and adds, "Rebuke them sharply that they may be sound in the faith" (Titus 1:13).

Now, either the old prophets and apostles were wrong, or brothers McDonald, Inskip, etc., have made a great mistake. They know that multitudes of their brethren in the ministry are Freemasons. They know that Masonry is wicked; that it is contrary to the simplicity and openness enjoined by the Gospel; that it unequally yokes believers with unbelievers; that it establishes a spurious system of benevolence; and if they do not know that its oaths are blasphemous and its religion false and Christless, it is because they are willingly ignorant, for all these facts are in the text-books of Masonry, which are accessible to all, and are sustained by the the united testimony of many eminent Christian men.

O for the faithfulness of the old prophets who rebuked popular as well as unpopular sins, and who taught the fear of the Lord, not by the precepts of men, but by the Word of God!

Statistics of Masonry.

BY C. P. DOW.

Who can tell us the present number of the hood-winked, cable-towed, aproned fraternity? In other words, how many "free and accepted Masons" are there; fellows of "the mystic tie." We have the report of "the craft" for ten years ago. Then the grand total was put down as follows: "The Masonic order at present (1869) contains about 1,300,000 members. Of this number about 150,000 are in England, 100,000 in Scotland, and 50,000 in Ireland." England was the birthplace of Masonry of the Blue Lodge order, and 1717 the date of its birth. 'Twas here it wore its swaddling bands, and from here it issued forth to the continent, to France and other countries. We speak here of the theoretical, the speculative, the worthless kind,—language is too tame, we mean the damaging kind, that which is an unmitigated curse to our world, one of the wily forces of evil. On the continent of Europe at the time of the above estimate, there were about 600,000—in the United States 300,000, and in other parts of the world 50,000, and the number in India was then put down as 50,000. At this time the number must be greater; it is on the increase, sad to tell, and one of the greatest perils of this most "perilous" hour; and he that prevents one from crossing the threshhold of a lodge, may by thus doing save a soul from death! I have hindered some, and mean to continue the work, God being my helper. Let us earn the tribute paid to the woman in the Gospel by one who knew "she hath done what she could." Let us do what we can in a legitimate way. Be intelligent, kind and firm in the cause of reform, and our influence will tell and our "mites" be acceptable. May God speed the the right, and may many be saved from the snare.

Let some one who can supplement these statistics, and bring them down to the present. I see the following in an old Masonic journal, The Craftsman: "An old gentleman in Ohio has predicted a war in 1873 with the Masons. The prediction was spiritually communicated to him "on a hen's egg" which he took from the nest while yet warm from the hen; at least so says one of our exchanges. If true, the warfare will probably be carried on by cackling." Well, the war has commenced, and is being carried on vigorously, and if it is only cackling it puts wry faces upon the Masons, and is telling against them seriously. Let the fight wax hotter.

The Political Dangers of Canada.

BY A SCOT.

In the Dominion of Canada the province of Ontario must continue to be the most attractive and most influential in its inter-colonial relations. Quebec, formerly Lower Canada, may continue to be the standard of measurement, as it were, for the growth of the dominion at large, its representatives being fixed at 65, yet the relative influence has been changing by the more rapid increase of the population in the other provinces, particularly Ontario; so that while Qubec had once the decided preponderance over Ontario, the sceptre has gradually been withdrawing, and since the federation of the Dominion her people have often manifested great uneasiness at their loss of power.

It has been no small task to conduct the government, and, in fact, it was found a vast relief to the Dominion Parliament that Quebec should have her own way entirely in regard to the disturbing questions of Catholic schools, etc., which were in a minority in other provinces. Romanism ruled and rules Quebec, and was ambitious to rule the Dominion, but was bought off as it were, by supremacy among her own French, and the intended extension of her peculiar privileges over the province of Manitoba as a new sphere of action. But the immigration of other elements soon brought strife there, and the story of "Westward, ho!" will be told there as elsewhere on the continent, in the ultimate overwhelming of every obstacle to the supremacy of the true principles of civil and religious liberty. It was something like slavery extension before the war.

As in nature there are occasional storms during vegetation, so in the growth of human freedom these occasional commotions of the body politic, these agitations, tend to purify the atmosphere and to strengthen the roots of the trees which will yield the best fruit for the community. The questions of supreme importance become most prominent, and what is best for the ultimate good of the person and society becomes the appeal to the voter. It is of comparatively small importance which merely partizan candidate may gain his seat for the moment, but it is imperative that the general policy shall be in harmony with the will of the whole people and in accordance with the fundamental principles which alike distinguish the general governments of the Dominion and of the United States and of Great Britain. Adverse to such principles are those of several European countries and especially those which are generally understood by the one word, popish.

Ontario, however, is happily free from all agitation on first principles. These were settled at the time of her rebellion in 1837–8, and responsible government, or having the administration in harmony with the Legislature, took the place of the family compact or the church and state Tory faction which arrogated to itself the monopoly of loyalty to "British Connection." Since then Ontario has been at perfect peace as regards her principles of government, and has gone on prosperously. Her boundaries have only recently been settled—from east to west from the Ottawa to Lake of the Woods, it extends over a thousand miles, and from the St. Lawrence and the lakes to Hudson's Bay. Its area is greater than that of Great Britain and Ireland twice told. She is to the Dominion what New York State is to the Union. Her population has quadrupled since the union with Quebec, and her fertile soil is capable of sustaining tens of millions of inhabitants.

As a whole the Dominion has good prospects of material prosperity. Her great danger seems to be from the compactness and political strength of the Catholics and the consequent temptation to the trimming politicians to barter principles for power. Too often one evil begets another, and as the power of the priesthood works through its own machinery at elections and in the government, there is thus furnished a plausible excuse to form similar machinery to counteract them. Hence the danger of popularizing secret societies. Hence Orangeism flourishes in Canada and other isms build on the same foundation of secrecy. Is not our danger very similar?

If the time shall ever come when Romanism and Orangeism shall take the field on this continent, or try, like Mormonism to occupy some chosen ground in this country or in priest-ridden Quebec, there will no doubt be vast numbers of recruits to each from all parts of the continent. We are not of those who believe this inevitable, but have strong faith in the power of the higher free speech laws which reign through our civil and religious freedom among the people. We say, however, that it behooves our people to be wide awake; for unless the despotisms of secret societies, these secret governments within our open government, are blighted by the people's frown; unless their strength is impaired, or like rotten ice it melts away under the glorious sunlight, there may be—nay, there must necessarily be great danger. We need not name Molly Maguires and socialists. New names are swarming! But the true remedy for all is education of the people to love and obey the Lord Jesus Christ and appreciate the blessings of our civil and religious liberty.

Analysis of the Book of Job.

BY REV. HUNTINGTON LYMAN, TRIANGLE, N. Y.

The Book of Job is like nothing else in the Bible. It is a book whose isolated texts it will not answer to trust for doctrine. So the Lord himself has warned us.

ANTIQUITY.

The Book of Job is probably the oldest of our scriptures. It knows nothing of the oppressions of Egypt, or of the journeyings of Israel from Egypt, or of any occurrence or person of a later date. It does know about the flood. The probability is very strong that it was written prior to the Exodus.

JOB A REAL CHARACTER.

Not a few persons have been inclined to expunge the personality of Job, but we must not do so unless we go much further. The apostle James calls him up to our memory saying, "ye have heard of the patience of Job." Further the Lord certifies his personality when in Ezekiel he says, "though Noah, Daniel and Job were in it they should deliver but their own souls."

WRITER OF THE BOOK.

Who wrote the book? It was certainly no common man. It was written by some one of a class but sparingly scattered along the ages. Such men are not multiplied. Carlisle thinks there was no duplicate for the writer of Job.

Internal evidence viewed negatively shows us that the book was not written in Palestine. Indeed if the antiquity of the production is where we have placed it, we hardly need entertain the claim of Palestine. There is no allusion in it to Lebanon or Carmel, or Jezreel, or Gilgal, or Philistia, or the great sea. There are no animals, or industries, or modes of life alluded to which are peculiar to Palestine. The allusion to manners, modes of life and passing scenes, indicate that the writer was at home in Arabian scenery. He knew the habits of the ostrich, the camel, the predatory Bedaween, the wild ass. the troops Teman. He was also familiar with Egypt. He presents us the light skiffs that shoot along the Nile, the crocodile and the papyrus. I know a man who was born and educated and spent forty years there, a man of great ability and who also had a residence in Arabia where he spent forty years. History knows but one such man who had the ability to produce such a book, and that man was Moses. Until some claimant appears who can show better credentials, let us assign to Moses the seat of the Great Unknown.

SATAN'S INTRODUCTION.

The mystery of Satan, and that he should appear mixed with the sons of God, has been deemed so improbable, that the whole story has been relegated by some to the region of fiction. For my part I have too little respect for any objection based as this manifestly is, upon ignorance, to be checked by it.

The repetition of such appearances and such impudence as here is attributed to Satan, occurs too often in the most prosaic form, to allow that the objection be entitled to much consideration. The sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord and Satan came also among them.

THE REASONS FOR JOB'S SUFFERINGS.

At this stage of the argument I will content myself with stating the one potent reason for Job's sufferings.

It was the postulate set forth at the outset by Job's three friends, and to which they adhered throughout the argument, that his sufferings were for punishment. But we, who have read what God testified concerning Job before the friends arrived, know better. "Thou moved'st me to destroy him without a cause," said God.

Well, the average theologian knows but one alternative, and he says, "O if it be not for punishment then it must be for discipline." There too the fact of the case meets the average theologian in the face and disputes him. "Why," says the average theologian, "I am sure if the child be not a boy it is a girl, and I was just as sure that if infliction comes with God's permission, if it be not for punishment it is always for discipline. Pray what was it for?"

The answer to that question lies right upon the surface of the record. I pause here to say that at this point is something to notice, as it brings us to one cardinal teaching and utility of the book.

Job's terrible suffering was not for punishment nor for discipline, albeit that in some sense they were ruled to that end. It is notable because it shows that in the case of Job (and who knows but in our case) the trials of probation may have a reason beyond our possible reach and so profoundly hidden in the deep of God as to elude discovery and guess. We cannot suppose Job given up to the malignant caprice of Satan, with no worthy end to subserve. We cannot suppose Job to have been made a subject of experiment after the fashion of naturalists who dissect frogs and puppies in the interests of science. What was it then? Pray keep us no longer in suspense. I answer it was a test case, a point in the nature of a wager between God and Satan. It was a test case. Satan held to the William Tweed maxim, "there is no disinterested virtue in the world. Every man can be bought or driven." The Lord said, "Satan, hast thou considered my servant Job a perfect and upright man?" Satan replied virtually, "It is all in the veneering. Give me a chance and my word shall be verified." The issue was joined on this basis.

Can we suppose that any sentiment, or complaint, or opinion in hell influences God in heaven? The dealing of God with Job looks as though that question must be answered affirmatively. Now we do not care what opinion prevails in hell concerning us, but God does. Satan complained of partiality so it is implied in his address. "Hast thou not made a hedge about him? Thou hast blessed the work of his hands and his substance is increased. That accounts for his piety."

"Do you really think so, Satan? Then you have liberty to test the point."

TERRIBLE INFLICTION.

The next chapter presents Job in the mortar and Satan with pestle in hand. Satan whistled and brought up the Sabeans and the Chaldeans. Being prince of the power of the air, he raised a tornado with mighty thunderings and lightnings, and property melted away. Servants were all destroyed, a wind whirling and careering over the desert smote the house where all of Job's children were assembled, and the patriarch was childless. Here ended the first act. A terrible act it was. Satan thought that he had achieved a victory. He had exhausted his commission and to his dismay he saw Job flat on the ground indeed and just caught the last sentence of his submissive adoration. "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord."

Chagrined and so far defeated, remembering how he had succeeded with Adam, he could not give over, he had to sue for an extension of his commission. The Lord yielded that point also. "He is in thy power, only spare his life." And now all Satanic ingenuity is brought into requisition to devise ways of torture for body and soul of the victim. Disease, loathsome in type, agonizing to the sense, covered the skin and permeated the fibres. Where can the sufferer look for the solicitous sympathy required if not to her nearest to him in domestic relation? Can her wifely instincts devise no better solace than that most revolting to the moral sense? "Curse God and die." Such was her prescription But the suffering most malignant, continuous and insufferable, came when Satan whistled and brought together three friends from three different tribes. Nothing is so dreadful to a sick man as Job was, as a groundless accusation bolstered by false theology. The dogma that the three friends brought to Job was that the suffering that God allows upon men in this world is a punishment for sins and an exact measure of their sins. As the practitioner verifies the condition of the gross body by the indications of the little pulse, so Zophar and Bildad, from the magnitude of the calamity, reasoned to the blackness of the sin. When they looked upon Job and saw the unexampled misery of his condition, it was to them as if his heart had been laid open, in which they read his unexampled crimes and hypocrisy. "God will not deal unjustly," said they; "Your sins have found you out; God testifies against you," and so their lofty orations all came to the same conclusion, "Repent and seek salvation." Job was proof against their charges of hypocrisy and exceptional sin, yet their upbraiding doubled his anguish; indeed it was so plain to him that God had turned against him, that he was immeasurably confounded. His theology was better than theirs, yet it left him in thick darkness. He took it as a certain proof because of his agony of body and of soul that God was his enemy. He cries out in his agony for justice. He longs to come into court where the pleadings pro and con might shed a ray of light upon the reasons of Providence. "Who shall set me a time to plead?"

We can see what immense relief would have come in upon the mind of the poor sufferer if he had only known the true state of the case. "Why, Job, all this comes of Satan's malice. You are the Lord's athlete. He has taken a hazard upon you; be cheered, and endure unto the end." But no such voice sounded down to him. The darkness was an essential part of the test. O if one word of our Scripture could have been given him, as this, "All things work together for good to them that love God," or this, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," it would have been like a fountain of water gushing out of the sand in the midst of a perishing caravan.

Job found no difficulty in refuting the false dictum that God in this life deals with men according to their sins. "Why look," said he, "upon the mountain bandits; the tabernacles of robbers prosper." Look again and see the men who have no thought of God in their hearts. "Their houses are safe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them. Their bull gendereth and faileth not, their cow calveth and casteth not her calf, their children dance, they spend their days in wealth, and when their death hour comes, they go not by such a lingering and horrid disease as is upon me, but in a moment down to the grave." How triumphant this refutation.

Eliphaz, the able man of the three, unwilling that Job should slip away without scathe, descended from generalities to specifications. He drew a bow at a venture. His imagination furnished his facts and his rhetoric put in the sting. Just hear him: "Thou, Job, hast taken a pledge of thy brother for naught, and stripped the naked of their clothing. Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink, and thou hast withholden bread from the hungry. Thou hast sent widows away empty and broken the arms of the fatherless. Thou hast forsaken the fear of the Almighty, therefore snares are round about thee. Is not God in the height of heaven." Ah, here is something tangible at length. Thank you good Eliphaz for this. Job takes a whole chapter to plead to this indictment. I quote a few concluding words only: "If I have withheld the poor from their desire and have caused the eyes of the widow to fail; if I have eaten my morsel alone and the fatherless have not eaten thereof; if my heart has been deceived by a woman; if my bosom has cherished adulterous fires; if I have laid wait at my neighbors' door; if I have seen any perish without clothing, if he were not warmed by the fleece of my sheep; if I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless in the gate, then let mine arm fall from my shoulderblade and mine arm be broken from the bone." There Eliphaz, chew that.

In the great downfall of this man of Uz, Satan contrived to sweep away all his honors and ancient respect. "The boys hooted me," says Job, "the boys, sons of barbarians, whose fathers I would have scorned to set with the dogs of my flock. The men that always stood in the gate until I was seated, the men that waited for my words as for the rain, who, when I had spoken, laid their hand upon their mouths and answered not again, those very courtiers do not scruple to contemn me and trip my feet."

My friends, you could not have imagined all these combinations and lines of suffering if Satan had not helped you by composing the exhaustive drama of torture, wherein are the elements from which Sitting Bull might cull practical hints.

Satan by his malignant cunning, while he kept within the letter of his permit, clearly transcended its spirit. His license allowed him to inflict upon Job at his will, only spare his life. We see that his infliction was so terrible that Job longed for the grave, choosing strangling and death rather than his misery. Not one staff remained to him. His wife failed him. Property and children were swept by the storm. The hearts of his friends were frozen and perverted by their narrow theology. They looked upon him as a leprous hypocrite from whom God had stripped off the disguise. He gave it up as inevitable that he must go down to Sheol under this obloquy. On the other hand, what element of anguish was lacking from his cup? Yet with all this, Job did not utterly sink. Here is a wonder. Can you see either raft or shingle, which in the rolling of these waves, can bear him up? Darkness was thick upon him so that it was curdled and compressed to cheese. The mightiest billows from every ocean were gathered to roar together around his float. Can you see across the foam of this tumult the pillar that he saw, and around which the arms of his hope entwined? Then find it in the majestic utterance, "I know that my Redeemer liveth and that he shall stand in the latter day upon earth. I shall finally be vindicated; oh that thou wouldst hide me in the Sheol, that thou wouldst keep me secret until thy wrath be past. At length thou wilt call and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands."

The whole heavens were black—a single star sent forth a ray. "My Redeemer liveth!" Before we dismiss this subject, seeing that we are looking now upon the most ancient writings that are extant, it cannot but be profitable to ministers to gather up the rays of religious truth that are discoverable in this book. We shall see that the light accorded to those days was but a glimmer. Job frequently referred to Sheol, in whose shade he anticipated a residence. We cannot accord to him any authority for his notions concerning that gloomy under world. That he had a notion of a future life and that that, to him, was an object of hope seems to be taught xiv. 15: "O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave—keep me secret till thy wrath be past." He knew about the deluge. He knew about a resurrection, above all he knew about a Redeemer, and that knowledge saved him.

BENEFIT OF THE BOOK TO THE MODERNS.

1st. This book discovers a possible reason why suffering may come upon good men aside from personal sin. It is certain that in the case of Job the greatest calamities came upon him not for his sins. God overdrew upon Job, to use a commercial phrase. I do not mean to say that Job was distressed above the legal deserving of his sins. If in his age why not in mine? If upon Job why not upon me? Let us learn that it is vain to search for God's specific reasons.

2nd. Let us note that Satan was taught a lesson in that encounter that modified his manners permanently. What we have to do is only this: "Resist the devil and he will flee from us." He does not now contest the matter. If he comes to one who is strengthened by grace he does not waste strategy upon him. He passes on, for there are those who wait for him.

3rd. I want to charge my heart and yours with gratitude to God and to the line of heroes. The barons of England fought a battle for us with King John. Blessed be the memory of those barons. Luther fought a battle for us. Blessed be Luther. Charles Martel fought a battle (732) for us and turned the Saracens away from France. John Sobieski fought a battle for us (1683) when he broke the power of the Turk at the gates of Vienna. Job fought a more important battle for us. Satan was fresh from his victory over Adam. Job foiled him. Blessed be the memory of Job the unconquerable. Adam stood upon his bare humanity and failed. Job was reinforced by grace and prevailed. His victory has saved you, brother, a terrible experience.

Finally, in Job we have a man standing far back in the world's twilight, strong as the tower of David, whose strength rested alone upon the main pillar of our gospel. Let us inquire what the value of evidence which accrues to the gospel from that source. It is not possible that vapory tradition should confer such strength. He must have possessed the seminal principle of the gospel.

The Ohio State Meeting.

HOSPITABLE UTICA — THE OFFICIAL LIST — PLAN OF WORK — EULOGIUM ON FATHER TAYLOR.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Ohio State Association opposed to secret societies, auxiliary to the National Christian Association, held its annual convention at Utica, Ohio, on the 4th, 5th and 6th of March.

Addresses of welcome were delivered by Revs. Boyd, and Dysart of Utica, and the good people of the place and vicinity soon convinced the members of the Convention that the words of welcome spoken by their pastors meant something. All business seemed to be laid aside, and the citizens generally devoted themselves to attending the sessions of the Convention, and entertaining the delegates. There was a large number of people present from the neighborhood of Utica. The order was excellent, and the interest in the work of the Convention was kept up to the close. Much of the interest of the Convention centered in the addresses of Rev. J. P. Stoddard. He was present and spoke at every meeting. He is looking in better health than he was at our last year's meeting, and has lost none of his will, or ability, to give Masonry severe chastisement. Addresses were also delivered by several other members of the Convention from different parts of the State.

The following is a list of the officers elected for the ensuing year:

President.—J. M. Scott, Alexandria, Ohio.

Vice Presidents.—H. A. Thompson, D.D, of Otterbein University; Rev. Warren Taylor, New Birmingham; Rev. Willard Burr, Oberlin; Rev. Wm. Wishart, D.D., Ontario; Rev. George Richie, Alexandria; Rev. D. A. Wallace, D D., Wooster; Rev. Wm. H. French, D.D, Cincinnati; Rev. David Yant, Bolivar; R. B. Taylor, M.D., Summerfield; Hon. Rob't George, Yellow Creek, and Rev. J H. Leeper, Calcutta.

Recording Secretary: Rev. J. W. Martin of North Salem.

Corresponding Secretary: J. P. Lytle, D.D. of Bloomfield.

Executive Committee: Rev. H. P. McClurkin of New Concord and Rev. J. P. Morton of Cedarville.

It soon became evident, from the discussions in the business meetings of the convention, that there was a desire to have the work of the Association carried on more efficiently than it has heretofore been done. Accordingly a committee of representative men, was appointed to devise and report to the convention a plan for State work. The committee consisted of J. P. Stoddard, John Kemp, Wm. Wishart, H. H. George and H. P. McClurkin. This committee reported a plan which was discussed during almost the whole forenoon of the 6th and was finally adopted unanimously by the convention.

The plan may be briefly summed up as follows:

1. An agent and lecturer be employed, to lecture, organize and collect funds for the anti-secrecy work in Ohio.

2. The executive committee shall select this agent.

3. The Association shall be responsible only for the first month's salary of the agent.

4. The agent to report at the end of the month to the executive committee, which shall have power to continue or discontinue his services.

Dr. George was appointed to represent the association in the National Committee when it meets in Chicago to investigate the condition and work of the National Association, Dr. Wishart his alternate; and if neither can go, the executive committee was instructed to appoint some one.

One interesting feature of this convention was the presence and address of Rev. Warren Taylor of the Presbyterian church. The only minister present from a church that numbers 5,000 ministers. Father Taylor is an old, white-headed minister, but still is able to give secretism heavy blows. He addressed the convention in a very effective manner on the afternoon of the 5th. The interest of that day culminated when, after Father T.'s address, Dr. George arose and in a little speech of thrilling eloquence, reminded the convention "that Father T. was the only real hero amongst us. That it did not require much courage for a man to oppose secretism with a congregation or a denomination at his back, but it is an act of real heroism for a man to step to the front and take a prominent place in anti-secret work when he will thereby not only incur the hostility of the ministers and members who are members of the lodge, but will receive cool looks and treatment from those of the church outside the lodge, yet so under bondage to it as to be afraid to have fellowship with an anti-secret worker. This Father Taylor has done, not only risking the friendship of his fellow churchmen, but his means of livelihood." Other members of the convention followed in the same line of remarks, after which the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this convention are due and are hereby tendered to Rev. Warren Taylor for his attendance at this convention, and for his interesting and instructive address; and that we assure him of our earnest sympathy in the trials he has endured for his testimony against the evils of secrecy, and of our co-operation and support in the self-denying labors he has undertaken.

The resolutions passed by the convention I will send to you next week.

The convention adjourned to hold its next meeting on the 4th, 5th and 6th of November next, the executive committee to select the place.

DR. MCCLURKIN ON THE OHIO STATE CONVENTION AND NON-VOTING.

NEW CONCORD, O., Mar. 8, 1879.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I wish to say a word to your readers about the Ohio State Convention. We had a good time, as appeared to me; the speeches were all good, instructive and stirring. The weather was not very good and the people in the community had not been apprised of the meeting as they ought to have been; still we had nearly all the house would contain at night. Most of the members of the Convention were hospitably entertained by the friends in the village and vicinity. Some of us prayed and labored earnestly for weeks to make the Convention a success. Many were detained by sickness, personal and domestic, from attending. "Let us not despise the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when we are rebuked of him." Let us remember all workers in this cause at the Throne of Grace, where all Christians meet; especially Bro. Stoddard, who has to endure such self-denial and such knocks from the enemy. Here is a brief editorial from the Signal, of Zanesville, Ohio, the leading Democratic paper of this part of the State:

"Rev. J. P. Stoddard, of Chicago, will tell all he knows — which amounts to very little — and a great deal that he doesn't know — which might fill volumes — about secret societies in two lectures at Music Hall, Tuesday of next week; in the forenoon and in the evening. The lectures are to be free and will probably be worth all they cost."

Here is another notice of one of our lecturers that appeared in the Courier, the leading Republican pa- of this section:

DO ANY OF YOU KNOW?

"NORWICH, O., March 3 --Do any of the readers of the Courier know a Rev. Taylor, who professes to be a Presbyterian preacher, and is running about lecturing against Freemasonry. He says in his lectures that Masons run him off from some place in southern Ohio, where he was preaching, on account of his 'anti' proclivities. Now some people think there might have been a little something else mixed up in this running off. Hence if there is any one who can give us a true biography of this pious reverend, he will greatly oblige

"MANY MASONS."

Let us all unite in thanking God for all he has done for us in this work and for the promises that cheer us on.

Another word. Why are you so partial on the voting question? Some four persons wrote you articles on the opposite side of that question from yours. You suppressed all of them, saying you did not wish to fill your pages on that subject. This was a year or two ago—now you have opened the question by nearly a direct attack on the Reformed Presbyterian church, calling on Stevenson, McAllister, Sloane and Milligan to rise and defend themselves. After this call you had great hesitancy in giving Dr. Milligan's letter. This week's Cynosure contains three articles exhorting all good men to come and vote.

The matter is so plain to my mind that Christians ought not to vote, that I wonder you are unable to see it. We have express Scripture for our position, as Proverbs 3: 6; Collossians 3: 17. Now when persons come together to set up and administer a government, and the very first thing they do is to leave God out of their fundamental law, and ignore all moral and religious qualifications for office, how can the Christian do anything but stand back with God who is excluded, in name, Son, law and everything else?

Mrs. D. says, "if Christians do not vote the government will be given up to the wicked." That's what was done just at the first. They have run it all along,—are running it now. The great majority of all the officers of the national government have been and are enemies to God and his law. Voting is not the remedy in my judgment, but instructing the people in regard to the true nature and design of civil rule. Go to the fountain head, the people of the land, and show them "The deplorable omission," as you call it, and urge on this work of bringing the nation in its Constitution back to God, the Lord God of our fathers. Every one of you admit the great omission, but go on exhorting all to vote. It is the sins of omission that the Saviour mentions (Mat. 25:42, 43), for which men will be condemned in the day of judgment.

Let me say another thing: if it were not for these non-voting Christians, there would be very little said by anybody in the land about a constitutional acknowledgment of God. We believe, and are sure we are right in our dissent from the government, so long as it continues to be against the Lord and his anointed.

I have been very sick since I returned from the Utica convention, am unfit to do anything, but my interest in the success of this part of the Redeemer's work causes me to write. I have been doing all I could to get our people to take the Cynosure, but the course you are taking is very discouraging.

Truly yours,

H. P. MCCLURKIN.

AFTER THE OHIO MEETING—FROM SECRETARY STODDARD.

ZANESVILLE, O., Mar. 11, 1879.

DEAR K.—The secret orders are busy here using their tactics as usual, but with only partial success. Work is abundant and calls are coming in from every direction. I spoke twice on Sabbath at the Wesleyan church near Pataskala, and was to have spoken in that city on Monday evening, but the craft succeeded in closing both the Methodist and Presbyterian churches of that place, after the pastors and trustees of both churches had positively agreed to open their houses for a lecture. We learned of their surrender to the lodge in time to make an appointment at the Wesleyan Methodist church where a fair audience gathered in spite of the mud and rain which would have been an insurmountable barrier to a less determined people. The meeting lasted two hours and more and we remained for a considerable time longer waiting for the rain to subside and the moon to make its appearance. We took advantage of the first "slack" and set out, some in wagons, some on horseback and some on foot for more comfortable quarters. As for myself I was comfortably provided for through the kindness of Bro. Geo. Thompson, who gave me a seat in his carriage and set out on foot himself to make the journey through the fathomless mud two and a half miles to his home. Escorted by Bro. Scott and Bro. Carroll, Jr., on horseback, we reached our lodgings at 12 M., when I retired for a little rest.

At a quarter before 2 o'clock A. M. Bro. Thompson called me up and we sat down to an excellent meal which his wife had prepared, after which Bro. Thompson brought his carriage to the door, and Bro. Frank Carroll, who had volunteered his services, and myself stepped in and bidding our friends farewell we set out on our journey to Newark, a distance of twelve miles, which we must reach by six o'clock or disappoint friends who were expecting me at Zanesville. I shall not soon forget Bro. Carroll's kindness and that of the other good, earnest men and women who added so much to my comfort during my brief stay. The cause of Christ and of anti-secrecy is greatly indebted to Rev. Geo. Richey and Captain Scott for their unflinching integrity and untiring zeal in the defense of the truth. I have reason to believe that some good was done and that the Masons of Alexandria will not soon forget my visit to that village.

From Newark to this city was an hour's ride and I was ready for work in Black's Music Hall at 10 A. M. The audience was not large, but seemed interested. Bro. J. P. Lytle presided and Rev. Mr. Tulton acted as secretary. By request I spoke at two o'clock P. M. and am to speak

Pres. C. G. Finney.—Some of the reasons which induced Pres. Finney to publish his book against Freemasonry. He says: "I wish if possible to arrest the spread of this great evil. To arouse the young men who are Freemasons, to consider the inevitable consequences of such a horrible trifling with the most solemn oaths, as is constantly practiced by Freemasons. Such a course must, and does, as a matter of fact, grieve the Holy Spirit, sear the conscience and harden the heart. Again I wish to induce the young men who are not Freemasons 'to look before they leap,' and not be deceived and committed, as thousands have been, before they were at all aware of the true nature of the institution of Freemasonry. I with the many, have been remiss in suffering a new generation to grow up in ignorance of the character of Freemasonry as it was fully revealed to us who are now old. We have greatly erred in not handing down to the rising generation the literature on this subject with which we were made familiar forty years ago. For one I must not continue this remissness."

As a candle wasteth itself to give light unto others, even so a good Christian ought to spend his life for the benefit of others.

Moot-Courts.

General Butler and a Mr. Chittenden have agreed between them to make a moot-court of the Supreme Bench of the United States, for the purpose of testing the validity of greenbacks.

As the Supreme Bench has more actual business than it can properly attend to, and as the people are abundantly capable of settling the greenback question for themselves, on constitutional grounds, we would propose that the moot-court should be made up of Mr. Thurlow Weed as chief justice, with Samuel J. Tilden on his right hand, and General Butler on his left. It is true General Butler proposes to argue the case for greenbacks; but as he is exceptionally very smart, he can act both as judge and advocate too. He would not probably find any inconvenience in so doing. He could step down occasionally from the judge's seat to annihilate the arguments of the adversary, and then return to the bench and act as a wise and considerate judge.

This court would be better than the supreme court. It would furnish more amusement and not less valuable instruction. It hardly seems a proper use to make of the supreme court to anticipate or forestall political action by trumped up cases. Besides, a moot-court composed as we have suggested, could decide other interesting cases. One of which for instance, might be this: Has not a man a right to purchase whatever he finds for sale, from the patent right to a mop-handle up to the presidency of the United States? Another might be, How far may a man contribute to the dowry of a statesman's daughter without sustaining the statesman himself? Still another might be, As Masonry deals altogether in shams, and as General Butler has taken 33 degrees of the same, would it not be well to leave the regulation of greenbacks and all other sham currency to the Grand Lodge of the United States? Civis.

Avoca, Iowa Co., Wis.

[We hope the state of affairs represented below is not general.—Ed.]

Freemasonry and its twin, Odd-fellowism, are slowly but surely crushing out our lives. The work begins in our school districts and ends at Washington. Nearly every school board must have a ruling majority of the craft in them; nothing but a Freemason or Odd-fellow can get living wages as a school-teacher, and they get double wages. My own town of Pulaski, Iowa Co., Wis., is a shameful example of it. This village school was taught for $60 per month for the principal, with eighty scholars in his department, but for the last fifteen years there have been only Freemasons on the board and as teachers, and boy teachers at that, at a salary of $102.50 per month and an average of eleven scholars instead of eighty.

A man being $100 in debt to a Freemason, and no hopes of paying it, was employed to work on the school-house for the amount of $19, and was allowed an order of $119, payable to said Freemason, and that is only one instance in a thousand to my knowledge. I have traveled through nearly every State east of the Mississippi river, and conversed extensively on the subject, and I find by looking over tax books that Freemasons and Odd-fellows are not assessed on the average more than one-half what other men are for the same property, and this is only a drop in the bucket. We are in reality without a law to protect us in a single right; our lawyers are mostly of the same class, and our courts are entirely controlled by them. Our judges are sworn to decide and help them and it is impossible to get a jury in which is not packed a craftsman or two, enough to hang a jury, if not to decide in favor of Freemasonry. Our court clerks must all belong to the crafts, and papers are recorded in favor of craftsmen or thrown out of court by some error purposely made by the judge or clerks; so we have no redress, and it surely looks as if serfdom was before us.

In this school district is practiced the plan of substituting a subject for punishment, just as heathen princes have another child to be punished in their place when they have done wrong. Two of the most brutal punishments have occurred here lately. Small children were mutilated so they were confined to their beds with injuries that will last through life; and in both cases they were Freemasons' children that had done the mischief, and in both cases it was other men's children that suffered In both cases too Freemasons had the teacher arrested under false papers and a mock trial before a Freemason justice to cut off the injured fathers from having any redress in the courts. You city people don't feel the iron heel of bondage like country people. Nearly every little village has enough craftsmen to run affairs as they please, and travel where you will every mall village has from one to a dozen miserable quack lawyers that belong to the crafts, and they stand between the lodges and justice in every shape. No man can imagine one hundredth part of the injustice we suffer. We are a race of slaves to craftsmen.

We hear it on every side asked, "Why is there no paper published against it?" Every paper or book is muzzled on the subject, and when I received your paper here the other day all stood aghast as if a bomb-shell had exploded in their midst; and several asked me secretly how I dared have such a paper, or how you dared to publish it. I am besieged on the streets for your address every day, but our post-master is a Freemason and all the offices in the county are filled by Masons, and I believe a great many of your letters are destroyed by Masonic post-masters. I intend to be a life subscriber for your paper as soon as I get settled down and hope to be able to scatter a few thousand of your circulars and tracts every year. You ought to put a picture of a devil-fish on your tracts as the fit emblem of Masonry, nothing I know of so fitly represents it. God speed you.

Yours truly,
George Carver.

Where are the Reapers?

Harrison, Me., Mar. 5, 1879.

Editor Cynosure: — You will want to know what we are doing here in Maine. Since returning from the National Convention at Worcester, both myself and wife have been sick; but I am now able to go out again, and am anxious to be out among the people.

Our two ministers here came out against Bro. Stoddard after he was gone. The Freewill Baptist pastor made an apology to his people for allowing Bro. S. to preach in his house. He is an Odd-fellow, the other minister is a "jack." He tried to make the people believe that Bro. S. did not belong to any regular church. but made no impression by the attempt. Since then the Baptists who worshipped with him have left him and procured the services of a minister of their own, a staunch Anti-mason, one of the Morgan times.

Notwitstanding the craft called Bro. S. a liar so many times, the town meeting showed what their abuse amounted to. For two years previous the grangers, Odd-fellows and Freemasons held all the offices, with one exception, but now the people rose in their might as in the days of Deborah and Baruch and put to flight the armies of the aliens. Not a secret-lodge man had a chance for office, and their leaders gave up and went home early. If we could now have the exposition of Masonry it would complete the work and set these towns right side up. Maine is all ready for the sickle.

Canal Dover, O., Mar. 9, 1879.

Dear Brother K.—Permit me through the columns of your valuable paper to say a few words on what passed between one who was once a Master Mason and myself. I read for him your late article, "Facts for Senator Blaine," written by American. Being a staunch Republican, he took sides in favor of Blaine, and also Freemasonry, and said as far as it was spiritually concerned, for he pronounced Masonry a spiritual body, that if the fundamental principles of Masonry were strictly adhered to it would lead men to the grand lodge above. He also claimed that Masonry existed before Christ's time; that Abraham was a Mason, also John the Baptist; and if such good men as those, the forerunners of Christ, were Masons, what harm in Masonry spiritually. I also asked him why ministers of the Gospel preached Christ in the pulpit to a dying world and then at the door of the lodge rejected him? He almost flew into a white heat with rage, and he said if I kept on reading such papers as the Cynosure I would be an infidel before ten years. He also stated that he never became a Christian till after he had joined the Masons, and then went on to state that he was not released from the peanlty of sin for twenty years afeerward. I suppose that was when he withdrew from the lodge. I then asked him how the candidate was taken into the lodge, whether he was blindfolded and a cable-tow around his neck. To all which he answered yes. I then asked him in regard to taking in cripples and old men in dotage, which he positively denied; and then farther stated that he believed operative Masonry did not take in cripples, but speculative Masonry did, and that while he was Master he made many a cripple a Mason. Now if Masonry is such a grand and glorious institution as they (the Masons) claim it to be tha men have to work their way to heaven through its operations, then I surely cannot understand the Scriptures, for Christ positively declares that "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." (John 10:1.) Yours for more truth and ligh.

P. ANDREAS.

OUR MAIL.

Robert Armstrong, Jersey City, N. J., writes:

"I rank the Cynosure among the best weeklies that I receive."

Rev. A. Musselman, Dixon, Cal., writes:

"The heathen Knights of Pythias have an installation here to-day and a ball to-night."

A. C. Bundy, Alpha, Ill., writes:

"I am heartily with you in this great cause. I hope yet to see the Standard hang out its colors fair and bright."

L. Landon, Kennebec, Kan., writes:

"I think the doctrines of the Cynosure will be popular by and by. I am glad and rejoice for what is being done in the cause. God bless you and your noble band of workers is my sincere prayer. I hope to send more names before the first of March."

A. J. Fourd, Raub, Ind., writes:

"I read the Cynosure through as soon as I receive it, and then give it to some neighbors who are not able to take it. It ought to be in every family in the land, that all might know something of the great sin of Masonry. I had some conversation with one of my neighbors in regard to taking the paper. He said he did not believe in secret societies. I advised him to take it that his sons might not become Masons. 'No danger of that,' he said. I think there is danger where there is ignorance of the workings of Masonry; and the more light we have on the subject the less danger."

E. Dodge, Spencer, N. Y., writes:

"The Cynosure seems to be the light much needed here. We are in the midst of lodge worship; a heathen and Christless religion. The three churches sanction and sustain Masonry. The Baptist minister belongs to the order, thereby wounding the cause of Christ; devoting six days to this Christless religion, and on the Sabbath pretends to preach the Gospel to those who assemble at his church."

T. B. McCormick, Princeton, Ind., writes:

"The Cynosure is improving all the time."

Wm. Parkis, Goodrichville, Mich. writes:

"God bless all of you who are concerned in the publication of the Cynosure, which opposes the greatest heathenism existing in the world at the present day. I lived six miles from Batavia at the time when Morgan was carried off, and Mr. Miller, the printer, was carried as far as Leroy, and was taken away from the Masons at that place. Morgan was murdered for revealing the secrets of Freemasonry, which is upheld now by about one-half of the preachers of the Gospel, and a large portion of the other half dare not say anything against it. The time was when in our town, in York State, Genesee Co., we would not vote a Freemason into the office of path-master."

Mrs. A. B. Hubbard, Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

"We are in a most lamentable condition in church and State. But, oh, if the church were only free! Here lies the saddest thing, but Satan is never content in his own domain."

Joseph McCleery, Marshalltown, Ia., writes:

"I do not see how those opposed to secret societies can live without the Cynosure. But the cause is progressing. I find the question is being discussed in almost every literary society in this part of the country. Light is breaking in."

A. E. Jenks, Cheshire, Mass., writes:

"I wish to express my grati'ude to God that he has led so many churches to take a noble stand against all secret societies. I think they are very precious in the sight of God. I hope all will follow their example. All true Christians will do so. God requires the whole heart and life. Then his service yields perfect happiness. We are willing and anxious to be used to his glory. There are some noble Daniels yet on the earth. If God is for us all is safe. I am trusting all to Christ. He leads me safely in the narrow way. It is a very precious highway. The devil cannot get in, he must still keep the broad way. I wish everybody would leave the wicked way and be lovers of Jesus. Then they would be lights in the world."

Mrs. Abiah Coe., Tiffin, O., writes:

"I left the Methodist church over twenty years ago. I could not conscientiously support a Masonic ministry. Since then my principles have been considered 'prejudice' and 'narrow-mindedness.' Masonry always represents things contrary to what they really are. I consider Masonry the most cunning snare that ever Satan laid to catch men, and enable one part of the community to impose on the rest. * * I give the money to Anti-masonry which the church would otherwise have received. When our minister is not a Mason I will give to the church."

A. J. Harrington, Nicholson, Pa., writes:

"We are to have a debate in about two weeks on the question: Resolved, That secret societies ought not to be tolerated."

Lorenzo D. Brown, Montmorenci, Ind., writes:

"The Masons are waxing bold and audacious in their efforts to support the lodge and hide their moral deformity. My soul cries out to God to break the evil power that blinds and binds the people. Why sleepest thou, O Lord? Awake to the right, and plead thine own cause, for Zion languisheth. Her watchmen here fail to declare the whole counsel of God. The people are perishing for want of knowledge, and yet if a man were to come here to lecture boldly on the subject, I fear the M. E. church would not open their house to him, unless he could get an audience by preaching once or twice without letting them know he had any Anti-masonic sentiments. He might thus prevail and get an audience for an anti-secret lecture, but not otherwise. I have not left them without witness. If a man could come and lecture (J. P. Stoddard, for instance), I will see that he is cared for. I have no money to help with, but can take him to the places where he will lecture and back again to my house and elsewhere."

J. T. Michael, Kingwood, N. J. writes Feb. 1, 1879:

"I am to lecture at Stapleton, Staten Island, in a few days. I want to do what I can for reform here in the East."

L. R. Holbrook, Cincinnati, Appanoose county, Ia., writes:

"I should be glad if any lecturer passing this way would stop with us."

Samuel McMurdy, Porterfield, Pa., writes:

"I live where I am surrounded by secret societies, but I am not afraid of them. I have Christ with me all the time. I trust in the Lord."

J. W. Cole, Philadelphia, N. Y., writes:

"There are many who read my Cynosures and acknowledge the necessity of extending the light on the the subject of secretism. Many seem to doubt that Masons submit to such a humiliating process as being hoodwinked, cable-towed and divested of their clothing and take those horrible oaths. Professed ministers of the Gospel and professed Christians, who are Masons, are doing more to perpetuate this institution of the devil's kingdom, than all others combined. Why, people say, do you think that ministers and good men would connect themselves with an institution as bad as the Cynosure represents Masonry to be? I am forced to acknowledge that neither good ministers of Christ or good men can remain in these secret conclaves and give any evidence of being what they profess. We very much need such a man as Bro. Ronayne or Bro. Stoddard to lecture in this locality, to wake up an interest on this subject, and set the people to thinking."

Wm. R. Vance, Fairfield, Mo., writes:

"That the ten thousand subscriptions will be made up, that the light of the Cynosure may reflect in as many homes, and thereby cause the chains and fetters of secretism to be thrown off, is my prayer."

J. Rodgers, Green Oak, Mich., writes:

"I heard an Odd-fellow say that there would be secret societies as long as there would be churches; that he wished all men were Odd fellows, for then there would be no need of courts, or prisons, or churches. He was quietly asked if all good Odd-fellows were sure of heaven. He said all who lived according to the rules of the order were sure of heaven. And further that the order did not require repentance toward God or faith in Jesus Christ as a condition of membership. He was asked how the female part of our race, and those too poor to pay for the fraud of initiation, and those too young, and those too old, or crippled to be taken into the arms of this very charitable order, were to have salvation, or have its terms pointed out to them, if churches and their ministry of love are to be counted and called needless, like prisons and halters, in the good time coming. All of which looks to me like another way, another Saviour, without a sacrifice, a fraud instead of eternal life. I must oppose anti-Christ as I love Christ and care for souls."

J. F. McKee, Delavan, Wis., writes:

"It seems to me a matter of gratulation that the principles of the Gospel are held up more and more in the Cynosure, as the means of conquering secretism. Thus 'overcoming evil with good,' even as Paul preached Jesus in the midst of Athenian idolatrous temples."

Wm. H. Showalter, Stribling Springs, Va., writes:

"There is a strong element of anti-secrecy in the valley of Virginia. All that is needed is a good lecturer to develop it. In making up a club for the Cynosure I showed a Mason one of the supplements containing the signs, grips and passwords of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, etc., and asked him if it was true. He examined it and replied: 'Every word of it is true; I wish you success in getting subscribers.' He said he had been in the lodge for the last time. A year or so ago a man in our county-seat struck his wife with his cane, and according to the evidence given in the county paper, caused her death, beyond a shadow of a doubt. He was cleared. A great many people could not understand why he was cleared. All believed him guilty, and by investigating the case he was found to be a Freemason; and also the doctor who examined him, and a majority of the jury of inquest were Freemasons."

A. Ashabranner, New Albany, Ind., writes:

"If a lecturer was sent to New Albany I think many subscribers could be obtained."

J. W. Allen, Ripon, Wis., writes:

"We want some lectures in Ripon. If I can get some more Anti-masons to help bear the expense, I will try to get Mr. Ronayne next summer when he makes his summer trip to Stevens' Point. * * Our post office was burned up last week."

Hope Davis, Dundee, Ill., writes:

"Let us arm ourselves with the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God, that we may be able to withstand spiritual wickedness in high places."

Burton Doolittle, Ouaquaga, N. Y., writes:

"It appears that most people are afraid to say or do anything against Masonry. O that the God of heaven would open their eyes and their mouths with regard to it."

Aaron Phipps, Eagle Harbor, N. Y., writes:

"I am bordering on to four score years; a helpless cripple; have to be turned in bed by a sheet, many, many times, day and night. I am in constant pain. I am down by the river waiting for the 'boatman pale.' My trust is in the living God who doeth all things well. My sympathies are with the cause you are advocating. They grow stronger as I near the borders of eternity."

A, Pontius, Sycamore, O., writes:

"If secret societies are wrong according to God's holy Word, tell us through the Cynosure, where we can find the Scripture for it that will give satisfaction."

They contemn the example of Christ. John 18:20.

M. A. Gault, Hazel Grove, Mo., writes:

"We have been storming the forts of intemperance and infidelity thus far, but expect ere long to turn our guns upon secretism."

Joseph Luce, Ellington, N. Y., writes:

"We are sorry the people are ignorant of the important truths advocated in your paper, and not ten thousand only, but a hundred thousand people should hear and heed the warnings before another Presidential election; that the storm that is surely gathering may be put off at least another quarter of a century. If ministers would unitedly raise the alarm many would heed the cry, and they save their own souls by crying for the truth, and for the souls of men do a great work."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH. 20, 1879.

THE VOTING QUESTION.—Read Dr. McClurkin's strictures on this subject. There is no denomination on earth which I would less willingly offend than the Reformed Presbyterians; but I see I am misunderstood. Dr. McClurkin thinks that my invitation to Drs. Milligan, Sloane, McAllister and Stevenson to write on the effect of the anti-polygamy decision of our Supreme Court, was equivalent to saying to the Covenanters and those gentlemen in particular, "Rise and defend yourselves;" whereas, my thought was to give interest to the paper, and get information for myself and others from those brethren. I did not and do not think the Cynosure is called to assail the religious convictions of any God-fearing people like the Covenanters, who will do more for their principles than almost any men I have met in my earthly life. Still the Cynosure was established mainly by people who believed it their duty to vote; and their convictions also must be respected. Before seeing Bro. McClurkin's letter, I asked Dr. Milligan to prepare, at his leisure, an argument on the question, and he has consented to do so. This argument will be printed without reply, and there the matter must end. I have also received a long, very long private letter from Iowa, taking the bold ground that the magistrate, being God's minister, must forcibly put a stop to all Popish, Mormon, Chinese, Masonic, and other false worships. This letter is very complimentary, and asks only a private answer which it will receive. The writer dissents from almost all other Reformed Presbyterians, and thinks I am nearly as good as the average of them, a compliment which I highly prize.

THE UNITED BRETHREN AGAIN.

We censured Bishop Weaver for an article of his, written for the Harrisburg Itinerant, the successor of the United Brethren Tribune, an organ of the secession convention of U. B. preachers which, awhile since, met at Dayton, Ohio. Our recollection is, that speakers in that convention abused the Telescope, denounced the rule of their church against the secret orders, and insulted the Telescope editors by proposing to remove the Harrisburg paper to Dayton and issue it as an opposition paper beside it. If I am mistaken in these facts, if they are not substantially the true state of the case, I would thank ex-Bishop Kumler to inform me and I will correct my memory by looking over the files.

The facts are recent and I believe I have presented them as they are. And if I am correct, that secession convention and its Harrisburg organ are seeking to rule or ruin the church of the United Brethren in Christ; to rob it of its jewels and cast its pearls to the swine of the lodge, into whom the devils who used to run the slave system seem to have entered.

Bishop Weaver replies in above a full column in the Telescope, in which he charges me with one ideaism and attempting to divide the Brethren church by drawing off its local churches into union with the Associated Churches of Christ, whose very name was modified by one of his associate Bishops in fidelity to his own denomination, and to avoid all appearance of forming a new denomination or sect.

My answer to Bishop Weaver is that of Elijah to Ahab: "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord and followed Baalim," or the gods of the lodge, in this thing. I believe it to be literal and fearful truth, that Bishop Weaver contemplates a possible disruption of his church, and he wishes to stand well with that wing of it which will fellowship the Freemasons. As to the Rev. Mr. Rigor, who seems to think that Congregationalists have a church "session," he may be a good man and minister for aught I know, but I am sure he is in a very bad business in running a paper which Freemasons and their abettors love. If he is not in league with the lodge, let him publish, approvingly, a few such articles as the two which follow Bishop Weaver's letter in the Telescope of March 12. That will settle the question, and show that I am in error, and have misunderstood the Bishop and himself. But if he (Rev. Mr. Rigor) does nothing to disturb the Masons in his (Lancaster) district; and if he has thus a silent understanding with the lodge, and is really seeking to revolutionize the Brethren church to let in the Masons; and if Bishop Weaver is aiding and abetting him in that evil work, then it is plain that they have not "renounced the hidden things of dishonesty," but are "walking in craftiness," and "handling the Word of God deceitfully," and I am right in rebuking them for it. So Paul rebuked Peter and "withstood him to the face because he was to be blamed." And I would that these brethren had grace to receive the rebuke and reform their conduct as Peter received his from his "beloved brother Paul."

My dear brethren Weaver and Rigor, publishing reviling insinuations against me is no answer to our complaints that you "help the ungodly and love them that hate the Lord." I tell you as Paul did Peter, definitely, wherein I think you are sinning, and the proofs of it. If any one will do the same by me, in love, and not in the spirit of reviling, I will thank them for it. But now, I would that you and your paper might cease to support the convention that supported the lodge at the same time reviling the Telescope and revolutionizing the United Brethren church.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH FELLOWSHIP WITH THE LODGE.

CASE OF DEACON WEST.

This venerable and much esteemed brother has been a member of a Congregational church for almost half a century (47 years); for most of that time an officer in the church at Sycamore, DeKalb county, Illinois. Last January the church voted that his "membership be terminated without recommendation to any other." "This action not implying exclusion under censure."

This action has at least the merit of originality, for we think another just such vote cannot be found in the records of Christendom. We refer the case to the professors of "Congregational church order" who advised my exclusion from Elgin Association, solely on the ground of "church order," while professing personally high esteem for myself. Perhaps they will be able to find Scripture or precedent for it.

THE CASE IS THIS:

When, almost half a century ago, Dea. David West came to Sycamore, Freemasonry was supposed to be dead. He gave a tenth of all his property to build a Congregational house of worship and has contributed largely of his substance ever since to benevolent objects. But his largest contribution has been a life blameless and upright, making Christianity respected wherever he has been known, and the sacred elements have derived an added holy charm by being administered by clean hands.

Sycamore is a county town and the lodge came to help inferior men to office and church members went into it. One or two good ministers were silently squeezed out of its pulpit by those lodgemen, as Dickens divorced his wife, "for incompatibility." Another came professing hostility to secret societies but denying his professions by his practice. Another still, came, more glozing, heartless and hollow than the rest. Meantime lectures were given by Professor Blanchard and others. The Arnold brothers published a reform paper in the town. The Free Methodist paper was removed there, and the lodge was turned inside out by Ronayne, its blasphemies, deism, and heathenism all exposed; all to no purpose or no purpose for good, so far as the Congregational pastor was concerned. He voted to turn me out of the Association; to take in a Freemason; to appoint a Knight Templar as deacon of his church and standing committee man in the Association, and to pass a strong Anti-masonic resolution declaring Masonry contrary to Christianity and republican government "in its nature!"

Deacon West was growing old, and seeing in such hypocrisy no augury for good, after long prayer, and personal remonstrance, wrote the following letter:

SYCAMORE, March 18, 1878.

To the Brethren and Sisters of the Congregational Church, Sycamore, Illinois:

You are doubtless aware that I have been absent from your communion service for some months past.

I have felt that I could not come without breaking the commands of the Bible recorded in Eph. 5:11. (Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," etc.) For there are those in the church who practice Masonic rites which I believe to be condemned by the Gospel of Christ."

I think also that the position of the church does endorse Masonry, which I feel that I cannot consistently do, and I think I am not responsible for the position the church has taken in regard to the above question.

If it is said that by taking this step I break my covenant with the church, I answer that "we ought to obey God rather than man." I did not covenant with the church to do anything which was not in accordance with the commandments of the Bible. * * * I commit my cause to God and my case to you." * * * Faithfully yours,

DAVID WEST.

To this plain, Christian letter a long, weak and wordy epistle was returned, from which the following points are taken as specimens of style and as containing the practical matter.

Dea. David West,

Dear Bro.:

* * * "We understand your intent to be to offer a reason in justification of your course; and that reason is two-fold, viz., because, as you think the church endorses Masonry, and because there a Masons in the church.

"In answer we have to say concerning the first, that it does not exist. This church does not endorse Masonry, and has formerly averred its position that it does not.

"We do not indeed consent to make it a test of church fellowship, because we believe that is an extremity against Christian charity to which we have no right to carry our opinions.

"Your other reason is that there are members of the church who are Masons. There are. But that is not, in our opinion a reason to justify the extreme and serious act of schism in Christ's church.

"The above was unanimously adopted by the church, and we do hope you, dear brother, will prayerfully and carefully consider it, and come among us again and help us in God's cause.

"J. E. SOUTHWORTH, Clerk."

This clerk is, we are informed, a Knight Templar who has about an hundred oaths, more or less, in his conscience, every one forbidden by Christ; who has taken the devil's communion from a human skull, and invoked a double damnation on his soul if he reveals Knight Templarism. This his pastor knows and allows!! (Read Ezek. Chap. 34.)

To this letter Deacon West replied declining to return as required, and citing Scriptural reasons for his course. He then proceeds:

"You say that the church does not endorse Masonry. When a church can be opened for Masonic installation of officers and closed against lectures on the other side, it is an endorsement of the institution and is so regarded by the public and by Masons.

"When adhering Masons are admitted to the church without protest or question I think it is an endorsement.

"If a rumseller should claim to be a Christian and you should admit him while he continued his business, would you not be held by the public as endorsing rum selling? I think you would and that justly. So when a church fills some of its highest offices with adhering Masons that church endorses Masonry.

"I have tried for some years past to get the question before the church through the ministry, but have failed in every attempt. * * * I believe that the institution of Masonry is stained with blood which would involve me in guilt if I longer sustain a ministry or a church that can even apologize for it.

"You say in your letter that I have not charged that those Masonic brethren are not Christians. As to that I do not know. * * *

"This I know, that God has commanded us to have no fellowship with the works of darkness; and if Masonry is not a work of darkness I know not where in this world to look for it. Yours in the Gospel of Christ, DAVID WEST."

To this letter of Dea. West the church returned a long letter, running through five pages of manuscript. The points made by him are not touched, but they simply insist that he has "agreed solemnly to God and this church to walk orderly with it." They insist that Dea. West has never offered resolutions against the lodge; and the "church has never refused to hear, discuss, or pass any such." That the deacon had years before acted with the church while there were Masons in it. This letter is signed by Knight Templar J. E. Southworth, clerk.

Dea. West replied, in a brief, manly letter, that he would have asked a letter, but there was no church near with which he could at present join; and that he could no more walk with them, and adds: "I wish for peace and not for strife. And I wish to fill the few days I may remain on earth in a manner that may best promote the kingdom of Christ and the good of my fellow beings."

Then came the action of the church as cited above in these words:

"We have voted, in accordance with your request, that your membership in this church be herewith terminated without recommendation to any other; this action, however, not implying exclusion under censure. Given by vote of the First Congregational church, Sycamore, Jan. 29, 1879,

J. E. SOUTHWORTH, Clk." (K. T.)

So it seems a member of a Congregational church who wishes to cast off his church relation has only to request it and be dropped. And these are the men for church order! God is surely sending strong delusion.

—Secretary Stoddard returned to this city on Friday last from Cambridge, O., as intimated in his letter in another column. Although the Iowa brethren were urgent that he should be with them on the Sabbath he found correspondence and other business requiring his attention here for a day or two. He started for West Branch, and the Iowa, Convention on Monday morning.

—Letters from brethren McClurkin and Fulton on the Ohio work, and Bro. Hinman, adding another chapter to his uniformly interesting "New England Notes," could find no room this week. The latter was in Providence, R. I., on Thursday last. He reached that city after lecturing at Southbridge and Hudson, Mass., and Thompson, Conn. At Providence he copied the record of the Legislature, repealing Masonic charters in 1834, which will be given to our readers.

J. P. STODDARD.

THE MICHIGAN STATE CONVENTION.

HUDSON, Mich., Mar. 14, 1879.

DEAR BRO. K.:—Herewith I communicate a few items from Michigan State Meeting, held February 26, 27 and 28. First we carried out our suggestions in the article calling the meeting, and secured Rev. J. P. Stoddard and Mr. E. Ronayne's labors, and each were effectual. God bless them! As usual, Bro. Stoddard had to bear the reproach accruing from his office as agent of the N. C. A. It wore on him some and on us, and we hope the big guns at our next annual gathering will be turned on our enemies and fire but one way. Down with lodgeism. Amen! Forgive, if its needed, the digression.

The expose by Bro. Ronayne was much better than any previous that I have attended. I know the candidate was prepared the same, but Masonry as sun-worship was demonstrated as I never saw, read nor heard of till then. O that Jehovah might be worshiped in spirit and truth by us all who there assembled to oppose and withstand the great sin! We were fortunate in procuring candidates. Three students from Spring Arbor took severally a degree.

Second. We had homes more than were occupied. Its true headquarters were at the City hotel and some rich ones preferred to stay there on expense. We were not to blame.

The last night an admission fee of ten cents was charged all over 12 years, by this means we secured $85 00, and with what the friends sent us towards expenses of meeting, when all expenses were paid, we had balance in treasury of $23 94. Our meeting closed, being the fifth annual gathering of the Michigan State Association opposed to secret societies: the first at Fentonville, the last at Adrian. But very few, if any, were at Adrian who were at the first, Pratt, Quick and Mathews excepted.

Friends of reform, stir up the gift that is in you and say where our next gathering shall be. I nominate northern Michigan. My successor will doubtless say more.

Yours, E. MATHEWS.

NEW ENGLAND NOTES.

THOMPSON, Conn, Mar. 5, '79.

DEAR BRO. K.—Woodstock is one of the largest and finest of the hill towns of Connecticut. There are five parishes in the town, each with its Congregational church, besides one Baptist and one or two M. E churches. Woodstock Hill is the central village. It is the home of H. C. Bowen of the Independent; has a large academy and a very fine park, the property of Mr. Bowen, who is a member of the Congregational church here.

From this town went one of the most efficient of our African missionaries, Rev. J. White, with whom I was associated in missionary work, and who has since gone to his reward. I was kindly received by the pastor, Rev. F. E. Bachelor, who invited me to preach for him Feb. 16, and on the following evening I spoke to a good audience, considering the storm, who were all in full sympathy with my work. I have met Bro. J. S. Perry of Thompson who has had considerable experience in the lecture work. In this church Sam'l D. Greene lectured more than forty years ago, and this, which up to the Morgan murder was a strong Masonic town, has always since been Anti-masonic. No adhering Mason is a member of the church and one of the deacons is a seceder.

From here I went to Worcester, Massachusetts, where I spent some days in getting acquainted with brethren and arranging plans for future work. I attended two meetings of the friends of our reform in which they considered the propriety of a city organization and resolved to hold other meetings once in two weeks. In Worcester more than in any other city of New England, there is an intelligent and earnest Anti-masonic sentiment.

My next point was Cochituate, named from the lake that supplies Boston with water. There in a Wesleyan church I spoke to a fair audience with marked attention and sympathy. Dea. I. Leadbetter, with whom I stopped, has been most faithful and successful in his work. Cochituate is a pleasant manufacturing village, not yet dishonored with a lodge.

My next point was Acton. There I spoke once in the vestry of the Congregational church and once in the Town Hall. This is a beautiful village, close to Concord, and some of those who fell at Concord and Lexington lived here. A fine granite monument perpetuates their memory. The pastor of the Congregational church expressed his sympathy and aided me in my work. Brethren Daniels and Loker with whom I stayed, are faithful laborers. Scarce a ripple of dissent was heard, and I trust a lasting impression was made.

My next point was Southbridge, Massachusetts. This is a large and growing manufacturing village of 6,000 or 7,000 inhabitants. There has been quite a discussion of Masonry here, conducted in opposition to the lodge by S. L. Morse. Prof. C. A. Blanchard lectured here some years ago. I spoke in the Town Hall to quite a large audience, but only a portion of them were either sympathetic or attentive. The pastors of the Congregational and M. E churches were present and expressed their sympathy and desire for further discussion. The pastor of the Union church also expressed his approval. This too, I understand to be the position of the Baptist pastor, while Masonry is represented by the man who preaches Universalism for the Universalist church.

From here I went to East Douglas, Massachusetts; to Thompson and Putnam, Connecticut, and back to Thompson, where I now am. I expect to lecture at Southbridge, Massachusetts, to-morrow night and here on Monday and Tuesday evenings of next week. My health is quite feeble, but I hope to hold on in my work till May. Yours in the Lord, H. H. HINMAN.

WALK UP, FRIENDS IN INDIANA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I don't often trouble your columns for I am not used to writing much. All I claim in any reform work is to do in earnest what I find to do, and in addition to what I have done I hereby say to the friends in Indiana that I second Dr. Champ's offer sometime ago, viz., to be one of a hundred to raise a salary for State work. Now come on, friends! I have recently seen Dr. Cook, our lecturer, who is always on the war path, and his income in five months above expenses is $61.75. Is this either liberal or common honesty? And yet all in this part of the State think we have a lecturer who is putting in as much hard and efficient work as any one in the field.

Now, friends put your shoulder to the wheel. Write immediately to Dr. Champ, New Lisbon, Henry Co., or to Dr. Cook, Albion, Ind. If you cannot send the full amount, $5.00, send a part; do not delay. Friends, let us think and act in this matter as we do in other important matters; it is only in this way that victory comes. See your neighbors; talk about it. Let us go to work in earnest. Come on!

Remember also that if any friends or lecturers come this way that my house is always open to such.

Respectfully, ISAAC CRANE.

Mothers, Watch the Little Feet.

Patter, patter, all day long,
What an eager, restless throng!
Out among the birds and bees,
Out among the flowers and trees;
In among the toys and books,
Spying out the quiet nooks;
Hither, yon, and everywhere—
Who shall guide each busy pair?

Who shall curb the sports and plays,
Teach the laddies gentle ways,
Help them as with noble will
On they strive up Learning's hill?
Teach them their brave strength to share,
For the weak, the old, to care;
Lead them till, in turn they stand
Leaders in a royal band!

Who shall on the lassies wait,
Knocking at youth's morning gate!
Guide their hands to deeds of love,
Keep their hearts all wrong above;
Teach them kindly words and ways,
How to help and when to praise;
Guide them till they make of home
The brightest spot 'neath heaven's dome!

Mothers, who could wish or ask
E'er a sweeter, holier task!
Yours it is to guide youth's feet
Through life's meadows, pure and sweet;
Yours to make fair, bright and good,
Gentle, tender womanhood.
And remember, while you plan,
As the boy so is the man.

Mothers, lest their feet may stray,
Walk beside them while you may.
Sports and plays are wiser far
Under love's pure guiding star.
Books will sweeter meaning take
When they're read "For mother's sake!"
Hither, yon, and everywhere,
Mothers, watch with prayerful care.

Pen Illustrations from the Lord's Prayer.

"And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."

"I'll never forgive him—never!"

"Never is a hard word, John," said the sweet-faced wife of John Locke, as she looked up a moment from her sewing.

"He is a mean, dastardly coward, and upon this Holy Bible I—"

"Stop—husband! John! remember he is my brother, and by the love you bear me forbear to curse him. He has done you wrong, I allow—but, O John, he is very young and very sorry. The momentary shame you felt yesterday will hardly be wiped out with a curse. It will only injure yourself, John—oh please don't say anything dreadful!"

The sweet-faced woman prevailed—the curse that hung upon the lips of the angry man was not spoken, but he still said, "I will never forgive him—he has done me a deadly wrong."

The young man who has provoked this bitterness, humbled and repentant, sought in vain for forgiveness from him, whom, in a moment of passion, he had injured almost beyond reparation.

In his little store sat the young village merchant, one pleasant morning, contentedly reading the morning paper. A sound of hurried footsteps approached, but he took no notice until a hatless boy burst into his store, screaming at the top of his voice, "Mr. Locke, Johnny is in the river—little Johnny Locke."

To dash down the paper and spring for the street was the first impulse of the agonized father. On, on, like a maniac, he flew to the river, pallid and crazed with anguish. The first sight that met his eyes was little Johnny lying in the arms of his mother, who, with her hair hanging disheveled around her, bent wildly over her child. The boy was just saved; he breathed and, opening his eyes, smiled faintly in his mother's face, while she, with a choking voice, thanked God. Another form laid insensible, stretched near the child. From his head dark blood flowed from the ghastly wound. The man against whom John Locke had sworn eternal hatred had, at the risk of his own life, been the saviour of the child. He had struck a floating piece of driftwood as he came to the surface with the boy, and death seemed inevitable.

John Locke flung himself on the green sward and bent over the senseless form. "Save him," he cried huskily, to the doctor who had been summoned; "restore him to consciousness, if it be only for one little moment—I have something important to say to him."

"He is reviving," said the doctor.

The wounded man opened his eyes—they met the anxious glance of his brother-in-law, and he trembled forth: "Do you forgive me?"

"Yes, yes, God is witness, as I hope for mercy hereafter, I freely forgive you; in turn, I ask your forgiveness for my unchristian conduct."

A feeble pressure of the hand and a beaming smile was all his answer.

Many days the brave young man hung upon a slender thread of life, and never were more devoted friends than those who hovered over his sick-bed. But a vigorous constitution triumphed, and pale and changed he walked forth once more among the living.

"Oh! if he had died with my unkindness clouding his soul, never should I have dared to hope for mercy from my Father in heaven," said John Locke to his wife, as they sat talking over the solemn event that had threatened their lives with a life-long trouble. "Never, now that I have tasted the sweetness of forgivness, never again will I cherish revenge or unkindness toward the erring. For there is a new meaning to my soul in the words of our daily prayer, and I see that I have only been calling judgment upon myself, while I have impiously asked, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."—Selected.

Fear of Human Judgment.

I am just going to do something which I have clearly made up my mind to do, and some friend passing by catches sight of me, handling with the tools all in my hands, and in a mere momentary impulse he cries out, "What a fool you are to do that!" and so passes on and has forgotten me and my plan in a moment. And yet it is just that sort of a taunt, or the fear of it, which has blighted many a sweet and healthful impulse in the bud. It is good for us often to know how superficial, how lightly made, how soon forgotten are the judgments of our brethren which sound so solemn and which tyrannize over us so. Such a feeling sets us free and makes us independent. Be sure that you may feel that about any crude criticism that is hampering you, and may cast it aside, and forget it and go your way. The man who made it has probably forgotten it long ago.—Phillips Brooks.

All About a Brick.

A correspondent of the Evening Post gives the following account of a personal experience:

"One bright morning in the month of November, some years ago, I was preparing to go down town, when the servant informed me that a man was waiting at the front door to see me. 'Tell him I'll be down in a moment,' said I. On going to the door a man of tall stature and robust appearance, calling me by name, requested assistance, saying that he had a large family, a wife in delicate health, and no means to procure food for them.

'You appear to be strong and healthy, why don't you work?' asked I.

'Simply, sir, for the reason that I cannot procure work.'

Not having any work to give him I thought I would test the sincerity of his intentions, so I said,

'If I give you work what pay do you want?'

'Anything, sir, you choose to give me, so long as I can obtain means for my suffering family.'

'Very well,' said I, 'I will give you twenty-five cents an hour if you will carry a brick on your arm around the block for five hours without stopping.'

'Thank you, sir; I will do it.'

After hunting awhile I found a brick, placed it on the man's arm, started him on his walk, then went down town to my business.

Not having the least faith in the man's promise, I thought but little more of it, yet as I knew I should be back within the five hours I determined to see if he performed his work. My business kept me away rather later than I expected, so I had to forego my usual walk home, and took a Fourth avenue car to be back within the five hours.

As I approached the corner of the street where I reside I found a great crowd of persons gathered—two fire engines, a hose cart and a hook and ladder truck. Upon inquiring where the fire was I was informed that it was a false alarm, and that what brought the people together and occasioned the agitation was the spectacle of a tall man carrying a brick on his arm around the block for nearly five hours. The neighbors were looking at him from the windows and doors as he passed along; some thought he was crazy, but when spoken to his answer was: 'Don't stop me; its all right.' As he interfered with no one he was allowed to walk on undisturbed.

'Where is the man now?' I asked.

'There you can see him at the other end of the block, walking with his head down,' was the answer.

He was just about turning the corner, and I waited till he had performed his circuit, then taking him quietly by the arm, I marched him to my house, followed by a crowd of boys. In the meantime the firemen, engines and hose cart rattled off. The man was thoroughly tired out when I took him into my hall and seated him on a chair while my servant went for a little wine and something to eat. I paid him forthwith a dollar and a half. He informed me that while making one of his rounds a lady came out of a house and inquired why he was carrying that brick, and on his giving her the reason he received a dollar. The object soon became known, for as he passed the houses small sums were given to him by different persons and he was well satisfied with his day's work. 'But,' said he, 'what shall I do to-morrow?'

'Why,' I replied, 'go early in the morning to the houses from which you received the money and ask for work, and no doubt you will find some one who will put you in the way of getting it; then report to me.'

The following afternoon he informed me that he had been sent to a German, who kept a pork establishment on Third avenue, and who wanted a clerk to keep his books. He was to get five dollars a week if his work proved satisfactory, and his duties began on the following day. Before leaving he asked me for the brick which had brought him such good luck and I gave it to him. Within the year I ascertained that the man had been transferred to a larger establishment of the same kind, with a salary of one thousand dollars.

Three or four years after this I was riding in a street car when a well dressed man accosted me with a smile and asked me if I knew him. Seeing me hesitate he said: 'Don't you recollect the man who carried the brick?'

He then informed me that he was doing a prosperous business on his own account, and had laid up money and expected soon to build himself a house up town.

'What became of the brick?' I inquired.

'That brick, sir, has always occupied a place on our mantlepiece, and we value it as the most precious of our little possessions. It has made our fortune.'"

Childrens' Corner.

What a Child May do.

A little child am I indeed,
And little do I know;
Much help and care I yet shall need
That I may wiser grow;
If I would ever hope to do
Things great and good, and useful to

But even now I ought to try
To do what good I may;
God never meant that such as I
Should only live to play,
And talk and laugh and eat and drink,
And sleep and wake, and never think.

One gentle word that I may speak,
Or one kind, loving deed,
May, though a trifle, poor and weak,
Prove like a tiny seed;
And who can tell what good may spring
From such a tiny little thing?

Then let me try each day and hour
To act upon this plan:
What little good is in my power
To do it while I can.
If to be useful thus I try
I may do do better by and by.

The Fisherman's Daughters.

In the next week following the sad one of the wreck I told you of, was father's and mother's wedding day—a day which, Sam said, "was always a right jolly one for us young uns." At present I had only a very misty recollection of that of the last year; but what I did remember, together with Sam's and Tom's joyous accounts and expectations, would have made me look forward to this with perfect delight, had not the thought that poor Elsie would be lying up stairs ill, and unable to take part in our pleasures, continually rested on my mind, and often made me quite unhappy, instead of glad. But at six years of age sad thoughts do not last very long, and when the shadow passed I was bright and gay enough again. Father was the most quiet about it; but he too looked very happy, for all that, as the evening before, he stood outside the door, watching our handiwork.

We were all as busy as bees just then—by all, I mean our three young selves, Sam and Tom and I, and two lads, the sons of a neighbor, who lived in a neat little cottage on the other side of the hill, lying 'twixt us and the sea. Jim and Harry Jones were nearly the same ages as Sam and Tom, and good steady boys, father said they were.

Well, we were very busy; for we were making a large garland, which was to be hung up over the front of the porch. It was of all sorts of flowers and different colored leaves, particularly those we thought expressive of happiness, love, union, peace, contentment, or any other amiable virtue. These were cleverly bound together so as to form the words "Wedding-day," which we thought a very bright idea, as also a very beautiful piece of work. But the masterpiece of all were the two names of father and mother, "Martha and Thomas,' joined together, and made of a variety of rather small sea-shells we had been collecting for the purpose during the whole past month.

Every now and then mother came to the door and put her arm through father's, and stood a minute or two, and smiled upon us, and then looked up into his face to see what he thought of it all; and that would make me sad, for just then she was so like Elsie. Poor Elsie!—only now she was pale, very pale, and mother had a red color in her cheeks and was fat and round, and Elsie was so thin now; and mother looked always bright and merry (excepting when we were talking of Elsie, and then the sunshine went out of her face), but Elsie had a patient, mournful look in her eyes, that sometimes made me sad to see there.

CHAPTER III.

Well, the next day came. "Just the bright, warm, sunshiny day it ought to be," Sam said. The first thing we did—after Elsie and I had prayed together—was to run to the top of the hill before us—this was at five o'clock in the morning—brothers and I and the Jones lads, and set fire to a heap of dry sticks and furze, that blazed up finely, and must have made, we thought, a grand appearance; and while it was burning—which it took about ten minutes to do—we set up three loud cheers, one for father, one for mother, and another for their wedding-day; this last being Jim's idea, and greatly delighted we were with it.

The garland was up, and gave us all unbounded satisfaction. Moreover, the whole of the large old hall, which was a very spacious one, and the kitchen, were decked with flowers and shells of every sort we could procure. At breakfast, father said he also meant to put up something against the wall opposite the porch, which he begged we would all keep in mind to look at, every time we came into the house.

Very curious were we as to what it could possibly be, not having seen him preparing anything; and when he went into the hall we followed very closely; Sam perching me on his shoulders, that I might, he said, have a good view. Presently father came forward, holding a bright red board of about a foot square, which he hung up by a bit of faded pink ribbon (I knew it had been Elsie's) on a nail, between some leaves and flowers. We all looked eagerly, and on the board was written in such large, clear, round, white letters, that even I could read it easily:

"Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." And also—

"Godliness is profitable unto all things; having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

"Now, my lads," said father, "and thee too, my little maiden, (laying his hand on my arm), mind ye think of these words as ye come in and as ye go out; and don't do anything, no matter how innocent it may be, in excess; for it's just that which makes many a day of pleasuring a day of sorrow to most people. If thee wants to be really happy, keep God's laws closely, on thy right hand and on thy left; for mind thee as sure as ever thee steps aside from 'em, so sure will happiness and peace step aside from thee—mind that; every step t'other way from the right, will part thee farther and farther, and the day beginning with sunshine and joy will end in clouds (if not storms) and sorrow."

No one could fail to see the red board as they came in at the door that day; and of course all read the texts: and as it was well known father was a truly Christian man, everybody respected him and his principles; and accepting the good advice contained in the white letters, and guided thereby to be temperate, all passed, as they declared, and indeed as they truly seemed to do, a very pleasant day. But to return.

Struggling down from Sam's shoulder, I begged father to let me carry up the board to show to Elsie.

"Ay—to be sure thee shalt," he said, putting it into my hands, "run away little lass, run away."

Elsie was so pleased with it, she put it before her and bent over it, her pale face looking so sweet and earnest, and her eyes became full of tears, and she murmured, "Just like dear father! he is always so good, Gatty; do you know, I like this better than all the rest." (We had shown her the garland, and other things besides, and a long board covered with soft green moss, across the middle of which we had written in large letters of bright flowers, "Welcome," and which was placed just over the kitchen door, for everybody to see as they came into the hall.) "Yes," she went on, "the others were beautiful, and so nice, and kind, but this is so good." And again she bent over it; but the tears in her eyes prevented her seeing, and just as she put up her hand to brush them away, two fell upon the board, and as the paint was not quite dry, it caught them and they stuck there—not doing any harm to the letters, but as I tried to dry them marking the spot where they lay; one fell on the word "all," and the other on "promise."

Elsie did not see it, and I didn't like to say anything, for fear of vexing her.

When I carried it back to father I asked him to paint the two words over again, telling him how it had happened.

He did not speak for a minute, as he gazed at it and hung the board in its place on the wall. Then when he turned round, I could see his eyes were red, and his voice shook a little as he only said, "No, let them bide." And there they are still, the two tear-stains.

After breakfast, and the things were put away, I ran up-stairs to Elsie to read my Bible and say my hymn—she had taught me a great many since her illness. I was very restless and inattentive, I am sorry to say; Elsie did not keep me long.

"I will not stay thee, Gatty my bairn, for I see thy young spirit is pining to be fleeing about to-day," she said in such a mournful voice, that I was quiet and sorry at once. "I do not wish to cloud thy mirth, little one," she went on, "but yet—oh! bear in mind sometimes to-day, that we know not what an hour may bring forth—one short year back I was as lightsome and gay, and alas! as unthinking of any grief coming upon me or others, as thou art now; and in four weeks after—I lay here, as you know."

Throughout the day Elsie's words—and yet more her white, sad face—kept following me everywhere. I was too blithesome to be unhappy because of it, but it acted upon my feelings something like sweet, doleful, far off music, and made me often—yes, very often I am glad to say—rush up into poor Elsie's quiet room during the day, to kiss her, and see how she was, and if I could do anything to comfort or please her.

Everybody seemed to have thought of her, for they all brought her little presents of some sort—at least each family did.

Two farmers' wives who came with their husbands and children from a good distance off, brought a number of nice things, mostly for Elsie, but some for mother also. Others brought her—one a bunch of flowers, another three or four fresh eggs, and another some ripe fruit from their little garden—all and each according to their means And with these pleasant things, so pleasant, as Elsie said, "because of the rich, kind feeling with which their taste and sight seemed full,"—I joyfully ran up to her room as fast as they came, and spread them out on a table, for her to look at and admire.

Once, while every person was out in the valley watching the boys running in a sack, and who should win, I grew tired of looking on, or felt anxious about Elsie, or something or other, and ran to pay her one of my hasty visits; and who should I find sitting there with her but father and Harry Jones. I had often thought how sorry Harry always seemed for Elsie, and he was ever bringing her little presents of different kinds, and asking me how she was, and if she was happy, and wanted anything he could get her; and now he was sitting on a chair beside her bed, and his round, rosy, good-tempered face, that always before looked so merry was now so grave and even sad. He was reading to her out of such a nice, pretty-looking book, that I afterward knew that he had bought her with money he got by working for people at odd times, when his father did not want him out fishing. It was a book he knew Elsie would be pleased with; it was all about the Bible, and prayers, and the holy things she loved so dearly, and made me love too.

But father would not let him stay long, for fear of wearying Elsie, and himself too, he said. However, I don't think the last likely, he looked so greatly vexed to be obliged to go away; and when I went down and out, I found him standing at the door, and not seeming to heed a bit all the fun going on; and he came close to me and said, his face becoming red the while as Mrs. Busk's scarlet petticoat (that was one of the farm ladies), "Tell Elsie I care not for anything, now she's so ill, and can't be with us—do ye mind, lassie?"

"Yes," I said, "I did mind, and would run back and tell her then," —which I did.

Elsie was reading her new book as I came in and gave her my message. She glanced up at me as I spoke, and then down again, but she didn't say anything at first, till I asked her "What I was to tell Harry who was looking so unhappy?"

After a little while she said, "Poor Harry! it was very kind of him to be unhappy about her;" and I was to say to him this: "He must always try to remember that she was in the hands of that God who would be sure to work everything together for her good, if she trusted in him, —which she hoped she did in heart and soul!"

So I ran and told him, as well as I could, word for word of Elsie's answer; and I also told him that she called him "poor Harry," and said, "it was very kind of him to be sorry for her." And he looked pleased and vexed both, which I couldn't understand, and he said, "So kind of me! where be the kindness, I wonder?"

Puzzle Corner.

Answer to enigma of March 6th. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

As the devil is the father of lies so lying is an evident token of his children.

Sabbath School.

Instead of notes, etc., on the review lesson which occurs March 30th, we republish for our Sabbath school teachers on the third page an able and suggestive review of the book of Job, from which the first lessons of next quarter are taken. No teacher should fail to read it carefully through. It will answer well the place of a sermon to be read in congregations without a preacher.

The lessons for the past quarter are herewith given together with review plans from the "Scholar's Handbook."

LESSON XIII.—March 30, 1879.—REVIEW.

PLANS FOR A REVIEW.

One difficulty in the way of a successful review is removed when a good plan adapted to teacher and scholar has been found. The past twelve lessons may be reviewed in a number of different ways, as: (1.) Building the Temple; (2.) Worshiping in the Temple; or, (1.) The restoration of the people, lessons 1-6; (2.) The people praising God, lessons 7-12; or again, grouping the lessons into three divisions: (1.) The work of the Lord, lessons 1-4; (2.) The way of the Lord, lessons 5-8; (3.) The worship of the Lord, lessons 9-12. Or, fourthly, there are four lessons on the re-building of the Temple and city; four in respect to the laws of God; and four in regard to the power and grace of God. Or, fifthly, the review may be conducted without regard to a division by lessons, as: (1.) The prophets; (2.) The persons; (3.) The places; (4.) The nations; (5.) The facts of the lessons.

Western College, Iowa.

This institution is the only one in the Northwest controlled by the church of the United Brethren in Christ in the interests of higher Christian education. Wisdom, energy and patience are all needed upon the part of the founders and friends of so worthy an enterprise. From a human standpoint self-denials and sacrifices must be borne. Should that be called a sacrifice which qualifies for the real work of life? If self-denials counteract the bad tendencies of human nature should not every man's will yield to the dictates of wisdom? Our fathers gave us the Gospel and its institutions. A Christian education is Gospel fruit. Shall our children inherit only lands and money? What is the best legacy to posterity? Is it benevolent example and soul culture? For the purposes of such example and culture this worthy college will appreciate donations of lands, notes and money in large quantities. We will be thankful also for small sums of those less able to pay. To encourage our dear friends it is pleasant to say that the writer has lately received $5,000 in notes. He expects also to receive notes and money soon from good friends favorably considering how they can best use the Lord's money intrusted to them as stewards. Kind friends, send to me soon money or notes. Spring term commences March 26th.

M. S. Drury, Treasurer,
Western College, Iowa.

—The United States Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Free Sons of Israel, a Jewish secret society, convened in Odd-fellows' Temple, Rochester, N. Y., Sabbath, Feb. 23rd. Eighty-six representatives were present. This body meets once in three years and represents its main business to be the insurance of its members. This society held a fair in this city which was continued regardless of any Sabbath, Jewish or Christian, and ended with a dance on Sabbath, March 9th.

—The Springvale, Wisconsin, Anti-secret Association is a live society. Several young men connected with it have been drilling to present the three Masonic degrees in public and have attained a degree of proficiency which warrants this step. They are now ready to present Masonry according to the latest forms before any audience and we hope to hear that their skill is to be put to good use in Columbia and adjoining counties.

—The Chicago Christian Ass'n held its regular monthly meeting at No. 221 West Madison street, Tuesday evening, March 11th. The meeting was opened with prayer by C. R. Hagerty and reading the Scriptures by the President. The number present was small. Interesting reports were made by the Secretary, Treasurer and Superintendent of the Reading Room. A conversation on the religious character of Freemasonry was then introduced by Thos. Hodge, President of the Association. He showed from Masonic works that Freemasonry was not the handmaid of Christianity. It was a rival, having a counterfeit atonement, a salvation, a resurrection. Ezra A. Cook followed. He showed the insidious manner in which Masonry works to undermine and destroy Christian morality; ever putting Christianity in comparison with itself, at a discount; calling the omissions of Christ's name from passages quoted in its ritual slight but necessary modifications; boasting itself a descendant of paganism. Mr. Hodge closed the conversation, speaking of Masonry as idolatrous; that Masons in this country were like the people of old who feared the Lord and served graven images. To counteract the tendency to idolatry the Bible was full of warnings from Genesis to Revelations. After attending to some business the hymn was read and the meeting adjourned after prayer, to re-assemble April 8th.

"Hallelujah! He is risen,"

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Congregational church, Hamilton, Miss., August 25th, 1878.

Pleasant Ridge Congregational church, Sanford Co., Ala., September, 1878.

New Hope Methodist church, Lowndes Co., Miss., October, 1878.

Congregational church, College Springs, Iowa, Dec. 7, 1878.

College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill., Jan. 4, 1879.

First Congregational Church, Leland, Mich.

—J. V. Farwell of this city has given 200 of the chairs used in the great Moody Tabernacle to Wheaton College.

—Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins, after a short visit east, have resumed their work in Chicago, which will now be carried on with the churches on the North Side. On Sabbath evening Mr. Pentecost preached to one of the largest congregations ever gathered in that part of city in Grace M. E. church.

—Bro. A. A. Wolf of Duncan, Stark county, Ill., writes that a revival work in that place has been continued now some eight or nine weeks with the joyful result of twenty conversions.

—Elder J. F. Browne, State lecturer for Illinois was engaged during February in revival work with a new church in the town of Ustick, Whiteside county. In his monthly report he says of this good work:

"The church of Christ of Ustick, Ill., was first formally organized Jan. 28, 1879; is opposed to worldliness, sectarianism and the lodge; to any compromise with the 'god of this world;' contends for Christ and the faith which was once delivered to the saints; and knows no creed but the Bible and no name but Christian. Charles C. Knight is the elder. During the month I have been engaged with this church in revival work and in the face of the bitter opposition of Masons and Pharisaical professors who got up a rival meeting and shut us out of the union church in this locality where we had a right to worship. God has greatly blessed us and strengthened us in grace and numbers. To him be all the glory!"

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Rev. N. R. Johnston, the efficient missionary among the Chinese in California, suggests a plan to the friends of missions to increase the efficiency of the work. He writes in Our Banner:

"Judging from his Word and providence I think it is the will of him who said, 'Go, teach all nations,' that the Reformed Presbyterian church would educate two or more Chinese students, and prepare them to be Covenanter missionaries in China; and also that it is the duty of the church to give us an educated native helper. We need one who is intellectual, educated and pious; we need one who knows the facts of Christianity, is familiar with its fundamental doctrines, and intelligently attached to the distinctive doctrines and practices of the Reformed Presbyterian church. Such a helper cannot be had now. Our hope is in the education of one or two of our recently baptized converts. Of these Ju Guy is the most promising. He is young, prepossessing, intellectual, amiable, and truly pious. His father, in China, has heard of his conversion to Christianity and wishes him to return home. The son wishes to remain here that he may enjoy the advantages of the ordinances of Christian fellowship. He is willing to forsake father and mother and all for Christ's sake and the gospel's; but he cannot be retained here nor educated without means."

The plan is to raise $300 in ten shares of $30 each for the annual support of a student; churches, Sabbath-schools, etc., are invited to engage in the work and raise $600 if possible.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—Having published a letter in regard to the U. B. society in Chambersburg, Pa., a brother wishes to give a brief extract from the church history to show that the principles there maintained are identical with those of the fathers:

"No minister in the church as far as the author is informed has fallen into the prevalent practice of reading his sermons, and the practice would not be tolerated in any congregation. United Brethren ministers are generally well informed men called from the field or workshop. They are good extemporaneous speakers — successful evangelists. Choirs have not been established in any congregation, and the General Conference of 1861 without a dissenting vote adopted a resolution prohibiting their introduction. Organs or other instruments of music would not be tolerated in the public worship of God. In their assemblies the men and women usually sit apart, and all join in singing. At the close of this General Conference, 1861, one of the Bishops said, 'The fact has been developed here that on all important questions this church is a unit.' "—U. B. Church History, Vol. 2, p. 422.

The above was the practice of the church for near one hundred years, but how is it now? Is it not to some extent like the man's jack-knife that had worn out three blades and two handles, but he thought it was still the same old jack-knife his grand-father had owned? Who then that has moral honesty would blame those that fear God, for inquiring for the old paths and who seek to walk therein. (Jer. 6: 16.) JOHN FELTERHOFF.

—Rev. J. W. Hott, editor of the Telescope, has three brothers, who are, with himself members of the Virginia Conference. Of its late session he writes to his paper: "The conference was decided in its expression in respect to the law of the church on secret societies. In one or two places, where the most difficulty has been in the past, a kind but faithful regard to the law has been followed with prosperity and peace; and God is prospering the work, and the church sustains the highest respect. A vote taken in the conference showed thirty-three to nine in favor of the law; and those voting in the negative did so with the explanations which expressed their indorsement of the opposition of the church to secret societies."

—The last Telescope publishes reports from a large number of churches in which there have been recently 481 conversions and 680 additions to membership.

—Last Sabbath new churches were dedicated to the worship of God—in Montezuma, O., and Pipestone, Mich., Revs. E. Counsellor and G. Sickafoose were expected to officiate respectively.

—Bishop Wright is to preside at the dedication of the first U. B. church in the Arkansas Valley, erected near Sedgwick City, Kansas, on the last Sabbath of the month.

—Rev. H. J. Becker, presiding elder at Sacramento, Cal., and editor of the Pacific Telescope, proposes to the membership in California that if they will extend the circulation of that paper he will pay proportionally to liquidate the debt now resting on the Sacramento church until it is removed.

BAPTIST.

—Rev. W. W. Ames of Menomonie, Wis., stopped in the Cynosure office on his way to Texas last Thursday. He intends to spend the winter with his son in Donley county, in the northern extension of the State, hoping to fully recover from a catarrhal difficulty of long standing. Mrs. Ames remains in Menomonie. A full statement of the persecutions he has endured, and especially the last attack of the lodge through the courts is nearly completed and will soon be given to the public.

—Elder Barlow is fulfilling every expectation of the friends in Menomonie. His ability as a speaker has given him immediate and great influence among all classes. At the regular temperance meeting in Lammer Hall on Monday evening, the 10th inst., he delivered an eloquent and instructive address. The Menomonie News has given him a department and no limitations, except that he must fight his own battles. The first article is a fine poem on the text, "The fool hath said in his heart There is no God," well calculated to reach a considerable class of readers in Menomonie.

—Rev. Justin D. Fulton, to whose difficulties with the Baptist Ministers' Conference in New York we have heretofore alluded, was about a fortnight ago formally expelled from that body. The committee to whom at the previous meeting Dr. Fulton's apology was referred wrote to him asking that he would substitute for that apology another which would be more satisfactory to the brethren. This he refused to do and the committee thereupon unanimously recommended his continued suspension. After protracted debate a motion for expulsion was adopted by a vote of twenty-three to eleven.

—At a regular covenant and business meeting of the Spring Creek Baptist church, Iowa, March 8th, 1879, the pulpit committee submitted the following report:

"We have received letters of inquiry from two ministers. These letters have not, as yet, been answered by your committee because we believe the attempted assassination of your pastor at the Spring Creek union meeting-house Feb. 9, 1879, has materially changed the duty of this church to its pastor. In the opinion of your committee for the church to willingly allow the pastoral relation to be severed at the close of the present month, would be for it to consent that it may be as Bro. Austin's enemies desire, and therefore virtually to turn him out to be stoned to death. Therefore, your committee earnestly recommend the church to reconsider the vote by which Bro. Austin's resignation was accepted, and to invite him to withdraw it and to remain with us during the entire year 1879, as pastor at the same salary he is now receiving."

The vote was reconsidered, the resignation withdrawn, and Elder Austin consented to remain as requested.

—Bro. Wm. Fenton of St. Paul, Minn., is announced to lecture in the German Baptist church of that city on Tuesday evening next.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. W. I. Phillips, of College Springs, Iowa, called at this office on his way to Oak Park, Ill., last week.

—The late Dea. Asa Otis, of Norwich, Conn., left nearly $750,000 in bequests, making the American Board of Commissioners residuary legatee. Amherst College and Yale Theological Seminary received $25,000 each.

MISSIONARY.

—Writing on a call to foreign missions, Dr. Leonard Bacon holds that if a man should present himself to a vacant church and say, "I have been considering the question and I find myself divinely called to be pastor of this church," he would not get a hearing, and yet for foreign missions men have to announce themselves, as called to the work. He wants to know why foreign missionaries should not be called in the same way in which a wise church selects and calls a pastor.—Baptist Weekly.

News of the Week.

—Elihu Burritt, the "Learned Blacksmith," died at his home in New Brittain, Conn., on the 6th inst.

—There is a great struggle for the Speakership of the next House between Randall of Pennsylvania, the last incumbent, and Blackburn of Kentucky. The latter is supported by nearly the entire Southern element.

—At the Brinley library sale in New York, on Tuesday, the first edition of Eliot's Indian version of the New Testament sold for $700. Bishop White Kennett's copy of the first edition of Eliot's Indian Bible, published at Cambridge in 1663, sold for $1,000. The Petit copy of the same work brought $550.

—Last Friday seven murderers were executed in different parts of the country: one each at Concord, N. H.; Lowell, Mass.; and Windsor, Vt.; two at Portland, Oregon; a Spaniard at Pueblo, Col., and a Chinaman at Maryville, Cal.

—Robert Smalls, the much persecuted colored Congressman from South Carolina, has recently, in a quiet way, done an act which would make a white man conspicuous, but in his case it seems to have been entirely overlooked. He was a slave before the war, and had a kind master, who was financially ruined during the rebellion, and died in poverty some years ago. Smalls recently learned that his daughter had become widowed, and was herself in a distressing condition. In the most delicate manner he arranged that she should be provided with the necessaries of life, and sent her son, a boy of 16, an appointment as cadet at the naval academy.

—The largest sum of money that was ever paid to any one man from the United States treasury in a single payment was given to Captain Eads. The amount was $750,000, which was appropriated in the river and harbor bill, to enable him to complete his jetties at the mouth of the Missiisippi river.

—In a single day last week over three thousand settlers for Kansas passed through Kansas City. There is every prospect for an immense emigration to all the Western States during this spring.

—Over 1,000 guests were invited on the evening of the 10th inst., by Cyrus W. Field, to celebrate the silver wedding of the inception of the enterprise by which Europe and America were linked by the Atlantic cable. His house in Gramercy Park, New York, was thronged with the prominent men of the country.

—According to the accounts from Sofia preparations for another insurrection in Macedonia are in active progress. The leaders are the Bishops of Sofia and Ochrida, the Russian Chief of Police of Widin, the Bulgarian bandits Storke and Petko, two Austrain deserters, two Bulgagarian civil functionaries, and an Englishman named Cooper, who served with General Tchernaieff in Servia. The Turkish government is perfectly aware of what is going on, and is taking measures on the frontier accordingly.

—Dispatches dated March 10th stated that two of the three dams protecting Szegedin, a large city in central Hungary, from the overflow of the Theiss river, burst. Five thousand men are working on the remaining one. If this bursts 70,000 people will be made homeless. Many villages are already swept away Szegedin is in a marsh on both banks of the Theiss river. Later everything gave way, and nearly the whole city crumbled into the flood. The dispatches of the 14th state: The government commissioner at Szegedin reports that he was rowed through the submerged streets, and found three-quarters of the town in ruins. He thinks if the water remains a few days longer scarcely 200 houses will be left standing. The Burgomaster estimates that several thousand persons have been drowned. He attributes the disaster to the indolence of the inhabitants, and to the fact that the government commissioners concentrated all their efforts on strengthening the dams, and did not prepare means of saving life in the event of the contingency of the breaking of the dams.

—The Lord Mayor of London, at the request of the Austrian Ambassador, has opened a subscription for the relief of Szegedin. A correspondent at Szegedin telegraphed Thursday that thousands of people were starving. A correspondent passed in one of the relief boats 400 persons who had taken refuge in a church. The boat was unable to afford them any help. There were hardly any serviceable boats available. In a school-house 1,500 people had taken refuge, and were without food. A large number of boats which were proceeding to the aid of the submerged city had been stopped by the storm, which had cut off communication by river.

—The Pall Mall Gazette says that a private letter from a high Indian official states that the people of Cashmere are dying of famine like flies, and at the present rate of mortality the province will be nearly depopulated by the end of the year.

Home and Farm.

SPRING WORK.

[From the American Agriculturist.]

Take Care of the Health.—As the snow and ice disappear, much rubbish that has collected during the winter will be uncovered. Those who live in the country are too careless about matters affecting the health. Foul surface water frequently flows into the well. Cesspools and barnyards overflow and saturate the ground, which gives off dangerous vapors under the influence of the sun's warmth. Fevers of various kinds and other diseases attack old and young. To clean until all danger is removed should be the first work of spring. The cellar under the house must not be overlooked.

Keep the Feet Dry.—A farmer should be provided with waterproof boots and overcoat, in which to work about drains, ditches, and wet barn-yards.

Hired Men.—Every farmer must decide for himself if it is better for him to hire help and cultivate more land, or cultivate less land and do without help. But it is cheaper to pay for help than to let work get behindhand, or to leave necessary work undone. The best help is the cheapest. A married laborer is as a rule the steadiest. Besides he need not be boarded in the house, to the serious inconvenience of the family, and the destruction of domestic privacy. Farmers who hire constant help, should provide a dwelling for the men, where they may be boarded by one of themselves. Farm laborers should be paid every week or every month; these short settlements prevent mistakes and disputes. Cash purchases more than credit

Drains must be examined, lest they become choked and water remain upon the crops. Stagnant water is injurious not only to all vegetation, but to stubble land, but much benefit may be gained by turning the spring wash from roads on to meadows or pastures, and causing it to spread as much as possible.

Top dressing meadows or fall grain, will be found useful. Spread the manure evenly upon the snow, if any remains, and go over with a brush harrow as soon as the ground is dry enough.

Grass and Clover Seed may be sown upon the last snow with great ease and regularity. Each strip may be sown exactly, without missing or overlapping, as the seed can be readily seen upon the surface. The seed will not be injured, as it will not vegetate until the ground becomes warm.

Fodder Crops.—A good supply of green fodder never comes amiss. Cows at pasture will always eat a meal of fresh-cut green fodder, and it helps the milk-pail. An acre or two of fall-plowed ground should be liberally top-dressed with manure, and sown early with oats and peas, or barley and vetches. The ground must be made rich; 2½ bushels of oats or barley, and 1½ of peas or vetches, should be sown.

Early Pasturing is a mistake. The stock is made dissatisfied, and lose their appetite for dry food. Trampling is very injurious to the soft soil, which does not recover from it for several years. The injury to the grass is serious. Wait until the ground is dry and there is a full bite upon the pastures. Never pasture a meadow in the spring.

Plowing.—In plowing, one may "make more haste" but get "less speed." Now plow should be put into ground that is wet, or when the soil sticks to a bright steel mold-board. If water is seen in the furrow, plowing should be stopped, although the suface may seem dry. The nearing the plowing and seeding can be brought together, the better will it be for the crop. It will be better to run two plows by and by, than begin too soon. There is plenty of work to do before one begins to plow.

Implements.—All farm implements, carts, and wagons, should be carefully overhauled. Look to the bolts and nuts especially. Use the lock nut bolt, which cannot get loose, upon all implements, machines and vehicles. Clean and oil all bearings and gearings of machinery, with the best sperm oil. Common kerosene oil and a bunch of cotton rags is the best means for removing gum and dirt. A few drops of kerosene put on a rusty nut or screw, will often loosen it. A hot iron held for a few moments to a tight nut, will loosen it by expanding it. Castor oil is the best lubricator for wagons and carriages. Use crude petroleum instead of paint, upon all tools, plows, harrows, etc., and soak the wood with it until it will take up no more. It is cheap and need not be spared. Oily rags will take fire spontaneously in warm weather, and should not be allowed to lie anywhere about.

Seeds.—If a full supply of seed has not been procured, no time should be lost. To lose a week or two at seed time, because seedsmen are crowded, or to go without scarce seeds because the stock is exhausted, is a loss of money. The best, freshest and cleanest seed only should be used. This kind costs more, but is much cheaper than poor foul seed. A change of seed is desirable, especially of such grain as peas, oats, or wheat, which are attacked with weevil, or deteriorate in weight in our warm climate.

Horses.—As the work season approaches the feed should be gradually increased. Sudden changes are dangerous. Feed only coarsely ground or "chopped" grain. Corn ears ground (corn and cob together) are not fit food for horses. The coarse, indigestible pieces of cob will irritate the intestines. Only the most digestible food should be given. A quart of linseed cake meal in the feed twice a day, for a week or two, will be a useful laxative at this season, and will help the shedding of the coat. Don't spare the curry-comb.

Cows.—In-coming cows need close attention. It is well to have a large stall in a separate building, in which each one may be kept loose until she has calved. This will prevent danger to both cow and calf, and trouble with the other cows, which are apt to be restless and lose milk upon such occasions.

Calves.—The best heifer calves should be selected to replenish the dairy. Calves to be raised should be well fed from the first, and never allowed to go back. Treat them kindly.

Sundry Matters.—As soon as the snow melts take a careful look over the farm. One cannot fail to find some things that need to be attended to. A supply of bran and flaxseed should be kept on hand, so that there will be no time lost when they are needed in a hurry for a sick animal. Procure a stone-boat for moving plows, harrows and seed. Remove the old heavy shoes from the horses' feet, and replace them with low shoes without calks. Feed all animals well and liberally, and rid the stock of all vermin. Keep all the work well advanced, and then there will never be occasion to do anything in a hurry, and so lose time.

ORCHARD AND NURSERY.

Planting.—Preparations for planting may be made this month, and in some latitudes the trees may be set out. The soil should have been prepared last year, but if it was not no time should be lost. New soils rarely need manuring, but exhausted lands must be renovated. It will be useless to set out young trees in a stiff, poor soil, and expect them to give a satisfactory return; it is true they may live and bear in time, but they can never make a healthy growth, or produce good fruit. See that there are no low spots in the orchard where ice and snow may collect and remain during the greater part of the winter: trees planted in such places do not ripen their wood properly, and are liable to be injured by early frosts, and the land cannot be cultivated until late in the spring.

Beans must not be planted until there is no danger of frost. Early valentine and dwarf wax are good bush sorts for early snaps. Case-knife, large and small limas, are best pole sorts for shelling; for late snaps the giant wax and asparagus bean.

Beets may be sown after the ground is thawed, in rows one foot apart, sowing thickly to give plenty of beet greens. The best early is Egyptian blood, bassano is good, and for late the long blood.

Carrots.—For table use the early horn is best for both early and late; it is not so large a cropper as long orange and others. Sow in rows a foot apart.

Celery—Sow seeds in a slight hot-bed, or early in the open ground. Dwarf white and dwarf crimson are best.

Corn must not be sown until all danger of frost is past. If planted every two weeks until the last of June or beginning of July, a succession may be had until late fall.

Cucumbers.—Sow on the earth side of pieces of sod and place in a hot-bed; set these in the hills when frosts are over. Or prepare a few hills in the open ground with fermenting stable manure and cover with a hand glass. Either method will give a crop far in advance of the open ground plantings.

Horseradish.—Is easily grown from sets in well manured ground, and the product is much better if planted anew every year. Set two feet apart and one foot in the rows. It may be planted between the rows of early cabbages, as they will be out of the way before that has made much growth.

Lettuce.—Set out plants from the hot-bed and cold frame as soon as large enough to handle and frosts are over. Sow seeds for second early, uncover and loosen the soil around that sown last fall in the open ground. The varieties are many; we have found Early Simpson, Hanson and Tennis Ball to be satisfactory.

Onions.—Sow Yellow Danvers and Early Red in drills fifteen inches apart in an abundantly manured soil. A good dressing of wood ashes may be given after the plants are well up. In some localities sets may be planted; both seeds and sets should be got in early. Also put out potato and top onions.

Parsnips.—Sow early in deep, rich soil; the Holland Crown or Cup in 18 inch drills; dig roots which were left in the ground over winter.

Peas.—It is our practice to put in a few rows for early use as soon as the ground is thawed. They may now and then fail, but the risk is worth taking. For main crop there is nothing better than the Champion of England, but there are numbers in the catalogues that may be tried. In small gardens the dwarfs, which need no stakes, are valuable, as they can be put in various spare places, between rows of later plants, and thus utilize every foot of ground. Sow the tall varieties in double rows six inches apart, and set the brush between them.

Potatoes.—Only early sorts should find a place in the garden. A few may be forwarded by starting sets in boxes of earth in a hot-bed, and some may be putin the open ground early at a venture. Early Rose is the establised early variety.

Radishes.—If wanted early, sow in a gentle hot-bed or cold frame, French Breakfast, Olive Shaped and Early Turnip. When the ground is open sow in drills, a foot apart, once a week for a succession.

Squashes.—If desired early they may be started on the hot-bed on sods as directed for cucumbers. Summer Crookneck is best early. The late sorts need a warm and highly manured soil with more manure in the hills.

Tomatoes.—There are many good sorts, but one cannot go amiss if he takes Conqueror or Canada Victor for early, and Trophy for main and late crops. Start in hot-bed or window boxes and transplant once, if not twice, before setting out. A few may be petted in pots to be turned out when it is safe.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicongrapher, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

Red Clover Tea

A Cure for All Blood Diseases.

I am seventy years of age, am in good health for one of my years. Fourteen years since I had Scirrhus Cancer. Tea made from Red Clover Blossoms cured me. I have advised its use in many bad cases of Salt Rheum and it has proved a success. By permission I refer to Capt. David H. Small, No. 44 Winchester Ave., Chicago, who was cured by the use of clover tea of a cancer in the stomach after being pronounced incurable by physicians. I will gladly impart all the information in my power, and no charge, when a stamp is sent. I have the clover picked in full bloom and cured the same day with the Alden Dryer. It is not possible to have it better; also the Extract, equally good.

Topics of the Time.

The evangelist Pentecost has been greeted more warmly than ever since resuming Gospel work in Chicago. Grace Methodist church, on the North Side, has proved to narrow for the audiences, and the well known Moody church (Chicago Avenue) near by has been opened. Last Friday evening Mr. Pentecost displayed a moral heroism as grand as it was rare. He was preaching from the text "Ye must be born again," and during the discourse gave from his own experience a testimony against the lodge, which, all things considered, was truly wonderful. He said that he was once truly in moral darkness. When about twenty-four years old he was persuaded to join the Masonic lodge, and during the ceremony found himself hood-winked, tied up with a rope, and his clothing nearly all removed. He felt indeed that he was in the depth of moral darkness, and as soon as he could extricate himself he abandoned such an institution forever. With their usual Masonic sagacity the the press reports of this sermon omit every mention of these sentimets, and we are dependent for this brief and imperfect notice upon the memory of a friend who was present.

A mob of thirty thousand foreigners, half drunk, a thousand of them armed and drilled, howling all last Saturday night in and about the Chicago Exposition building, we should say was an interesting spectacle—very. There were no Chinamen in that army of Marat, either. A most fit celebration for the memory of the petroleum fiends of Paris! But, truly, if the great brewer and Freemason, citizen Conrad Seipp, who wants to be elected city treasurer; or Schmidt, who wants to be mayor; or the hair-brained Parsons, who wants subscribers for his paper, think they can climb the ladder of Jacobinism to office and spoil, they may find an end to their road sooner than did Robespierre or Danton. Such scenes might do for New York, or even for Cincinnati, which aspires to be the Paris of America; but the citizens of Chicago will support our mayor if he will prevent such displays here in future.

Our Washington correspondent gives us an inside view of the Forty-sixth Congress which assembled at noon on the 18th inst. for the extra session. Little was accomplished by way of business during the week, but the leading party found they were not very strongly leading after all, and on a close vote could count on but one majority in the House. The President is, therefore, yet master of the situation. One feature of the organization for those of us who fought and prayed through the days of war is painful to say the least. We cannot read calmly that ex-Confederate General Joseph E. Johnston will probably be chairman of the House military committee; that Withers of prison-pen fame is chairman of the committee on pensions; and that the subordinate offices of Congress are liberally bestowed on ex-colonels and staff officers who were on the wrong side.

Archbishop Purcell has written a letter to the public, explaining the reasons of his enormous debt. He claims that but half a million was the amount of the original deposits; the rest, three or four millions, is the result of compound interest. The money was invested, not in secured loans, but in Romish libraries, orphan asylums, churches, cathedrals and in educating priests at the diocesan seminary. He has paid the salaries of the professors, and fed, clothed and educated the student priests. That is, he has taken the pittances of the poor promising to return the same with interest payable annually or oftener, as all savings banks do—then he used the money as if he never expected to refund it! He asks for sympathy from Catholics and Protestants. He don't deserve it. The whole transaction is a fraud by confession; and age and ecclesiastical position should not shield him.

The exodus of the colored people from the South has begun in earnest. It has set in the same direction with the best class of emigrants from Europe, and the hard-working poor of our Northern States—to the prairies of Kansas and Nebraska. Hundreds have passed through St. Louis and hundreds more will follow. Southern papers raise an outcry at losing their laborers, and depict the miseries of emigration. Their advice will be as little heeded as their threats have been a source of terror. It is, too, an evidence of the persecutions to which this people have been subjected which cannot be denied; but, perhaps, most of all the South is troubled because they are going where their votes will do some good. It cannot be denied that there must be suffering among them; but it is no worse than they have endured, surely; and need not be more than the poor from other lands endure for a few years. Acknowledging the worst that can be said, the cause for this exodus from the South is patent, and we cannot blame the blacks for fleeing, when persecuted in one city, into another. The movement seems to be spontaneous so far and confined entirely to the colored people.

The Mormons are said to be utterly defiant, and since the Supreme Court decision against polygamy their adulterous practice called marriage has gone on with increased zeal. The Deseret News, edited and published by George Q. Cannon, delegate to Congress, and Brigham Young, Jr., discusses the late decision, and attempts to rouse religious fanaticism with such arguments as these: Celestial marriage, including the doctrine of plurality of wives, was revealed to them directly from God. It does not matter who may dispute this as a fact, they have evidence of it which to them is complete, leaving no room for doubt. The skepticism or disbelief of others makes no difference at all to them. Congress, many years after this doctrine became an integral part of their religious creed, the practice of which was commanded by the Almighty, passed a statute, declaring what God had authorized a crime against the law. The Supreme Court now affirms that law to be valid. Does this affect in any way the truth that God has revealed and commanded it? Not in the remotest degree. The principles that underlie plural marriage are just as true to-day as they were at any previous time, and no human law or court decision can possibly alter or abrogate them. The issue is between the Supreme Being and those who venture, ignorantly or otherwise, to oppose his purposes and designs.

The new mining regions of Colorado at Leadville and Gunnison, southwest of Denver, are attracting a crowd of adventurers to repeat the experiences of the Pike's Peak and Black Hills gold fever. The principal productions of the mines are silver and lead, and the probabilities of an immense production from these new mines have sent down the prices. Within two days lead fell from $50 to $20 per ton and silver has dropped nearly four cents an ounce since January. The report that gold quartz assaying $20,000 per ton has been discoverd will keep up mining stock permanently if true; if otherwise it will answer the purpose of speculators until their mining stock is sold. Railroads are nearly completed to this new land of wealth and its full capacity for production will soon be thoroughly tested.

ACT OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF RHODE ISLAND, JANUARY, 1834, WITH REMARKS BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Whereas, on the memorial of sundry citizens of the State the several incorporated Masonic societies in the State, styling themselves lodges, chapters, encampments and councils, have been regularly cited to appear before this Assembly and show cause, if they have any, why their several charters should not be declared forfeited and void; and said societies having accordingly appeared and been heard by their counsel, and a full investigation having taken place into their principles, practices and proceedings; from which investigation it appears that their usages enjoin secrecy on their members and also require obligations to be administered which could never have been within the contemplation of the legislatures which granted their charters; Therefore

Section 1st.—Be it enacted by the General Assembly, and by the authority thereof it is enacted, that the several acts of incorporation hereinafter cited, viz., "An Act to incorporate Providence Council of Royal and Select Masters," passed January 1824; "An Act to incorporate the Providence Encampment of Knights Templars" passed May, 1824; "An Act to incorporate the Pautucket Chapter No. 4, of Royal Arch Masons," passed May, 1824; "An Act to incorporate Union Lodge, No. 10, of Free and Accepted Masons," passed May, 1824; "An Act to incorporate Evening Star Lodge, No. 17, of Free and Accepted Masons," passed June, 1827; "An Act to incorporate LaFayette Lodge, No. 19, of Free and Accepted Masons in the Town of Cumberland"—be and the same is hereby repealed. [It was provided that they might continue one year for the sole purpose of collecting debts and dividing their property, after which they should not exist.]

Sec. 2d.—And be it further enacted, that each and every society of the Order of Free and Accepted Masons, lodges, chapters, encampments, councils, or by whatever name or style the same may be known which is now incorporated by any act of the Legislature of this State, shall so long as they shall remain so incorporated make returns, in writing, yearlyand each year to the Secretary of the State at the May session of the General Assembly, or before the second day of the session, of the number and names of their members and officers, the number and names of the persons who have been admitted to such Masonic society within the year last preceding the returns, with the mode and manner of their admission and the form of the promise or obligation which such new members have taken on their admission; the place and times of the meeting of such society, holden within the last year; together with a schedule or inventory of all the funds and property, real or personal, belonging to the said corporation at the date of said returns. And said returns shall be signed by the presiding officer of said Masonic corporation, and an oath or affirmation of the truth made before some judge of the Supreme Court or justice of the court of Common Pleas of the county where such incorporated society is located, and a certificate by said judge or justice endorsed and attached to said returns.

Sec. 3d. And be it further enacted, that for every violation of this act, the presiding officer of said society neglecting to make returns aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $100, to be sued for and recovered in action of debt quitau before any court of competent jurisdiction in the county where such presiding officer shall reside; one-half thereof to go to the person who shall prosecute for the same and the other half for the use of the State.—The above was copied from the official records in Providence, R. I., March 12, 1879. In the month of May, 1834, the other Masonic bodies, including the Grand Lodge of the State, surrendered their charters, and by the act of the Legislature they were declared void.

From the foregoing it appears:

1st. That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island did make a full investigation of all the facts in reference to Freemasonry in that State.

2d. That their judgment was based on the testimony of the Masonic societies and their counsel.

3d. That it was found that the obligations and general character of these societies was such that they could not be safely tolerated in the State.

4th. That all Masonic charters were repealed or surrendered.

5th. That the Legislature of Rhode Island claimed and exercised the right of inspection as applied to Masonry, and required full returns to be made of all the obligations administered, and all ceremonies practiced. This most righteous act continued on the statute book until 1842, when amidst the excitement of the Dow rebellion it was repealed.

There are now in the city of Providence eighty-five secret societies—sixteen of them Masonic—and only eighty-four religious organizations of all kinds.

It was Dean Swift who said that "it was easy to see what the Lord thought of money, judging by those to whom he gave it." We all know that this is not true as a proposition, yet there are times when we are forced to recall it with a keen sense of its force and meaning. We quote it mentally, and are naturally a little comforted thereby, when we see arrogance and ignorance, coarseness and prejudice, delicately clad and luxuriantly fed, while the finest and noblest natures are too often overwhelmed with petty cares or suffering under numberless privations.—Sel.

Making Masons by Anti-masonic Lecturers.

BY REV. W. S. FULTON.

We are frequently told, "Your Anti-masonic lecturers are increasing the number of Masons." If that be true, then brethren Stoddard, Rathbun, Browne, and other well-meaning but imprudent(?) men would better stop instanter.

But is that assertion true? We say emphatically, No. it is not true. Masons themselves do not believe it. They like to have what Stoddard calls "Jack Masons" assert it and cry out it is so; but they tremble every time one of these men takes the platform to denounce their darling institution.

Let me give my reasons now for denying the assertion that the number of Masons is increased by Anti-masonic lecturers.

1. It is contrary to all reform experience.

Noah is the first reformer we will mention. Now he preached reform and he "was a preacher of righteousness too." He preached a long while. I expect the ministers of his time, if there were any besides himself, held up their hands and said: "Don't say such hard things; the people can't bear them." "Things certainly can't be as bad as you say." "Why, brother Noah, here are good men doing this and that, and the thing can't be so bad." But Noah preaches away and says: "Yes, things are bad"—"Wickedness abounds in the earth." "Every imagination of the thoughts of man's heart was evil every day." "God is about to destroy the world, if it repent not of its sins."

The world went on in its idolatry; God destroyed the world save Noah and his family. Let the reader draw his own inferences.

Another reformer we mention was Abraham. He was a man who was called upon to separate himself from the world. (Gen. 12: 1.) The Lord's first word to Abraham is, that he should leave his father and his kinsmen and the idolatrous house in which he lived and go to a land God would show him. Away he must go; faith his guide; God his trust.

By going forth he renounced and rebuked idolatry. "Actions speak louder than words," and thus he lifted up his voice mightily against Baal worship.

Now did not God sanction and approve these reform movements? Certainly he did. And will he not sanction and approve these staunch and noble men who are coming out and denouncing idolatry in our own land? Yes, he has shown his approval by what he has done for them. God is blessing them in their labors, and to say that they are making more Masons than Anti-masons, is to say God is cursing them.

But look at other reform movements. How was slavery crushed? God, it is true, smashed its hydra head, but he used means to kill the beast. What means? Public discussion and agitation. The dark clouds of that day are fast sinking in the east, and the sun shines out brightly on the land now, but there was a day when to denounce slavery was as unpopular and dangerous as it is to denounce Freemasonry now. That was an open fight, an open enemy; but secretism is a sneaking hidden enemy. It has lurking places in the sanctuary, in the state—yea, in the family.

Look again at intemperance. Temperance to-day has a thousand tongues to advocate it. But was it always so? Once the pulpit, largely at least, and the press both were almost silent. A man arose here and there to speak in favor of temperance; but many, the great majority of preachers held up their hands just as they are doing to-day about Masonry, and said, "Don't say too hard things about whisky! We have some men in our church who sell whisky and like a dram once in a while. We must deal gently." Poor fellows! Did such men make temperance popular? No, never. And would public opinion be so generally correct on that subject as it is had no one said or done anything? No, never. Did you ever hear of these easy-going, slip-shod fellows educating and leading the minds of people up to a correct standard? Did you ever hear of their fighting with Apollyon as Christian did in Pilgrim's Progress? Did you ever hear of their "resisting unto blood, striving against sin"? No, never.

But who have made drunkenness and intemperance so unpopular? History answers that and every intelligent man and woman knows. And we say, "Honor to whom honor is due."

When Betsy kills the beast, John comes down from the loft, takes up the poker, plies it savagely to the "nasty brute." and exclaims to his neighbors, "Look what a beast me and Betsy killed!"

So when slavery is dead—when temperance is made popular by Betsy (woman), a great many men stick their heads out of the doors and windows of the churches, etc., etc., and cry lustily: "Slavery was an enormous, gigantic evil." "It's wiped out now." "The poor black man has his rights." "We'll take care of you." "Come on."

So it is with temperance. Once, from policy men, who are loud now,

"Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note,"

No, scarcely a whisper could we hear from them. To-day they shout, "We've done it."

Such conduct reminds me of frogs in a pond. I was walking along the road a few days ago, and came upon a frog pond. It was just after a shower, and the frogs were out in all their regalia, green vest and striped pants, and were singing very poetically I suppose, but not very harmoniously. But as I came near, there was a sudden pause—not a voice was heard. The thought struck me, That's just like a great many men, yes, and preachers too. When the clouds of reproach and scorn and derision roll away from a subject, and the sun smiles, they mount every stand and say, "Give it to the devil. Give it too him. Hit him again." But let Freemasonry step along and how soon every mouth is stopped.

What I was to those frogs, Freemasonry is to many who can loudly speak and preach against sins that are unpopular now. It silences them. It spikes their guns. Now, reader, before closing this point please ask yourselves these questions:

(1.) Has God sanctioned this method of coming out and denouncing sin, publicly and fearlessly? Read 2 Cor. 6: 14–18; Rom. 2: 21–23.

(2.) Who have done God's service most good and benefited mankind most—the men who have spoken fearlessly and faithfully against sin, or those who have waited till it is popular to speak against a particular sin; which?

(3.) Does not all reform experience prove that to destroy any sin and its influence, is to openly condemn and denounce it?

(4.) Will, then, these good and true men be likely to increase the sin of Freemasonry by increasing the number of the craft?

No, for it is contrary, as we have tried to show, to all past reform experience.

2. Again. That exposing Freemasonry either by lectures, or Ronayne's expositions, will not increase the number of the craft, is evident from the conduct of members of the lodge.

The conduct of Masons toward Anti-masonic lecturers denies the assertion that they help to increase Masonry.

Let Bro. Stoddard or Blanchard or any Anti-masonic lecturer, be announced to lecture in a Masonic town, and will not Masons fly as hawks (not doves) to their windows, to their roosts?

Why? What do they fly there for? Are they going to appropriate him some of their charity money? Masons say such men are to be pitied! and if they have such a charitable institution, why couldn't they just hand him over a few hundred dollars and raise him "on the five points of fellowship" above want?

But do they do that? Not a bit of it. Do they fly to the "upper chamber" to get on their regalia? Sometimes they do, I know, but it is not for the lecturer's benefit if they do. Do they fly up there to get out handbills? to circulate the word? No. Do they go there to tell Dr. Jones to announce it from the pulpit on Sabbath? No. Dr. Jones is never at home when one of these fellows that "that turn the world upside down" comes around. He's always "out of town!"

Do they assemble to vote that Mr. Anti-mason may use their hall or temple to lecture in? No. They don't do that kind of business. That's the "sanctum sanctorum," and no man "covered with the filth and pollution of the outer world" can enter. Do they resolve to go and get every body else to go? No. They dont't do that either. What! will the Masons not do any thing, and yet say to this lecturer, "You are increasing our numbers!"

Now, reader, don't you think they are making Masons fast by such conduct? Every sensible man can see it is absurd.

But let a good Anti-masonic lecturer be announced where they are, and what do they do? They do fly as hawks to their hiding place, and for the purpose of tearing him to pieces. How?

(1.) By stopping all avenues of advertising if they can. In many places the press is hoodwinked; the church is barred, the minister's mouth is padlocked. If you pay for an advertisement it is stuck away in some obscure part of the paper. "Keep quiet," is the policy. "Don't let the people know of it." Shame on an institution that resorts to such means!

(2.) By injuring the character of the lecturer. Freemasonry, in this, is like a serpent with poisonous fangs. It spits its venom against any one who interferes with its wicked designs.

The readers of the Cynosure need not be told by me how secretism resorts to everything mean to vilify and ruin the character of Anti-masonic lecturers. If these men make more Masons and help the cause, why do the brethren of the lodge try to ruin the good name of any man who opens his mouth against them? Why is this? David complains of the wicked man in the 10th Psalm. So may every faithful lecturer say of Freemasonry. Read the 7th and 11th verses.

Reader, do you believe this assertion that "lecturing and talking against this evil institution will increase its power and influence?" If you do, then you must stop all reform movements. You must stop preaching the Gospel itself!

But you do not believe it. Those who make the above assertion do not believe it. No, its only an excuse. It only to shirk duty with some and escape controversy. You who believe Freemasonry with its kindred orders is wrong, speak and write and lecture against it.

Let us say to these noble men who are devoting their energies, yea, their lives, in lecturing against Masonry, God be with you! Go on in the name of Him who said, "Go ye into all the world," and who hath left you the promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, to the end of the world."

Dresden, O.

Signs of Alarm.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I am exceedingly glad of the work your valuable sheet is doing in exposing the evils of Masonry, and the success with which our lecturers meet throughout our land. The proceedings of some of the Grand Lodges in the past year show that a great change is taking place, and that it required immediate action on their part to remedy that change.

The Masonic Jewel says, "Masonry is not a mercenary society. Yet I am afraid that biased by friends and influenced by mercenary motives, many are induced to join our order, who, after they find there is no money in it, or that it does not suit their purposes, quit attending lodge and paying dues, and are dropped from the rolls and become non-affiliates." This is of so common an occurrence at the present day, that the Grand Lodge of New York has been "advised" to take the matter under a careful consideration. The Advocate of May 29th in alluding to this point in its Masonic columns under the heading of "Grand Lodge" says there are many matters to come before it, "which require the most careful scrutiny," and it is "important that due deliberation should be given to the subjects." Again it says, "There are no two lodges working alike, and in many the different officers use different language," and closes by asking the question, "Where is uniformity, and what is it?" That's the point we Anti-masons desire to know. Echo resounds. It is confusion. It is Babel.

The same sheet of June 5th under the heading of "Grand Lodge of New York," among other things says, "The financial condition of the order in New York is not happy; its membership in common with the general public is, as a rule, impecunious, and as a result there are more men disgraced by suspension for non-payment of dues, than has ever been known before—suspended for the only reason that they have no money in the pocket, while they have uncoined gold in their hearts. This should be a subject of thought—suspend benefits if you please—but don't withdraw sympathy and fellowship from a good man and a good Mason, because he is poor. At the bottom of all present difficulties in the order in New York now, is the simple word money."

This subject of thought, as the Advocate styles it, was before the Grand Lodge. Its ranks are weakening, more than has been known before according to its own medium. Its financial condition not happy; and in order to blindfold outsiders and to keep up a good showing amongst themselves, now look after non-affiliates. Such as the Masonic Jewel speaks of as biased by friends and influenced by mercenary motives are induced to join the order. The Advocate of July 24th, under "Correspondence and Answers," on this point says in answer to the question, "Why is it that when members cannot pay their dues they are expelled from the lodge? Is it because they are poor?" Ans. First, No lodge can expel for non-payment of dues only. They can only suspend in some jurisdictions; in New York only drop from the roll, as is termed, for one year; and if at the expiration of the year they fail to pay or make provision, they are suspended. It is not, strictly speaking, because the members are poor, but because the lodge will have to pay the Grand Lodge tax, and to save the payment of that tax they slaughter the member whether he be a good one or a bad one, never stopping to ascertain if the brother is poor and cannot pay; thereby ignoring one of the most important, if not vital, landmarks of the institution. The almighty dollar is uppermost in their thoughts. It can hardly be charged that it is because the delinquent members are poor, but the losing sight of their duty to their fellows in the hour of their distress. It is all wrong, and the great fraternity will see it some day, and if not then too late, remedy it."

This same Advocate speaks of the retrograding movement of Mississippi, Illinois and Wisconsin, by turning the Council degree over to the Chapter, in which Iowa, South Carolina and a few other jurisdictions are soon to follow, may be based upon two reasons. It says: "First. The Companions feeling mortified at the continued disregard and slight with which the Council degrees have been looked upon by all those who have sought the honor of knighthood, in not first obtaining those degrees before they received additional honors, caused the action of placing the Council degrees in the bosom of the Chapter, by which they undoubtedly contemplated to coerce all such candidates into the necessity of obtaining these degrees. The Council degrees having been placed under the control of the Chapter, of necessity are now part and parcel of that body, and the Chapter degrees being a prerequisite to the order of Knights Templar, they will be forced to receive them. Second. A reform in the multiplicity of grand bodies, separate and independent, as they now exist."

In the issue of May 29th under Correspondence and Answers says to correspondent Egypt, Jackson county, Ky., in relation to certain publications, that "all such are frauds, and very injurious to the brother who might attempt to use them, as he would be set down as an impostor. All those engaged in the publication of such books are clandestine." How about the list of standard and popular works on Freemasonry as furnished by the Advocate and published in the number of July 17th, viz.: General Ahimon Rezon and Freemasons' Guide, by Daniel Sickels 33°; Symbolism of Freemasonry, by Albert G. Mackey, M. D.; Text Book of Masonic Jurisprudence, by the same author; Freemason's Monitor, by Macoy & Sickels, and a host of others? Are they clandestine? If so must not Masonry be clandestine?

C. H. Elliott.

Chandler the Magician.

At the beginning of the war of the rebellion there were two members of Congress who insisted on a thorough application of the war powers of the government for suppressing treason and restoring constitutional order and law. These men had faith in the powers of the Constitution to vindicate liberty and to hang rebels. Their names were Wade of Ohio, and Chandler of Michigan.

Strange as it may seem, these men were set upon by the Republican press of the country for their opinions, and so constantly pursued with abuse and detraction, that at last the public came to think them deserving of disgrace. Mr. Wade went down to his grave with public odium upon his head, and Mr. Chandler has with difficulty overcome popular ill will so far as to struggle back into the Senate of the United States. Senator Sumner was dead; Senator Wade was dead; and Senator Chandler survived, seemingly only in name, and without any power. All obstacles seemed removed from the way of an easy fraternization of the Democrats with the rebel leaders. An extra session had been rendered necessary by Democratic connivances in which the Democrats would have the ascendancy in the Senate, and a happy return to the spoils of the government lay open before them. Jefferson Davis and Mormon soldiers were to have pensions; then rebel soldiers might hope to come in for pay and bounty; then slaves were to be paid for; then a change of government to the imperial form; then there was no end to the vista of glory that opened up before the delighted Democracy. What a feast for hungry men lay opened out before them after eighteen long and weary years of enforced abstinence.

But in the midst of these glowing anticipations, that one man of three who always insisted that Jefferson Davis should be "hung on a sour apple tree," arose and made a speech. It was a short speech, not a long one; thunder-bolts don't last very long. The giants of debate, the Masonic Blaine and Conkling, were cowering before the glorification of their fellow Mason, Jefferson Davis, when Chandler arose. The Senate chamber was full of the cloud and incense of the glory of Jefferson Davis, and there was but one single vote wanting to give Davis a pension from the government which he has never regretted having tried his best to destroy!

Of course, we all know that rebel devotion to Jefferson Davis means devotion to the rebellion, and nothing else. There is no personal attachment in it; for Robert I. was the favorite candidate for the first emperor. Davis merely held the stirrup for Lee to mount. The rebels would probably prefer even Grant to Davis for the imperial throne.

Such was the state of things in the United States Senate, when Senator Chandler, awakened from a sleep, arose as if all the years since 1861 had been slept away in an unpleasant dream, and he was called on to make a war-speech. As he proceeded in his speech, he towered up in the presence of Democrats and rebels like some strange magician, conjuring up scenes which they had supposed had long since been forgotten.

Reader, did you ever witness that scene in the feast where Macbeth sees the ghost of his blood-spotted victim coming up in the midst of the guests and taking his own seat? Fancy that it was the guests at the feast who saw the ghost instead of the guilty Macbeth, and you may have some idea of the effect which was produced upon Democratic Senators by Mr. Chandler's speech. They saw visions that struck them dumb with astonishment and affright. Not one word could they utter. They looked at each other with amazement and suspense, as the image of Jefferson Davis (without a pension) melted away amidst clouds of floating incense, while the voice of applause, as if from far-coming generations, broke upon rebel ears, and awoke them to utter dismay.

What the Republican Senators present from New England thought and felt, who have never insisted on a proper execution of the Constitution and laws against the rebellion, due to the respect which we owe to republican government; especially what the senators from Vermont felt, which State had utterly failed during the war to maintain its antecedents as a model republic that had emphatically abolished slavery years before subscribing to the constitutional compact of the federal government; what all Republican senators must have felt who have stood by with folded hands and seen Mr. Chandler under an outrageous cloud of newspaper oppression while trying almost alone to roll back the accumulating forces of an ill-suppressed rebellion;—what all men and women would have felt who have lost a thousand millions of bad debts as the consequences of a badly conducted war, we can only conjecture; but there the magician stood, and with the rod of eloquence drew a circle at which the rebel forces subsided like stormy waves upon an iron coast. One single man accomplished at last what thousands had recreantlly failed to undertake, and which they had lost all power to do by a timid submission to unworthy fears, or to a cool calculation of self interest.

But are Republican senators emboldened by the speech, and are the Democracy intimidated by it? Are they frightened by the visions which they have seen? Not at all. Neither party, weighted as it is by the antecedents of the last thirty years, is capable of rising to the level demanded by the republic. Both parties are so compromised with the low, grovelling spirit of the Masonic lodge; are so given over to the witchcraft and necromancy of the sly fraternity, that they can no more serve the interests of the republic than the witch of Endor could sustain the failing fortunes of King Saul.

Senator Chandler's speech, though of crushing weight and force, has come too late to have the desired effect; and the danger is that the people will delay action too long on our Anti-masonic platform to save the republic. There is no time for delay when a single vote, or so, would have given a pension to an unrepentant rebel. When the ship of state is among such breakers, a stronger party must come forward and take the helm, or her safety will depend alone upon mere accident and chance, and not upon the cool minds and strong arms of the best men of the country.

If any of our readers have read the speech to which we allude, and which is now ringing through the country as did formerly Webster against Hayne, let them remember that the voice which has kindled such a fire in the American breast, was not the voice of Senator Chandler as representative of Michigan; it was not the voice of the Republican party; it was not the voice of the people of Michigan, who were largely from Vermont in Anti-masonic days, but it was the voice of a mere individual: it was the voice of a magician, the abused, the derided, the condemned Zach. Chandler who spoke.

Reform News.

From the Indiana Work.

Veedersburg, Ind, Mar. 17, '79.

Dear Cynosure:—I will once more let my friends in Indiana know where I am and what I am doing. On my route I found brethren Kuffle and Holderman in health and faithful, but Bro. John Adams, one of the true and faithful, has gone to his reward. We miss him at Roann from our reform ranks.

At Idaville, White Co., I found many excellent friends. Got permission to speak in the U. P. church and circulated appointments, but when the time came the house was not opened. In conversation with one of the officers of the church, he told me I should have seen the other side. I closed the conversation by asking said officer how many sides the United Presbyterians have on this question. At this place they have taken in some whom their law excludes.

The Seceders however offered their house south of Burnettsville, and pursuant to notice we had a good hearing. I have now spoken in every Seceder meeting house in the State and have, I think, many excellent friends among that body of Christians. I am now in Fountain county, where we have had excellent meetings and have opened the way for a rousing annual meeting at Attica. The friends here are very anxious and are willing to support it financially. I am now enjoying the hospitality of our staunch friend, Rev. Wm. Hoobler, whose faith rests only on the sure Gospel foundation. But I must go hence to other fields of work.

Respectfully, S. L. Cook.

New England Notes.

Waterford, Mass., Mar. 10, 1879.

Dear Bro. K.:—A four hour's detention at a railroad depot enables me to do up some back correspondence. I lectured a second evening in the Town Hall at Southbridge on the 6th inst. It was very unpleasant and the audience was small; but I think a good impression was produced, especially on the pastors of the Congregational and M. E. churches, who seemed thoroughly convinced of the importance of the reform and disposed to do their duty in the matter. One bought some books and the other took a list of books to purchase hereafter.

From here I went to Hudson, Mass., not forty miles away, but as difficult of access as though it had been two hundred. The leading lines of railroads in New England are models of convenience and cheapness, but the shorter lines are about the most expensive and inconvenient of any I have ever seen. Hudson is a new thriving manufacturing village about due west from Boston. It has Baptist, M. E. and Unitarian churches besides the Romanists. The whole place seems given up to the lodge, and almost every man you meet wears some kind of Masonic jewelry. Daniel Stratton, brother of Rufus Stratton of your city, is the exception, and he has borne faithful testimony amidst abounding opposition. His pastor, who is a Mason, told me that if a man lived up to the teachings of Masonry he would be saved, although he admitted that Masonry did not require him to believe in Christ, and he is not a Unitarian, but a Methodist. Bro. S. told me of a little discussion that he had not long since. He took occasion to say that he did not see the need of secrecy in order to promote temperance, and thought it ought to be omitted. His pastor said he was reminded of Dr. Beecher's old dog who got a woodchuck into a stone wall, and though it was taken out and killed, still the old dog would bark at the hole. He said the hunt for the Masonic woodchuck was finished forty years ago, and he thought it was about time to stop barking. Bro. Stratton told him he had no doubt Mr. Beecher was a smart man and had a smart dog, but he thought he knew as much about a woodchuck as Beecher did. He said that his dog got a woodchuck into the wall and after they got him out the old dog still barked, and they soon got out another. Still the old dog was unwilling to leave, and they soon found a third, and then he left at once. The woodchucks were not all caught forty years ago, and he should keep up his barking until they were.

On Saturday evening, the 8th, we had a hall finely filled. Three-fourths were Masons and there was but one lady, but her warm sympathy kept her in her seat to the end. The feelings of the Masons were unusually bitter, and after talking nearly two hours I had much difficulty in getting out of the hall. The Worthy Master declared that no such books as Webb's Monitor, Sickel's, Mackey's or Chase's works were ever used by Masons, and that all my quotations were the inventions of Anti-masons. Others who were members of the lodge, chapter and commandary declared they had never heard of any such publications. Some godless and profane men thought I had done very wrong in quitting the work of the ministry to lecture against Masonry, and hoped I would resume that sacred calling. I told them I appreciated their advice and that we would have an anxious seat for their special benefit. The pastor of the Baptist church attended and assured me of his sympathy.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 12th.—I am writing in the office of Bro. A. M. Paull. I went from Hudson to Thompson, Conn., where I spoke in the Town Hall on the 10th and 11th to fair audiences of attentive listeners. Thompson is one of the most beautiful of the country villages of New England. It has a Baptist and a Congregational church, and both the pastors are thoroughly in sympathy with our work. The Baptist minister made remarks fully endorsing what I had said and the Congregational minister promised to bring the matter before the Association with which he is connected.

Bro. J. S. Perry was present on both occasions and made excellent remarks. I have found no one in New England so well prepared to discuss this subject as he, and I venture to send his name to be put in the list of lecturers. Since I came here I have visited the State House and copied the record of the act of the General Assembly of January, 1834, repealing the Masonic charters.

MARCH 17.—I have been most kindly entertained and aided by our earnest friend, A. M. Paull, and have made the acquaintance of some true friends of our reform. This city, which is the second in New England, and numbers about 100,000 inhabitants, seems to be almost wholly under lodge rule, and yet there is a strong undercurrent of feeling against its despotic power. Rev. M. S. McCord of the United Presbyterian church, is faithful to the principles of his denomination and an outspoken friend of our cause. His church has been considerably contaminated with secretism, which he by faithful and patient labor is endeavoring to purge out. The Free Baptist church has for its pastor Rev. Mr. Brewster, who says he heartily sympathizes with and endorses our movement. The Baptist churches, the most numerous body in this city and State, are said to be unanimous in their opposition to the lodge. I called on three of them and they all expressed a decided sympathy with our work. One week ago to-day at their ministers' meeting they devoted three quarters of their hour to a discussion of Masonry, with a unanimous conclusion that it was practically hostile to the cause of Christianity.

Rev. E. G. Taylor, of the First church, occasionally bears testimony against it in the pulpit, and yet his and all the other churches have in them so large a percentage of secretists that such testimonies amount to very little in their practical results. Of the Congregational pastors I cannot speak positively, but I think none of them are Masons; nor are all the Methodist Episcopal ministers ensnared in this abomination.

I have spoken here but once on the 14th, in East Providence. The night was dark and rainy and I was sick. Our meeting was small but I hope not without some good results.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., Mar. 18.—I came here from Providence last evening. Before leaving I called on Rev. M. Earnst, a Lutheran minister, now employed on the editorial staff of one of the city papers. I found him to be a man of fine mind and attainments and in hearty sympathy with our work, withal he is fearless and outspoken. I left the city of Roger Williams in the earnest hope that the spiritual freedom that he established there is to have a revival. I am consulting with Bro. Conant about plans for the future and may come West. Yours in the Lord.

BRO. STODDARD'S WORK IN OHIO.

DRESDEN, O., Mar. 12, 1879.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—We have had the General Secretary, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, in our bounds lately, and I wish to give a brief report of the work done while he was with us,

He lectured in Zanesville, Ohio, March 14th, giving three lectures, one in the forenoon, one in the afternoon, and one at night. The audience was small considering the size of Zanesville, a place of about 24,000 inhabitants. Why it was so only those who know something of the difficulty of getting up a meeting in a strong Masonic hold can tell.

Let me give a few of the difficulties we met with in preparing for these lectures. In the first place we couldn't find a single active worker in this reform in the city of Zanesville. Out of 24,000 not one could be found to take the lead. Not a paper (there are four published) would notice the meeting, except one which gave a little notice in an obscure place. Mr. James McFarland, Newtonville, eight miles away, sent word a week before to have the meeting announced, but only this one paper deigned to announce it. Then they were paid for advertising it. They advertised the lecture, pocketed the money and that's the last we heard from them. And here let me tell the readers of the Zanesville papers, I sent a report of the lectures, but not a word was published, and that too, after reading my communication and saying they would publish it. The cable-tow is around all of them.

Next we tried the pulpits, but we fared no better here. One minister (a U. B.) promised to announce it. Still he did not come near our meetings, and whether he announced them or not I can't tell. Unless he did, not a minister in Zanesville could be prevailed on to do it. What else can I call it than slavery? When these two great forces are held by Masonic rule, is it much wonder a few strangers, living miles away, could get information to the 24,000 in Zanesville?

And then the Masons did all they could to keep the lecturer from being heard. While Bro. Stoddard was speaking the fraternity passed along the streets in a funeral procession.

Still, we trust much good has been done. Bro. Stoddard lectured the same to those present as if there had been a thousand. We are glad to see him, and hope to have him back some time, when we can get out a larger audience.

A few questions and I close:

What have we learned from these lectures and preparing for them? We have learned that Bro. Stoddard is the right man in the right place in his position as Secretary and lecturer. All present were well pleased with his lectures.

Again; we ought to see, and do see the great need of thorough organization. If we are to succeed in this reform we must organize.

Some of us at least have been taught that where Freemasonry has laid its cold icy fingers on men, it is almost impossible to warn or stir them up to action in any reform work.

Lastly we learn that the city of Zanesville, like Athens, is "wholly given up to idolatry."

May God send more such men as Stoddard to break the chains of Freemasonry and let "the oppressed go free." Yours for the truth,

W. S. FULTON.

ANOTHER REPORT OF THE MICHIGAN STATE MEETING.

Hoping an abler pen than mine would present to the public an account of this meeting through the Cynosure, I have been looking for something concerning it and fearing it might not appear through the expectation by each that some other one would do it, I venture to send a few notes in regard to it.

And first, let me say that Bro. Stoddard's advice and counsel in regard to the calling of it was timely and wise and brethren Perkins and Jones carried out his suggestions in such a thorough manner that the meeting was an entire success.

The adjourned meeting served to call the attention to this one so that on the first evening the large and commodious hall was completely filled. The hall will seat about 1100 people with standing room for many more; and on the second evening it was packed full. On the third night when Hiram was slain, though an admission fee was charged of ten cents there was a full house.

Respecting the work of Mr. Ronayne in presenting the subject to the people I need only to say he did it splendidly. The people of Adrian were delighted and astonished. They had supposed that the Anti-masonic movement was started and sustained by a few discontented and prejudiced minds, but when they saw it demonstrated that Freemasonry was in reality a revival of ancient pagan mysteries and worship they accorded a degree of respect to the movement not given before.

In the forenoon of the second day a self-appointed champion of the lodge—a king among them—entered the lists for a little debate, but came off so badly worsted that his own friends were ashamed of him. After that no one dared appear in the meetings in defense of the lodge.

The Adrian Times published notices of the coming meeting in its daily and weekly issues and printed the proceedings in full as far as they were furnished it. Through the failure of some one the proceedings of Thursday afternoon and evening were not furnished and consequently did not appear, which is to be regretted as it is important to get our work before the public through the secular press as much as possible.

The Weekly Press would not publish a notice of the meeting or print anything in regard to it, not even a sneer, which last is quite an improvment. The people are anxious to have the lectures repeated and Confession of Curtis Cogswell.

Deer Lick, O.

I am now almost seventy-four years old and have but a few more days to live; and as most criminals make a confession of their awful crimes before death, I will make mine. When I was twenty-one years old, the year after the Freemasons murdered Capt. Morgan in New York, I was induced by Freemasons to join their lodge in Yates county, N. Y. I sent in my petition to the lodge, was accepted and took what they call the Entered Appentice degree, and went through all the tomfoolry and nonsense of that degree, just as described in Morgan's book and President Finney's and Elder David Bernard's, and took the awful oath attached to that degree, just as described in the above books, which were wicked enough to make a cannibal ashamed. Then after that I took the second and third degrees, up to what they call the "sublime degree" of Master Mason; and took the dreadful wicked oaths of the other two degrees and saw all the works of the devil in the three above degrees, which made me perfectly ashamed of what I had done. I left them forthwith, and have done all I could against the cursed institution ever since and will as long as God spares my life.

Now I ask the forgiveness of God and of all men for being such a fool and committing such an awful sin as joining the Freemasons, hoping this warning may be the means of keeping many a young man from falling into the sin that I did of joining the lodge.

[Signed,] Curtis Cogswell.

Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost, the evangelist, met a young man about nineteen years of age in the inquiry room in Boston, who said that he did not believe in religion, and thought that almost all professors of religion were hypocrites.

"That is a serious charge to bring against us," said Mr. Pentecost.

"I do not want to judge harshly," said the young man, "doubtless many think that they believe what they profess to, but it does not seem to me that they really do."

"Is your mother a Christian?" resumed Mr. Pentceost.

"She is a member of the church."

"But is she a Christian?"

"I do not think it hardly fair, Mr. Pentecost, for you to ask me such a question."

"But you have brought a sweeping accusation against Christians. Let us begin at home and see if you can verify it."

The young man's chin and lips quivered as he burst into tears, replying, "If my mother believes that I have an immortal soul bound for everlasting destruction unless I repent, why does she never speak to me on the subject of religion?"

"Oh!" said Mr. Pentecost, "next to unbelief, indifference in Christians seems to be the great stone which prevents dead souls from being quickened into life."

A Word to Fellow Laborers.

I have had some success, in a very hard field, in securing subscribers for the Christian Cynosure, and I wish to say a word to encourage others to keep trying, although your efforts may not be as fruitful of good results as you desire. I rejoice to know that there are at least seven names on the subscription list of the Cynosure, added through my humble influence and efforts. A good deal of patient labor has been required. We cannot do a year's work in a day or week. But we must watch our opportunity, and when we meet a person at all likely to become a subscriber, explain to him the excellence of the paper. I purpose to work for the circulation of the Cynosure until the Gospel which it so faithfully represents shall triumph. Let each of the present 4,000 subscribers secure four others, and not 10,000 but 20,000 subscribers would be the result. What we need in this cause is not spurts of enthusiasm, but earnest, steady, prayerful work. What the New York Tribune was in the long anti-slavery war that the Cynosure is in the anti-lodge reform. The gates of hell shall not prevail against the church of Christ.

York, Pa.

Editor Cynosure:—To fully expose the sly and crafty craftsmen who do so much mischief in the church, the State, the family and in society, it is necessary to lay before the public their works, which are more less concealed, disguised, beautified or made perfectly enchanting, especially to persons of a weak mind.

In order, therefore, to make the "works of darkness" more easily seen by the unsuspecting and the unreflecting portions of the people, I suggest that all readers of the Cynosure note down all the doings of the secretists in their own localities, and then send you either a simple statement or a review for publication or your own private use, as you may decide. These statements or reviews might be in letter form, and sent to you monthly or quarterly. Yours,

The Brethren Church.

Liberty, Ill.

Editor Cynosure:—I was not aware that any dared to oppose Masonry to so full an extent without being in danger of life or property. Why to approach a Mason here in argument against the lodge, you are made an object of pity, as ignorant of all that is grand and noble. But we still hold fast to the divine teachings of the Bible, and to the idea that if the lodge is ennobling to the mind and elevating to the character we fail to see it; and would shrink from giving such work as Masonry even a bait as we would shun the most poisonous serpent.

The church known as the Brethren or German Baptist has always made it a point to exact from every candidate as an obligation that they unite with no secret organization. They number over 1,600 ministers in the United States and over 100,000 members. Let the army be united, determined and steady, and with such weapons as man never invented, such power and strength as is not human, the terrible barricades, built to defy man and God, will crumble to the earth, and their deep, dark pits will be opened to the shame of mankind. Let Anti-masonry be agitated till all our boys and girls will deem it as a terrible blot on religion and society. To be a Mason in some localities "is greater than to be a king;" but if they were looked upon as would-be murderers, seducers of women, defrauders of their lives and happiness in this world, wine-bibbers and mockers of all things that are good, then there will be a change. May the good work go on. May the Cynosure receive its 10,000 subscribers.

A Family Exiled.

Clayton, Mich.

Many years have passed and many wonderful events have transpired, since the writer in 1811, was taken in his mother's arms and virtually driven from Litchfield Hill, Conn., from what was then called the Catlin House half a mile north of the court house, into the then wilderness town of Verona, Oneida county, N. Y., to escape the persecution and terror of the Masonic fraternity, who seemed to be determined on my father's death. He was waylaid and mobbed and only escaped in the providence of God, by being on Sheriff Landon's fleet mare, which none but Sweepstakes or a few Long Island racers, could lead; and all for no other reason than telling what he innocently learned of the preparation of a candidate for the Masonic lodge.

Thus was my father and mother with their six children forced for dear life from a happy home in a happy neighborhood, and their children robbed of educational privileges for which Litchfield was noted, especially the Female Seminary, the first ever established in America. I feel that we were robbed of our birthright, the privilege of living in our own birthplace, under the influence of such men as Judge Reeve, Lawyer Gould, Col. Talmadge, the Tracys, Buells, Landons, Catlins, with Dr. Lyman Beecher for our pastor. I can but mourn the loss but hate the cause. How long it shall be permitted to curse the world is known only to him who rules the world in righteousness and has promised his people to bind Satan a thousand years.

A. N. Boardman, Plainfield, Ia., writes: "I see the light is advancing."

Noah Thomas, Maryland, N. Y., writes: "This is a region where people love the praise of men more than the praise of God. Many wonder that I dare speak out to them as I do. But I don't want them to stand at the judgment bar of God and say I did not warn them that they were going to ruin."

S. G. Reed, North Hannibal, N, Y., writes:

"I requested one man to whom I sent some Cynosures to hand them to his neighbors when he had finished reading them. But he returned them in my absence and said he lived in a very peaceable neighborhood. He did not dare to hand the papers to them to read. A courageous Methodist! It would take a legion of such soldiers to storm the castle of secretism."

J. H. Fake, Cherry Valley, Ill., writes: "I rejoice that I am an Anti-mason. I expect always to be one, and also to be a subscriber to the Cynosure."

A. Osgood, Lostant, Ill., writes:

"We must keep the lamp of truth burning, and expose the errors of secretism, although men and demons cry, 'Don't torment us before the time.' Now is God's time—to-day—to-morrow may be too late. The truth is working like leaven in the minds of the people. The clergy here are ashamed to have it known that they belong to secret lodges, and like one of old, they have to dissemble. If Paul were here they would get a severe reprimand. The Masons in this vicinity are ashamed to wear their regalia at the funerals of their brethren. I cannot see it my duty to help support an adhering Mason or a Jack Mason, in church or state."

Zeba Smith, Montpelier, Vt., writes:

"We are with you in trying to help forward the cause. Some of our neighbors are glad to read the papers and hear what is going on. We need Mr. Ronayne or some other lecturer here to wake up the people. Most of them around here are connected with the grange, the church and all; and they appear to be afraid the Cynosure will harm them in some way. They seem to choose darkness. You can understand why I attended the meeting at Worcester and was much pleased with it. My relatives live mostly in Massachusetts and at the West. I visited some of them last fall and told them about the Worcester meeting and something of what was doing against secretism. It was news to them. One of them, however, had seen a little item in his paper that said the 'fanatics were going to have a meeting at Worcester.' I carried a little piece that I found in the Morning Star to the editor of the Green Mountain Freeman, and asked him to publish it in his paper. He wrote it off and said he would, if he found he had not published it before. We have not seen it. I take the paper. They publish for secret societies, the doings of the State Grange, etc. The Worthy Master of the grange, Franklin by name, in his annual report says the financial feature no longer demands the attention of the order, as prices are low and competition sharp. Boyden writes that he expects to see the day when the financial feature will be eliminated from the work of the grange, and the grange be more successful than it has been in time past."

Benj. F. Cole, Jacksonville, Ill., writes:

"Have you been informed of Mr. Sam'l French's death? I failed to see any mention of same in the Cynosure. I supposed his family would have informed you of it. He died some three weeks since with typhoid pneumonia. Was sick a week and unconscious. The Anti-masonic and temperance cause has lost a true friend, and a live and energetic worker."

We deeply feel the death of Mr. French which was noticed in a late number of the Cynosure. His clubs of subscribers we miss also. May his mantle fall on another. The youngest and bravest will soon die. Life is short. We must close up the broken ranks and press on in the battle for Christ and his kingdom."

J. V. Long, Oskaloosa, Ia., writes:

"I am doing all I can for the reform."

James Andrews, Ridgeway, O., writes:

"I am surrounded with secretism or devilism. It is a curse to the church and the world. I am trying to do all the good I can. Do pray for me."

A. J. Foor, Raub, Ind., writes:

"I have been astonished at the ignorance of many in regard to Masonry. Some say, How is it so bad when so many good people join it? Their eyes are not half open or else they have no vision at all. I lend my paper to all I can get to read it."

David Basford, South Chesterville, Me., writes:

"May the Lord help you to spread the light and truth until Satan's kingdom is destroyed."

D. W. Gilfillan, Trempeleau, Wis., writes:

"The reform the Cynosure is urging upon the American people, and especially the Christian portion of them, wholly commends itself to my convictions of what constitutes Christian duty and a Christian life. All forms of organized secrecy, but especially the oath-bound form of it, show a conformity to the world, to its maxims and practices, that greatly mars if it does not entirely eat out vital godliness from the heart. It is a dangerous element that is stealthily creeping in and silently but surely undermining the church of the living God, and making it a reproach instead of a blessing to the world. I therefore cheerfully second all the efforts put forth by these Christian reformers to expose these seats of iniquity, and to teach Christian people to abhor and shun their abominations."

R. B. Dawson, Baxter, Ia., writes:

"I hope we will have efficient aid here that the cause may not retrograde."

D. J. Ellsworth, Windsor, Ct., writes:

"Bro. Hinman is doing a good work in our State, and he is a worker, too. Brethren and friends in the State should give him all he is ready to do and pay him well for it. Such work is very unpopular and disagreeable, and few can stand up to it. Separation from the world is a great help to one's courage and faith."

C. M. Swan, Union City, Mich., writes:

"I used to be afraid to say what I thought of Masonry. I have got over that now. I will not vote for a Mason, neither will I pay my money for a Masonic preacher. I believe God is in this reform work. I mean to keep trying to circulate the Cynosure. I give all of my papers away."

C. D. Hoyt, Sen., Mundy, Mich., writes:

"The Lord is for us, and is more than all them that are against us. Masonry is dying out in this town quite fast."

S. E. Cormany, Petoskey, Emmet Co., Mich., writes:

"If you find it in your power, please send me some tracts for distribution. We are in what would seem an unequal contest up here in the north woods. The secretists are building their lodges of logs in the woods in advance of churches and missionaries, and but for the knowledge that God is on our side, and one with him is a majority, we would feel discouraged."

The calls for free tracts are frequent and urgent.—[ED.

Wm. D. Lowry, Senecaville, O., writes:

"I endorse the writing of Eld. S. C. Kimball in full as set forth in the Cynosure of Feb. 20, 1879, on page 4, under the caption 'What we need.' And particularly the idea expressed thus: 'One thing more we need here in the East; a tract carefully written, stating that Blue Lodge Masonry is thoroughly and completely exposed by Edmond Ronayne, and signed by as many seceding Masons as will sign it.' With the Bible for my guide I have opposed the institution of Freemasonry for many years, and I am with you in the fight during life, or until, by the grace of God, the foul spirit is cast out of church and state."

Mrs. M. A. Gamble, Ypsilanti, Mich., writes:

"The reform in which you are engaged is doing very much in the building up of the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour by bringing the minds of men out of the mystification and darkness of secrecy into the light and liberty of a pure Gospel."

Gideon Hunt, Plainfield, Ind., writes:

"Our town is badly infested with secret societies."

Mrs. A. J. Salisbury, Pascoag, R. I., writes:

"The Cynosure has been a great help and comfort to me, and if it could have been our Father's will, we would have done more for the ten thousand. But our will is to do our Father's will, and wait his good time."

J. K. Weber, Titusville, Pa., writes:

"I happened to get hold of one of your papers a short time since which is the first paper on Anti-masonry that I ever saw, and it suits my ideas to a dot. I believe in true Christianity, but I don't believe that Christianity and Masonry can live in one body."

E. L. Harris, Delavan, Wis., writes:

"I will do all I can for the paper, for I deem it the best agency that can be brought to bear on this terrible engine of Satan."

David Bromley, Rushville, Pa., writes:

"Masons of the present day are so ignorant, so dishonest, so destitute of self-respect, so full of effrontery, and their vile system so insusceptible of defense, that about the only thing they can reply to those who offer honest and just objections to it, is, 'You know nothing about it.'"

J. Hodges, Huntsburg, O., writes:

"Secret societies and Sabbath desecration have nearly ruined the churches in this place, and I believe if we cannot have a good lecturer soon the church of Christ will become extinct here. My heart is with you in the work."

J. Sherk, Warren, Ill., writes:

"Warren, Ill., is a pleasant little town of about 2,000 inhabitants, and three churches, but it is a hot-bed of secretism. Nearly every man, both in the church and out of it, belongs to some secret order, ministers not excepted. Two of our ministers are adhering Masons; one a Royal Arch chaplain, and he glories in the institution. But thanks be to God, we have one minister, a promising young man, who has thus far escaped Satan's trap of secretism, and my prayer is that he may become a powerful instrument in the hands of God for the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan, fortified by infidelity and secretism in all its forms. I have been an Anti-mason since Morgan was murdered, and I have taken the Cynosure ever since it was printed."

Wilson Swan, LaSalle, Ill., writes:

"The cause is prospering very much here, as are all the churches."

A. F. Jones, Lyons, Ia., writes:

"I am an old man; almost seventy-eight years old. I once thought Masonry dead, but I was mistaken. This section is full of all kinds of secret societies. There is a wide field for labor here."

H. Witham, Shade, O., writes:

"I am doing all I can against the power of darkness in secret societies, and spiritual wickedness hidden in high places. We are making preparation for E. Ronayne to come here and work the degrees in Masonry."

L. Powers, Ashley, O., writes:

"The Lord pity men who are afraid to do that which is right."

Lyman Prindle, West Chazy, N. Y., writes:

"We have a Masonic lodge in our little village, and it has been a curse to the place, and especially to the church, ever since its organization. A great portion of the community, and many professed Christians, do not seem to know or care what its effects are. The church members are very much like their ministers. They fear the fraternity and keep a silent tongue. I expect when the Lord wipes out this complicated system, as I think he will, these chicken-hearted Christians will shout as loud as any over the victory. I have taken your paper I think from the commencement, and am in fellowship with its doctrine and design, and expect to take it while I live."

John H. Clarke, North Mills, Pa., writes:

"I am pleased with the Cynosure. I love the cause it advocates. Yours for an uncompromising reform."

Wm. H. Parker, Palmyra, N. Y., writes:

"Please publish the grange password for this year if you can get it. While in a street-car in Philadelphia, in 1876, I asked a Mason why they called their Masonic building a temple. He replied, because it was a fine costly edifice. I told him there were many such that were not temples, and asked him again why they called it a temple, but got no satisfactory answer. I then told him I could tell him why it was called a temple. It was because Masonry is a religion. He said Masonry had nothing to do with politics or religion. I told him I thought it had very much to do with both. He then jumped up and left the car. We have six or eight secret societies in this place, and many of them operate against the cause of Christ as represented by the various churches, yet the ministers seem to be asleep on this great question. The Episcopal rector in this place is one of the high-titled Masons in this State."

We do not know the grange password.

LESSON XIV.—April 6, 1879.—SANCTIFIED AFFLICTION.

SCRIPTURE.—Job 33:14-30.

14 For God speaketh once, yea, twice,
Yet man perceiveth it not.
15 In a dream, in a vision of the night,
When deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed;
16 Then he openeth the ears of men,
And sealeth their instruction,
17 That he may withdraw man from his purpose,
And hide pride from man.
18 He keepeth back his soul from the pit,
And his life from perishing by the sword.
19 And he is chastened also with pain upon his bed,
And the multitude of his bones with strong pain:
20 So that his life abhorreth bread,
And his soul dainty meat.
21 His flesh is consumed away, that it cannot be seen;
And his bones that were not seen stick out.
22 Yea, his soul draweth near unto the grave,
And his life to the destroyers.
23 If there be a messenger with him,
An interpreter, one among a thousand,
To show unto man his uprightness:
24 Then he is gracious unto him, and saith,
Deliver him from going down to the pit:
I have found a ransom.
25 His flesh shall be fresher than a child's.
He shall return to the days of his youth:
26 He shall pray unto God, and he will be favorable unto him:
And he shall see his face with joy:
For he shall render unto man his righteousness.
27 He looketh upon men, and if any say,
I have sinned and perverted that which was right,
And it profited me not:
28 He will deliver his soul from going into the pit,
And his life shall see the light.
29 Lo, all these things
Worketh God often with man,
30 To bring back his soul from the pit,
To be enlightened with the light of the living.

CONNECTED HISTORY.

Job was afflicted of Satan, by permission of the Lord. Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar thought his affliction came because of some great sin, and urged him to repent. He denied their charges. Elihu, a young friend of Job, justifies the providence of God, and declares the purpose of affliction.

TO THE SCHOLAR.

Notice that the Book of Job lifts the veil between this and the other world. It gives us a glimpse of the mercy and the providence of God in dealing with his saints, and teaches the great lesson of submission to God's will.

NOTES.

"The Book of Job," an historical, dramatic poem, probably the oldest in the world; written perhaps in the time of Abraham, or before the exodus from Egypt, though some place it after the age of Solomon.

Job, "weeper," a rich and powerful man or prince of "the sons of the East" in Uz, and living in the Arabian desert between Syria and the Euphrates. He had seven sons and three daughters before his trials, and as many after them, and twice as large possessions. He lived 140 years after his affliction; the Septuagint says he was 70 years old when his trial came upon him.

Elihu, "he my God," a young friend of Job, and a Buzite, probably therefore, a descendant of Nahor, and remotely related to Abraham.

"Afflictions improved." Bees draw honey from the thyme, a most unsavory herb, so wise men may learn something useful from the most bitter affliction.—Value of Affliction.

Spurgeon remarks: "Our crosses are not made of iron, though painted sometimes with iron colors; they are formed of nothing heavier than wood. Yet they are not made of pasteboard, and will never be light in themselves though our Lord can lighten them by his presence....He who has borne the true cross, and known its sanctifying power, will value every sliver of it, counting his trials to be his treasures."—Joy in Affliction.

A silver thread stretched in a window between the sashes, makes an Eolian harp. And while the air is calm and still, there is no music; when the winds blow softly, a faint music is heard; the stronger the wind, the louder and sweeter the melody. So it is with the Christian heart in affliction: the greater the trial, the holier is the peace, and the purer the joy of the soul.

OUTLINE OF THE BOOK OF JOB.

Job's righteousness and prosperity, chap. 1:1-5.

God suffers Satan to try him, 1:9-12. He (Job) endures the trial, 1:22. Satan tries him again, 2:4-6. Job still firm in integrity, 2:10.

His three friends come to comfort him, 2:11-13.

Job in his grief wishes he had not been born, 3:1.

Eliphaz speaks, and claims that suffering must spring from wickedness, 4:7-9, 17; 5:3, 4. He exhorts the sufferer to turn to God, 5:8, 17, 18.

Job utters his deep grief, 6:2, 3; complains that his friend is cruel, 6:14; maintains his innocence, 6:30; but admits his sins against God, 7:20, 21.

Bildad intimates that Job's sons and daughters were cut off for their sins, and that Job himself cannot be upright, or God would not so deal with him, 8:2-6. He thinks Job must have been hypocritical in his seeming goodness, 8:11-13.

Job admits his sin against God, but no wickedness, as compared with other men, which could justly bring upon him such suffering, 9:2, 3, 17, 20; 10:7.

Zophar bluntly accuses Job, 11:2-6; and advises him to put away his iniquity, 11:13-15.

Job still professes innocence, 12:4, and claims that the wicked are not always punished in the sight of men, 12:6. He accuses his friends, 13:4, 8, and again admits his guilt before God, 13:26; chap. 14:17.

Eliphaz reiterates his former charges, 15:4-6, and claims that the wicked suffer, 15:20, 34.

Job complains of his friends, 16:1-5; admits that his affliction is from God, 16:11, 12, but that it is not for any injustice in him, 16:17-19.

Bildad falls back upon the general position that the wicked suffer, 18:2-6.

Job again complains of the cruelty of his friends, 19:2, 3; claims innocence as against men, 19:4; and cries for pity from his friends, 19, 21, 22.

Zophar reasserts the view of the three, 20, 5, 29.

Job insists that wickedness does not always bring suffering, so far as appears to men, 21:7-9, and that he has not followed the counsel of the wicked, 21:16.

Eliphaz comes out very plainly against Job, 22:5-7; and advises him to repent, 22:23-25.

Job desires to seek God, 23:3-7, but maintains that he has kept God's law, 23:11, 12. He reiterates that wickedness and suffering do not always belong together, 24:23, 24.

Bildad, speaking last of the three friends, falls back upon the universal depravity of man, 25:4.

Job's final claim, 31:4-8, 39, 40.

The three friends cease, 32:1.

Elihu speaks, 32:2-6. He takes issue with Job, 33:8-12, and claims that suffering is for discipline, 33:19-30.

God speaks "out of the whirlwind," and shows Job his own ignorance, 38:3, 4, 16, 17, 21.

Job makes confession to God, 42:6.

God justifies Job before his friends, 42:7.

Job's prosperity restored, 42:10-17.—Bible Class Scholar.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH. 27, 1879.

Neutrality in Religion or Morals.

It is proposed to make the United States strictly neutral in religion, or rather between all religions. This is all slave-holders asked, viz., to be let entirely alone—all, indeed, that wrong-doers ever ask.

But such neutrality is, in the first place, an impossibility. To say that you are in favor of putting a truth on an exact level with error, and treating both alike, is to deny truth altogether, for there is no such truth on an equality with error. If Jesus Christ was the Son of God and the Judge of the world, to treat an Asiatic, or African, or Chinese religion as strictly on a level with Christianity, is to say, by actions louder than words, that Christianity, claiming to be the only true system of religion, is an arrogant pretender. In the Roman Pantheon all the gods of their conquered nations were sitting, side by side, each supreme in his petty realm, and each at peace with every other. But if you put Christ on a level with all those false deities you deny him and make him an impostor like them. This seeming fairness is ruinously unfair to truth; while error can afford it because she is rated correctly, just what she is.

So neutrality between slavery and liberty was impossible. So of Masonry and Anti-masonry. If Bishop Weaver, or any one else, claims to treat those who wish to exclude adhering Masons just as well as he does those who wish to retain and admit them, to love both alike, his influence is wholly on the side of the wrong. He says, by his actions; "Those who are seeking to destroy Masonry and those who are seeking to save it, are equally worthy and lovable brethren." He who takes this ground gives all his moral power to the Masons. This explains Thomas Corwin's remark that put one slaveholder among fifty men and the one would govern the forty-nine. They are constitutionally disabled by being put on a moral level with that slaveholder. So treating the Itinerant as if it was as much in good and regular standing in the United Brethren church as the Telescope is to cripple the Telescope. The liberality or neutrality between them is but seeming. For the Telescope opposes Masonry and the Itinerant does not, and the moment the church should put them on a level and say, "Go ahead, good brethren, you are both right," it not only acts a great untruth, but it signs the death warrant of the reform paper, and it dies as by slow poison from that day on.

—An unusual amount of matter for the paper last week made it necessary to condense some interesting letters. Let it be so every week. Reformers, write for your paper.

The Sycamore Church Action.

"We do not, indeed, consent to make it a test of church fellowship because we believe that is an extremity against Christian charity to which we have no right to carry our opinions."—Ans. of the Sycamore Congregational church to Deacon West.

We desire respectfully to say to this beloved church:

1st. That in 1836 the Synod of Cincinnati (of which Dr. Lyman Beecher, Calvin E. Stowe, D. D. and Dr. Joshua L. Wilson were members and which for evangelical piety, Christian learning, and influence with the American churches had not its superior in the whole country) voted: "That active membership in a Masonic lodge is incompatible with a credible profession of the Christian religion."

2nd. That I took the little book entitled, "The Image of the Beast," to Professor Boardman of the Chicago Congregational Seminary, and asked him to read it, consult his Faculty, and give me their judgment on its teachings. Dr. Boardman returned the book with the general statement that he could see no unsoundness in its teachings. The doctrine of the book is—that the secret empire, or net-work of lodges, now covering this globe, is the image of the universal, persecuting, pagan Roman empire, made at the suggestion of Popery by "them that dwell on the earth" (Rev. 13: 14); that is by persons in the church and out. And if lodgery is an image of that universal, despotic, paganizing power, then those members in the Congregational church, Sycamore, and in other churches, who adhere to its oaths and practice its rites, either from belief or for advantage, they are worshipers the beast or his image, and receive his mark in their foreheads or in their hands." "The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God." (Rev. 14: 10.) Now dare you beloved brethren, carry your "opinions so far against charity" as to leave your brethren, Dustin, Southworth and Boice exposed to so fearful a doom without joining your good Deacon West in striving to save them.

If you doubt whether these brethren have already drank this wine of double damnation in a symbol, from human skulls, ask them. They never deny it to me, and I think will not deny it to you. But if, fearing their human penalties which they have invoked, they should be left to the sin of such a denial, appoint a church meeting and we will bring and present to you the proofs that that fearful "fifth libation" is part and parcel of the Knight Templar's degree which these brethren have taken.

3d. In 1874 the national triennial meeting of Knight Templars was held in New Orleans, which passed votes endorsing the White Leagues of Louisiana, who had and have since murdered Union men by wholesale. Gen. Dustin, I learn, went to New Orleans and was a member of that Knight Templar's gathering. Now, beloved brethren and sisters in Christ, we ask you whether those brethren have a right to drink the "broth of these abomniable things," and then sit down to drink the symbol of the blood of Christ? Have they a right to practice these secrets in the face of Christ's prohibition of such secrecy (Mat. 10: 27), and then come and sit down in the house which is called by his name, and claim that they "are delivered to do all these abominations?" Are you willing to expose your sons to these man-traps and gins of Satan?

Do not, we beseech you "give sleep to your eyes or slumber to your eyelids," till you have rescued brethren Dustin, Southworth, Boice and others from the fearful condemnation of God under which they lie. And recall your good Deacon West, heal the hurt of Zion, and give joy to the "Angels who make the church their care."

And suffer us one word to your members ensnared in the lodge. Brethren, you know in your consciences and honor that the revelation of the lodges made by hundreds of men like the late President Finney are true. How can you by your silent adherence to those wicked and horrible oaths, give the lie to hundreds of saints in heaven and on earth who have renounced and revealed them? Suffer us, dear brethren, in view of the nearness of eternity, and its just and true retributions, to entreat you to renounce the works of Satan and return to Christ. For Masonic meat destroy not him for whom Christ has died. Your former beloved pastor, Windsor, loathed and wrote against these abominations. United Presbyterians, United Brethren, Wesleyans, Reformed Presbyterians, Free Methodists, Friends and others, more than half a million of enlightened Christians, have cast these unfruitful works of darkness from their fellowship. We pray you call a church meeting and resolve to have no more to do with secret societies, and God and good men will bless you.

—The exposition of Freemasonry at Marshalltown, Iowa, which the craft were in such a frenzy to break up occurred in September, 1877, and not two years ago as was lately noticed.

—Eld. J. F. Browne, Illinois State Lecturer, expected to leave Morrison last week to push his work into other regions.

—The success of the Iowa State Convention will put heart in all the workers of that noble State. Bro. Stoddard sends a copy of the Masonic hand-bill which for scurvy abuse proves the lodgites of West Branch adepts in their profession. It is only a refined method of egging, but shows no better breeding. Bro. Moses Varney, of Springdale, Cedar county, sends a cheerful note on the Convention and calls on the friends to rally for the support of the work. Every one is called on, and without waiting till next week, when the letter will be printed in full with the form of pledge to be used, begin this very day to send in to him pledges and cash for the Iowa State work. Don't wait for to-morrow in such a cause. Help now.

—The able and interesting Washington letter elsewhere is the first of many which we hope to receive from a legal gentleman residing in that city who has long watched the developments of Freemasonry in the fence corners of Congress and the executive departments. He has kindly consented to aid in extending information respecting these dark spots on the American escutcheon among the people—those who are by right and constitution qualified to demand their removal.

—Brother W. E. Hardin of Newtown, Indiana, writes further of Dr. Cook's efforts for reform in Fountain and Warren counties, in preparation for the State convention in Attica during next fall. The Free Methodist church is open for the meeting and expenses partly pledged. He invites the State executive committee to correspond with Rev. W. H. James of Attica, concerning arrangements.

—Missouri friends are waking up and asking for Elder Rathbun. That's right, Bro. Freeman, the Elder is ready for work. He should be constantly employed in Iowa and Missouri so far as his health will permit. The success of his initiations in Birmingham and West Branch are sufficient answer to the insinuations that he cannot work the degrees. Let the example of the Iowa Convention be followed. Get resident seceding Masons to assist everywhere; and if there are none, get them to secede beforehand by convincing them of their wrong course while remaining in the lodge.

—Past Master Ronayne wishes us to say that he has sent copies of the "Master's Carpet" to all subscribers, and if any mistakes have been made, they will be corrected, on his return from Jackson, Mich., April 7th, 8th and 9th.

—Having been attacked editorially in the Masonic department of the Inter ocean of this city, Mr. Ronayne has written a sharp reply which the same paper was in honor bound to publish. He briefly reviewed his lodge connection showing that what his Masonic enemies claim to be a "bad record" was all made in the lodge, which was at the same time voting him honors and making him presents. The action of the Relief Board also clears him from the trumped up charges peddled about by Freemasons.

Our Washington Letter.

The Speakership Contested by two Masons—The Lodge and Hard Times—Randall Re-elected Speaker—Speculations about the Extra Session.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
Mar. 15, 1879.

The contest over the speakership of the House of Representatives gets warmer every day. All the candidates are Masons and for the present at least there is no hope for us who know what that one word means.

Randall, by a combination of some two hundred Masons in his district, has been kept and maintained in the House for years past as a prominent statesman, and he has not been slow to recognize and reward brothers, knowing full well that all his prominence has been attained through them and his future prospects are in their hands.

Blackburn, by a small combination in his district (I do not suppose there are two hundred Masons in it), has also been maintained here, and I do not hesitate to say that I believe if the people in their respective districts knew they were Masons and owed their elections to the close corporation combinations of Masons neither would be allowed to retain his seat very long. The people who do not belong to secret societies are as ten to one to those who do, and I do not think the time is far off now when the ten will assert their rights and put secret society men in the background.

I attribute to these secret societies all our hard times. The way they influence the courts and legislation is such that it lessens the confidence of the public not only in man but in everything with which man is in any way connected. Let me illustrate. If you have twenty-five thousand dollars and desire to go into any kind of business you will have to employ others in the capacity of book-keepers, clerks and workmen. Now suppose your book-keeper, or other employe, is a Mason and what is vulgarly called on the make. He can swindle or rob you, and even if you have the time to prosecute him it will be fruitless, because it is almost impossible now-a-days to impannel a jury without one or more Masons on it, and upon his giving them the talismanic signs they will either acquit him or hang the jury.

Now your Masonic employe knows this and takes advantage of it, while you haye hired him upon what you considered the best business recommendations and it never once perhaps entered your mind that when you were hiring a Mason, or secret society man, you were employing a person whose conduct might be so uncertain that it would result in injury to yourself, and his relations to the courts were such, that it would be impossible to hold him to account.

Now to the ordinary risks of trade you have to run the risk of your secret society employes who can rob and swindle you with impunity and these risks combined render business undertakings so uncertain that people who have capital are unwilling to use it, when they are subject to mishaps from which no amount of discrimination would save them. Hence the want of confidence that at present exists all through our country.

The courts are powerless except often to oppress and add to the prevailing distress. Legislation is controlled by secret society people and the public is generally losing confidence in legislative wisdom. And all these evils are to be set down at the doors of secret societies for they practically disfranchise every person who does not belong to them, and claim and get for their members rights and privileges which are denied to all other persons.

MARCH 18th.—since the above was written, the Randall "Masons" have beaten the Blackburn "Masons" in the Democratic caucus and the result will be that the offices and other spoils of the House of Representatives, will belong to Masons of the Randall type for the next two years. You can plainly see that the people, that is the Anti-masons, for I take it the great mass of the people are Anti-masonic, have no show or consideration given them at all, the contest having been between Masons.

This is the way now in all elections to prominent offices: both candidates are Masons and as a matter of course either, if elected, would throw all his influence in favor of brother oath-bound Masons, or the lodge. And the people for whom the government was established have no say at all as to the manner or by whom the government shall be administered. They have remained quiet so long letting these secret societies perfect their combinations, that if they, the people, ever do succeed in getting the upper hand again it will only be after years of struggle.

The extra session of Congress convened to-day without developing anything extraordinary though every available seat was occupied and all the standing room by the immense crowds which seemed to expect something unusual.

The President's message is understood to be very short, consisting of about two hundred words, simply calling attention to the fact that no provision has been made for the army, the legislative, executive and judicial branches of the g vernment.

There is great variety of opinions here as to the length of this extra session. Some even intimate that we are to have stormy times and predict that it will continue until the next regular session in December. Others say it may last several months, while the more thoughtful, with whom I concur, think the differences between the two parties will be settled in a very few days after both houses are organized, and the appropriations will be passed. I used the term "two parties" in the above sentence in order to be clearly understood. For you must know there is but one party in this country and that is the great Masonic party. It is conveniently divided into parts called Republicans and Democrats for the purpose of the better hoodwinking the people. If any of one your readers disbelieves me and is an Anti-mason, let him try to get an office of "honor and profit." He will agree with me in a very few months. I have seen this government conducted under the auspices of Lincoln, Johnson, Grant and Hayes, and have seen Democratic and Republican Masons drawing from the official breast together regularly as purring kittens, and no exceptions taken to it, but on the contrary excuses, and satisfactory ones too, made for the Democrats who by reason of their party not being in power could hardly have the right to have an office in Washington.

larger houses could be obtained even than before. There is quite a demand here for Anti-masonic literature and Ronayne's Handbooks "go like hot cakes."

I need not perhaps give the details of the business on Wednesday and Thursday as some of it has already appeared in your columns. On Wednesday afternoon Bro. Mathews delivered a telling lecture on the religion of Christ and the lodge contrasted, and on Thursday afternoon Bro. Stoddard in a masterly address gave us the "Landmarks of Freemasonry." Mr. H. C. Pratt of whom the Cynosure has heard before, made a spirited speech. He was unanimously appointed our delegate to the National Christian Association meeting in June next in Chicago.

Appropriate resolutions were passed, thanking the Times for its friendly aid and the people for their hospitality, and expressing our objects and aims. The last will yet appear in the Times if they can be procured.

In conclusion let me say our meeting was a grand success and good has been done, light has been shed where it was sorely needed, and the work of our organization has attained a degree of respect in the popular estimation not before reached.

The attendance from abroad was not quite as large as was hoped for, but the local attendance was excellent and the financial results cheering. Permit me to say to our friends in and out of the State, I shall be most happy to receive suggestions and advice respecting the prosecution of this great work in the State, and I earnestly ask your hearty cooperation and help in the discharge of the duties to which you have been pleased to call me.

Your fellow servant,

The Iowa State Convention.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., Mar. 20, 1879.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Bro. Hall, of Elgin, Iowa, was elected Secretary of the Iowa State Association yesterday and will send you a full report soon, but not in time for next week's issue.

The meeting convened as per notice and was well attended and the interest sustained to the close. At the last meeting the house was packed to its utmost capacity and brother Rathbun, assisted by two Master Masons who have left the lodge within a few weeks, acting as Junior and Senior Wardens, rendered the third degree in a very effective manner. Three Master Masons present signed a certificate to the correctness of the work and the convention passed a resolution expressive of their opinion of the work done and the way it was performed, all of which will be furnished with the Secretary's report. September 16 to 18 next was fixed as the time of next meeting and Bro. Rathbun was continued as State Lecturer until that time.

Among the clergymen present who took active part in the convention were Bishop Wright, Revs. J. H. Austin, W. H. May, M. S. Drury, Johnston, Robb, Hall, Galloway, Philo Elzea and a number of others.

There has been a good degree of progress made in this State during the year past, and so far as I could learn Bro. Rathbun has the confidence of the friends wherever he has been, both as to his ability in working and discussing Masonry, and as to his Christian deportment. Sister Rathbun made one of the most effective and stirring speeches of the convention, and could she accompany her husband occasionally to present this question from a woman's standpoint, it would hasten the consummation of our work. The enemy were aroused and gave vent to their feelings by printing and circulating handbills headed:

"VARIETY THEATER AT THE BOWERY, NEE QUAKER MEETING HOUSE. So mote it be."

Some ten of the prominent Friends in whose house our meetings occurred were mentioned by name as theatrical performers, and the inspiration of the whole paper may be seen by a few specimens.

1. Song—"Scratch my Back," by entire company.
2. Blow off Gas to keep the Biler from Bustin', by the Pres. [Rev. M. S Drury.]
3. Prayer, by saloon keeper, [Rev. J. H. Austin].

"SYNOPSIS."

Masonry! thou art a fraud and we can prove it so by G—d
We have known you because we were there,
And were glad to get out by losing our hair,
We joined it for influence, but found we had none,
We went back on it for the purpose of making some MUN."

The effect of this slang can be easily inferred. Like the infamous proceedings of the craft at Marshalltown the recoil was more fatal than the blow. The good people of West Branch were indignant to find that they could not invite their neighbors and Christian friends from abroad to meet with them in their own house for prayer, conference and discussion without being insulted, maligned and smeared over with the slime and blasphemy of the lodge and its villainous tools.

Our Master.

O Lord and Master of us all!
Whate'er our name or sign,
We own thy sway, we hear thy call,
We test our lives by thine.

Thou judgest us; thy purity
Doth all our lusts condemn;
The love that draws us nearer thee
Is hot with wrath to them.

Our thoughts lie open to thy sight;
And, naked to thy glance,
Our secret sins are in the light
Of thy pure countenance.

So to our mortal eyes subdued,
Flesh-veiled but not concealed,
We know in thee the fatherhood
And heart of God revealed.

We faintly hear, we dimly see,
In differing phrase we pray;
But, dim or clear, we own in thee
The Light, the Truth, the Way!

The homage that we render thee,
Is still our Father's own;
No jealous claims nor rivalry
Divide the Cross and Crown.

To do thy will is more than praise,
As words are less than deeds.
And simple trust can find thy ways
We miss with chart and creed.

No pride of self thy service hath,
Nor place for me and mine;
Our human strength is weakness, death,
Our life apart from thine.

Apart from thee all gain is loss,
All labor vainly done;
The solemn shadow of thy Cross
Is better than the sun.

Alone, O Love ineffable!
Thy saving name is given:
To turn aside from thee is hell,
To walk with thee is heaven!

How vain secure in all thou art,
Our noisy championship!—
The sighing of the contrite heart,
Is more than flattering lip.

Not thine the bigot's partial plea,
Not thine the zealot's ban;
Thou well canst spare a love of thee
Which ends in hate of man.

Our Friend, our Brother, and our Lord,
What may thy service be?—
Nor name, nor form, nor ritual word,
But simply following thee.

We bring no ghastly holocaust
We pile no graven stone:
He serves thee best who loves the most
His brothers and thy own,

—John G. Whittier.

The Fatal Step.

A certain nobleman in a court of Europe, on the eve of his marriage, requested the celebrated painter, David Teniers, to paint for him a portrait of the heathen god, Hymen, the representative of marriage. The artist eventually produced a portrait of that idol which viewed from a certain distance was exceedingly charming, but on closer inspection was found to have a malicious frown. The arch-duke Leopold, of Flanders, heard of the famous painting, secured it, and placed it in his portrait gallery, on a kind of a dais, to mount which the visitor had to pass a very slippery, polished step. Below this was the pleasing point of view, but no sooner had he passed the slippery step than farewell to the charm! It was no longer the same thing.

This portrait is a fit representative of sin and its nature. With what charming smiles does it present itself to the human mind! What joy does it not promise? What wisdom does it promise to impart as the fruit of its work! how desirable to behold; for it tends to make wise!—Gen. 3: 6. What a charming face it puts on, in presenting its claims! How innocent it looks and what persuasive language it employs in its representations! But no sooner is the "fatal step" taken, and the enticing fruit partaken of than farewell to the charm! The conscience is stung as with a serpent; the will dethroned, the imagination perverted, the desire enslaved, the understanding darkened and confounded, the shades of death gather around the doomed souls, the thunders of God's law are loosened from their moorings and and the whole foundation of moral manhood is shaken in its very center. The transgressor stands self-condemned, with slavish fear quaking to the foundations of his being. Sin has left a bitter sting; it is felt in the inner parts, gnawing as a worm that never dieth.

Reader, beware of the fatal step! Watch your appetite! Beware of the intoxicating cup, the tempting cigar, the soothing opium! They will chain your appetite forever; and as the idol of your taste, drag you down to the pit. Beware of the enticements of licentiousness, which when taken up with, will chain your whole nature down to the gates of perdition, and the idol-fiend will grin upon you with a malicious smile!

"Oh!" said a fair one, not long ago, in this city. who had been enticed away from a virtuous life, home, and the house of God, by those vultures of the pit, and goaded on in sin, until in a few months, she was found upon a death-bed, "I am sinking into the pit!"

A praying brother and his wife were called by her grief-stricken parents. She was pointed to the "Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." The throne of grace was besieged in her behalf; the Man of grief. acquainted with our frame, turned his shining face to the fallen one; light streamed down the portals of eternal death; the chains were snapped asunder; the cleansing stream poured down into that soul from the cleansing fountian. He spoke as to the on e on Calvary. "This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." The powers of darkness gave way, and with a smile of triumph upon her face, she cried, "Christ is helping me; he gives me the victory." The powers of eternal death were broken; the soul was snatched from out the jaws of the lion, and plucked as a brand from the burning.

O, ye careless ones, take care; beware! And you, Christian professor, lend a helping hand in rescuing the fallen ones, by the power of the Holy Spirit and the blood of Christ. They are blood-bought, and as precious as your own soul. And you, dear reader, who may be enticed into the organized forms of secret conclaves, beware! They represent themselves in a charming form of great wisdom, and godly teaching; higher than the church of Christ is able to give. Shun these dens of Satan, and their doctrines! No sooner have you entered, than your conscience is hoodwinked, your understanding darkened and beclouded, your will enslaved, and your moral self wrapped up in a garment of lies, and your soul bound to a covenant with hell, and you have signed the mortgage of Satan upon your conscience, throat and tongue. Thus bound, you are in danger of becoming the play-ball to the dominions of darkness, who have become strong in the covenant with death. The cunning idol, with its malicious frown, will continue to hold that penal cut-throat knife to your throat, and you have learned something. As many as have not this teaching, who know not the depths of Satan; as they speak—"I put upon you no other burden, but that which you have; hold fast till I come;" says "he who was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore, and I have the keys of hell and death." Rev. ii.: 24, 25; and i.:18.—H. W. Hampe, in American Wesleyan.

Sun-Worship.

The Indians of the great Southwest, as were the natives of ancient Mexico and Peru, are all sun-worshipers. They have various titles for their god, and worship him under various symbols; but it is the sun, the great giver of life and health, that is worshiped everywhere as the supreme power. The moon and the stars are, however, considered gods of lower order, and subject, in some mysterious way, to the sun, and to have control, in a limited manner, over the rain, winds, storms, and weather in general. They all have their sorcerers, or medicine-men, who are held in some degree of superstitious awe by the people. In sickness they use incantations of various kinds, and administer herbs of different classes.

All savages are naturally very superstitious, and the Indians of Arizona are no exception to the rule. Indeed, we are inclined to believe they are, if possible, more superstitious than the natives of other parts of the land. The worship of these Indians is different among the various tribes. We have seen among the Hualapais what among civilized people would be called family worship. At the first peep of day the band would sit or squat on the top of a small hill facing the east, and raise a most dismal sort of a howl. Then the patriarch of the band would speak a few words, or utter what we supposed to be an invocation, in a most solemn tone of voice. Then another howl would arise from those around him. Then the old man would say a few words more. At this time the sun appeared above the horizon, and all prostrating themselves with their faces to the east raised a joyful shout, which was kept up until the sun had entirely risen above the mountain-tops, after which they went back to the rancheria.

The Pueblo Indians worship the sun under the name of Montezuma. They also believe in inferior gods, and particularly in evil spirits. They claim that many ages ago, before they came to the land where they now dwell, Montezuma visited them and led them through the wilderness to the land where they have ever since lived. They also believe that it is his intention to return to them at some future day, and make them a great and prosperous people.

The Navajoes do not believe in Montezuma. They worship what they call the Great Father and Great Mother. The Great Father lives where the sun rises, and is the author of all that is bad; while the Great Mother lives at the setting sun, and is the giver of good and the protector of those who do right.

The Mohaves worship a god they call Matevil, whom they say once dwelled among their people, and that he will one day return. They also worship and fear an evil spirit they call Newathie, and who inflicts dire calamities on them at times. All these Indians fear to go abroad at night, as the devils and evil spirits are then at their work—according to their belief.—Ex.

First Slave Case in England.

A planter brought to London a slave called James Somerset in 1772, and when he fell ill inhumanly turned him out of doors. Mr. Granville Sharp, a philanthropic barrister, found him in the street, placed him in a hospital, where he recovered his health, and then got a him situation as a servant. Two years after his old master arrested and imprisoned him as a runaway slave. Mr. Sharp brought the case before the Lord Mayor, who ordered Somerset to be set liberty. But the master seized him violently in the presence of the Lord Mayor and Mr. Sharp, on which the latter brought an action against the master for assault. The question of law was finally referred to the twelve judges, in February and May of that year, who decided unanimously that no man can be accounted a slave on English territory. This decision is often quoted as though the soil of Great Britain made a slave free; but that is a legal fiction. Evidently it is only when a slave (so-called) comes within the reach of an English court that his freedom is declared. At that time the American colonies were beginning their quarrel with Great Britain, but had not renounced allegiance. All the colonies were subject to the common law of England; and if in Virginia and Jamaica there had been a judge as upright and as able as Lord Mansfield, and a philanthropist as zealous as Granville Sharp, it would seem that slavery might have been dissolved by a few judicial trials.—Frazer's Magazine.

The Fisherman's Daughters.

Now that Elsie was ill, mother had everything to do, and everybody to attend to; and she had told father and me that we must look after Elsie all day, and take care she wanted for nothing. Father had said, "Ay, ay, my little woman" (he always called her his little woman), "don't go for to fash thyself aboot Elsie; I'd rather sit with my little sick maid than with all the gay folks in Christendom, and let Gatty have her play the day, poor lassie, it comes but once in the year ye mind." And mother jumped up (we were all sitting at tea just the evening before the wedding day) and ran and put her arm around his neck and gave him such a hearty kiss, it sounded a long way off, and laughed, and said, "that once was quite often enough, as she had found to her cost ever since she gave up being servant in Lady Hall's grand house, for the sake of that once, and come to be wife in his poor one." And then she kissed him and said, "God bless him! he was a good, kind, tender-hearted soul as ever lived—a good Christian, a good husband, a good father and a good friend, and what more could he be?" and she kissed him again, and then sat down with her eyes brim full of tears and her face all over smiles.

Father was a very grave quiet man; he never spoke much, and very seldom smiled, and I don't think he ever laughed—leastways, I never heard him, and now he didn't say a word either; and some people might have thought it was because he didn't care. But we knew better than that; we saw and knew why the color came deeper over his face, and the water into his clear blue eyes; and he bent over his cup I think to hide his face.

But now I must go on with the wedding day. Oh, it was such a pleasant one! Everybody looked so happy, and was so kind, and all would help to lay out the dinner on the large table, placed under a big chestnut tree beside the house. As for me, I kept close to Sam, doing all sorts of things, and running messages for him; and Harry came and helped too; but he didn't seem to like it much—and Tom asked him if he was ill? He looked so down-hearted like, and he turned very red and said—"No, he wasn't ill, but he shouldn't mind if he was, if that would make other folks besides himself well."

What a lot of nice things there were to eat, for the farm ladies had brought so many presents, which together with what father and brothers had bought and caught, and the roast chickens, and the dishes of goodies made with the help of eggs from mother's poultry yard, so filled up the table, I am sure no one there had ever seen so grand a feast. Father was down amongst us sometimes, but not much. He seemed more sad to-day, I thought, than other days, and sat up a great deal with Elsie reading and talking to her—and everybody knew what he was doing, and liked him the more for it; but in truth I don't think they cared much where he was, they were so contented and happy, and all so merry at what was going on. Before dinner, father stood up and said a grace, and after dinner he said a little prayer while we were all standing. He prayed that God would of his great mercy put it into the hearts of all present to remember how short was life; but yet more—how shorter still and uncertain was the enjoyment of health and happiness in this world—that none knew what of grief was in store for them during the long year that lay stretched out between this, his wedding day—they had so pleasured him by coming to keep at "the old house"—and the one in the year to come. "Ere then," he said, "faces full of health and joy now, might be gone forever from before them, or darkened with grief, or smitten with sickness." His voice shook so he could scarce speak those last words, and he brushed the back of his hand across his eyes. He then entreated them to keep his words in remembrance, for they were spoken in the truest spirit of love and friendship toward them all. And then he sat down; and I slipped around to him, and got up upon his lap and knelt there, and put my arms round his neck and softly kissed him many times. Oh! I knew, and they all knew, how his heart was aching for Elsie.

"Bless thee, my bairn!" he whispered, pressing me to him; "thy wee kisses fall like drops of balm on my sore heart."

"Shall I run up and see how Elsie is, father?" I said in his ear.

"Ay, do, little lassie, and tell her not to greet [grieve], father will come to her quickly."

But Elsie was not greeting, she was asleep—so still and pale—and her thin hand looked so white as it lay on the coverlid. I had never before seen any one look so.

As I stood watching her, I heard ever so soft a step at the door, and turning round, saw Harry's great brown eyes peeping in. I held up my finger to him not to make a noise, and he came on very gently, holding his big shoes in his hand. He came close and looked at Elsie; and as he did so, his face got so unhappy, and I heard him sigh; then he laid a little bunch of fresh white rosebuds, just by her hand, and went away again very quietly. I don't know where he went, for I did't see him any more that day; but one thing I thought, which was, that I was sure only Sam and I missed him; they were all too merry to notice who was there and who was not.

Then we had a nice tea and after that, everybody went home, looking very tired but very happy. Some of them, before they left, told father, when they shook his hand and thanked him for the nice day he had given them, that they would try hard to keep in their hearts the words on the board and those he had spoken and make them guide their actions.

CHAPTER IV.

Two days after came Sunday. How Elsie and I had always loved Sunday! but indeed we all loved it; and well we might, for every thing we did on that day was so pleasant. Father and brothers were with us from morning till night; for no matter how "unlucky" their fishing might have been during the week, or how promising Sunday looked of a good draught, father never went out in his vessel on God's holy day, nor allowed Sam or Tom to do so. There were many on our coast who did, but father never; and in no way was he one whit the worse, in the end, than they; on the contrary, in much far better; although at the time he seemed to lose.

In the morning we were allowed one hour more of rest, and instead of five, got up at six; but since poor Elsie's fall, mother rose just as early as on other days, so as not keep her waiting for her breakfast, knowing she often lay awake for hours during the night, and that a cup of coffee greatly refreshed her, as soon as she could have it. Mother wanted father to stay in bed too, and have his breakfast, but he would not hear of such a thing, he said, and if she named it again, he would get up at four and light the fire himself, and take Elsie her breakfast; and moreover the little woman (mother) should have her breakfast in bed, that she should.

The pretty little church lay about two miles distant from the old house; but as it was inland, on the other side of the hill, at our back, it was greatly sheltered from the rough sea winds. The walk to and from it was delicious in the summer, or on bright frosty day in the winter; leading up through the wood, and down the hill-side, and over fields, and through lanes, bright with all sorts of flowers.

When I was very little, father and brother carried me by turns; and still even Sam sometimes made me mount my horse, as he called his shoulder, particularly when going to church, that I might not be tired and go to sleep during the sermon, and fall down and crack my head again, he said. Just one year before I had fallen off the seat and knocked my head smartly against the boarding. Father picked me up quickly, and for a long time I sobbed quietly to myself, with my face hid on his broad chest, while he often bent and kissed my curly head, and whispered to me to be a brave little child, and not to mind it. I was very careful after that not to go to sleep again, unless father's or mother's arm was around me; but I usually preferred creeping close to Sam. However I was too old for such silly conduct now.

When church was over, the Joneses always joined us coming home; they were our nearest neighbors, and their way to church lay in the same direction as ours. Jones was a sailor as well as father; they had known each other since they were boys, and had married at the same time; but while Jones had only two children—Jim and Harry—father had four to provide for.

"Now, lads," father would say, "let us see which of us can remember the most of the sermon to-day."

So then they all tried first for the text; then some would repeat one part of the sermon, and some another, until I had heard nearly the whole over again by the time we reached home; and greatly they all seemed to enjoy the pleasure of trying to recollect it, Harry being always the quickest at it. I quite longed to be big enough to take my part too in saying it.

Though I did not share with Sam and the others in trying to repeat the sermon, I always told Elsie all I could remember of it, beginning with the text, which I got Sam or father to find out for me in the Bible when the parson said it, and so looked at it often, to get it by heart if it was not too long or hard for me. To-day Elsie would have me tell her as usual, although Harry was going to do so in the evening; "she could not have too much of such holy things," she said; and by the time I had finished, dinner was ready, and so was I for it, I can promise you.

We always had a grand, nice hot joint of beef or pork on Saturday, and cold on Sunday, with a large fruit tart and potatoes, and some other vegetables—for though mother staid at home in the morning with Elsie, they read their prayers and Bible, and a sermon together; so she could not cook any meat now, any more than when she went to church. In the evening father stayed at home, and I also, but mother and brothers went to church.

Poor Elsie! she had been ill so long a time that I was becoming accustomed, and even unthinking of the many changes which were at first so painful in our little household; and as she never complained, and always spoke to me as cheerfully about her illness as though she were daily improving in strength and health, I fully believed that she was so, and would soon be all right again, and filling her old place amongst us as before. Ah! how little I understood her then, when one day she said, "Thank God, she was better now than she had ever been in her life, and she felt—deeply felt—that she needed the bitter affliction."

Shun that Bad Companion.

Chemists tell us that one grain of iodine will give color to seven thousand times its own weight of water. One indulgence in bad company is enough to contaminate you for life. "One sinner destroyeth much good." The handling of pitch defiles your hands for days or weeks. How much more will evil companionship pollute your souls.

The celebrated temperance lecturer, Gough, said in one of his lectures:

"I would give my right hand to-night, if I could forget that which I learned in evil society; if I could tear from my remembrance those scenes which I have witnessed, the transactions which have taken place before me."

The Theater.

Mr. Rush told a friend that he was once in company with a lady, a professor of religion, who was speaking of the pleasure she anticipated at the theater in the evening.

"What, madam!" said he, "do you go the theater?"

"Yes," was the reply, "and don't you go, doctor?"

"No, madam," said he, "I don't go to such places!"

"Why, sir, do you not go? Do you think it sinful?" said she.

He replied, "I will never publish to the world that I think Jesus Christ a bad master, and religion an unsatisfying portion, which I should do if I went to the devil's ground in quest of happiness."

I do not regret having braved public opinion, when I know it was wrong and was sure it would be merciless.—Horace Greeley.

—The spring term at Wheaton College opened on Tuesday, the 18th, with a fine attendance of students and every prospect of a prosperous term to close one of the most prosperous years in the history of the institution, if superiority in literary attainments, the conversion of nearly all the students, and emerging from heavy debts with a balance on the other side may be called prosperity. A number of the students are regularly engaged in preaching and Sabbath-school work. Others have spoken at different places in the county in Christian temperance meetings; one is President of the Christian Temperance Union in Wheaton. In all these blessings the officers of the institution and the College church gratefully acknowledge the good hand of God upon them. Their enemies would have swallowed them up quick, but the Lord was on their side. Verily their help has been in his name (Ps. 124).

—The chanting of the Psalms has been successfully introduced into the College Sabbath school at Wheaton; and Prof. Baker, who for nearly a generation has conducted the singing in the church, intends introducing a like song service in the regular worship. Sabbath schools that are vexed with the multiplicity and expense of catch-penny music, will find in their Bibles the choicest songs of worship and of the heart.

—Prof. C. A. Blanchard has been preaching a number of discourses on the Christian evidences, the existence of God and cognate topics to the College church, Wheaton, before good audiences. The sermon of Sabbath morning, March 9th, was printed in the Wheaton Illinoian.

—Rev. C. W. Sherman of North Henderson, Mercer county, Illinois, has been constantly engaged in revival work since the first of December, without interruption.

—Major Whittle the evangelist is now working in Syracuse, N. Y., assisted by Mr. McGrannahan the singer.

—The Grace M. E. church proving too small for the crowds who come to Mr. Pentecost's meetings in this city, they were transferred to the Moody church last week. The evangelist is arousing more interest than in his first visit.

—Rev. D. B. Turney, Methodist Protestant, late of Grafton, West Virginia, is now settled over Sugar Grove church, Green county, Pa. A new local reform association has been formed in that locality for which Bro. Turney will be an able advocate. The name of his church augments the roll of the Associated Churches of Christ.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The trials of Rev. James Donaldson of Wardsville, Ont., are not unknown to our readers. He heartily sustained Elder Barlow when attacked by the lodge in the Ridgetown Baptist church, and soon found the same snakish enemy crawling about his own altars. The lodge was strong in his presbytery and he was forced from his pulpit. It formed a cabal to starve him out and drive him from the place. He says in a late letter:

"There is no prospect of any immediate settlement, or indeed of any settlement in this country or in this denomination that can be comfortable or consistent to me with my present views. May God open a large and effectual door where I can enter in and preach a full Gospel as well as a free Gospel, that God's name may be glorified and sinners converted and saved. I wish for your paper ten thousand times ten thousand subscribers, and am sorry that for a while I may not be one of them as I desire."

BAPTIST.

—Mrs. Dr. Hatch of Warrenville, Ill., daughter of Dr. Nathaniel Colver's second wife, died a few days ago. She was for some time a member of Dr. Colver's family, and was to him in his old age all that a daughter could be, and was cherished by him with peculiar affection.

—A Baptist council in Minnesota, called to ordain a young minister, after concluding their examination of the candidate, passed a resolution declaring, while they heartily approved his Christian character, call to the ministry, and doctrinal views, his denial of the right of women to to speak in church was designed to interfere with his usefulness, and they therefore declined to ordain him. The Baptist papers severely criticize the council.

—Dr. C. H. Blackall, so long associated with the Baptist interests of Chicago and the West has removed to New York to take an important place in the publishing interests of the denomination.

—Dr. Blackall's place as a Sunday school missionary will be filled by Mr. H. R. Clissold of this city.

—Dr. C. E. Hewitt of the Centennial Baptist church, Chicago, has resigned on account of an oppressive church debt. Chicago has lost Dr. Evarts after a work of great success for twenty years, on the same account, and last week the Michigan avenue church called a conference of the Baptist churches of the city for advice. Dr. Curtis, the pastor, has resigned and a bonded debt of $53 000 hangs over the church property, while over $6,000 are needed for repairs and to pay a floating debt. The conference helped the overborne church to little but unproductive sympathy. These severe experiences are teaching our city churches a lesson which more grace, years ago, would have rendered unnecessary.

—It serves to shows the intense feeling in California respecting the Chinese, that a week ago the name of Rev. Mr. Reed was stricken from the roll of the Baptist Association of San Francisco, for "a misrepresentation of facts before the Baptist Ministers' Conference in New York, respecting Baptists and Christian people generally on the Pacific Coast touching the Chinese question."

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. W. I. Phillips is supplying the Independent church at Streator, Ill., for a few Sabbaths, until an engagement, previously made with Rev. G. W. Bainum, late of Bunker shall Hill, ensue.

—Rev. Israel Brown, from Wheaton and Oberlin, whose great success in his first pastorate at Olney, Ill., was cut short by Masonic opposition, is now located at Marseilles, Illinois.

—Rev. George Bent, brother of Prof. J. A. Bent and Mrs. Pres. Blanchard, Wheaton, has begun work with the church at Red Cloud, Webster county, Kansas.

—Union Park church in this city pastorless for nearly a year, has secured the services of Rev. F. A. Noble of New Haven, —Rev. Edward Ebbs has been preaching at Naperville, Ill., for about a year. He gives notice that his ministry with that church closes April 27th.

—The Advance lately published a letter respecting Rev. Geo. Thompson, the faithful home missionary of Leland, Michigan, asking that aid be sent him; and has had the pleasure of forwarding $16 as the first response. Bro. Thompson writes to the Advance that his books giving a history of his experiences as missionary in Africa (with Bro. H. H. Hinman) and as an opponent of slavery may be obtained for $1.25.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Rev. John Lemley, former editor and publisher of the Golden Censer and Methodist Free Press, has been expelled from the church on charges of lying and hypocrisy prepared by the present managers of the Censer.

—The German Methodist churches of Chicago number six, but have only 1,000 members, though an average attendance of 4,000. And this is said to be the largest Protestant influence among the 100,000 Germans of the city.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—Rev. D. Shuck, of Stanislaus, California, formerly of Hartsville, Indiana, lectures at Central View, in Capay Valley, on the 27th inst. Subject: "The relation of Christians to secret societies."

—Rev. J. V. Potts, of North Robinson, Ohio, has just issued a new book from the U. B. Publishing House, Dayton, entitled, "The Itinerant System as a means of Gospel Evangelization."

—Rev. A. Shambaugh, of Bear, Wis., has experienced a very precious outpouring of the Spirit on his work during the past winter. He writes of it in the following:

"This winter has been an unusually hard one financially, but spiritually it has been one of the best in twenty years. Not so much excitement as at some other seasons, but such a thorough searching and investigating of the principles of religion is seldom seen. Order and respectful conduct has grown fifty per cent within the last six months. The people are moved from principle, and act from conviction of the heart. The now prevailing spirit is not of any advantage to secret societies. Love and good will rule the heart, and it will take an effort to make them exchange so good a fellowship for Masonic selfishness. Open-hearted Christianity has no pleasure in secret guarded halls. Brethren in Christ, teach men to believe and repent, and the lodge will number less. Backsliders make the best material for the cable-tow."

—Our readers have been interested in the case of the King Street U. B. church in Chambersburg, Pa,, to which Rev. J. M. Bishop now ministers. The origin and history of this organization are likely to form a chapter in the annals of the denomination through the recent action of the Pennsylvania Annual Conference in removing Bro. Bishop's name from its roll and in forcing the withdrawal of two other preachers, John Fohl and A. Bickley. The case of the church has been appealed to the General Conference which meets next year, The case as presented by our correspondents shows that the prime cause of the trouble is the adherence of a part of the original church to the testimony of the United Brethren against the lodge. The nullifiers being in the majority the others withdrew, and in maintaining the ordinances of Christ have been greatly revived and blessed. A correspondent of the Chambersburg Herald of March 12th makes the following statement:

"Those who have read the proceedings of the Pennsylvania Annual Conference published in these columns are aware that during the sitting of that body peace and harmony did not always prevail, but that the name of Rev. J. M. Bishop was erased from the conference journal, and Revs. J. Fohl and A. Bigley, two of the oldest members of the conference, who had labored hard and for forty-three years upheld the doctrines of the United Brethren church amidst persecutions from within and without the church, were compelled either to resign from the conference or be silenced from preaching the gospel to as respectable a congregation as there is in the church. To a people who though for years had been persecuted and harassed in the church of their fathers for upholding the doctrine of the church, and after bearing up under it all until it became eminent that to worship together was impossible until their grievances were remedied by the conference, they worshipped temporarily in a room on Broad street. After laying their grievances before that body when assembled at York, and receiving no justice, they purchased the King street M. E. church, where they now worship. That they are called 'strikers' and other harsh names by the illiterate and those who are unacquainted with their case we are aware, but when a people are true to the laws and government of the Discipline of their church how can they be truthfully called strikers? That they have passed through a very severe ordeal at the late session of conference is evident, and that they will still be persecuted for a while may be expected. That the prosperity of the King street U. B. church has overreached the mark set down, is clearly demonstrated in the attack made upon it. After Rev. J. M. Bishop, who the committee on grievances reported was not responsible to the conference he having appealed to the general conference, was voted off the conference journal, they also attempted to bind Revs. Fohl and Bigley, so much so that they were compelled to resign their allegiance to that body, and then draw up a set of resolutions prohibiting any member of this or any other conference from preaching for the congregation calling themselves "The Loyal United Brethren in Christ," which they are. After the members of the congregation had been publicly notified of their names being erased from the church record, without any just cause, they want to say who shall or shall not preach to them, in which they have wonderfully failed. Now can the congregation of the King street church worship under their own vine and fig tree, none daring to molest or make them afraid. The resolution refers to a violation of the discipline, page 62, upon which we cannot now dwell for want of space, but simply refer that body to the same section, page 61, some parts of the 2d paragraph, which we think was violated frequently."

MISSIONARY.

—The following was prepared by one of the secretaries of the Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society:

"The American Board did not expend as much in its first year as is required to build 150 miles of Massachusetts railroad. President Grant, in reviewing one of our Indian massacres, said: 'A war ensued which cost the nation thirty millions of dollars. Fifteen or twenty Indians, indeed, have been killed at an expenditure of more than a million dollars apiece.' Missions have never wasted money thus: The entire contributions of this country for evangelistic work during the year of the Modoc war was not one-fourth of its cost.

"Our government expended from April, 1861, to September, 1866, as pay of officers and men engaged in the war $1,094,000,000. As all the missionary societies of the United States do not spend over two millions of dollars annually on their foreign missions, the above sum would meet all the expenses of American foreign missions, at the present rate, for 500 years.

"The heaviest cost of missions relative to immediate results is at their beginning. For twenty years prior to 1869, the Baptist Telugu Mission averaged more than $460 expenditure to each convert. Since then the average cost has been $25. This represents the decreasing proportion of expense to result in all foreign missions, because:

"1. The per centage of converts is increased. After Carey landed in India the average net gain of converts was two and a half per annum; during the last ten years it has been 2,117. In the whole of India during the years from 1861 to 1872, the increase of native church members was 61 per cent. It is probable that on an average the number of converts from heathen nations throughout the world has doubled every fifteen years.

"2 The native agency is less costly than the foreign. The interest on $1,000 will support in perpetuity a native preacher in India or China.

"3. The native churches are becoming more self-supporting. The voluntary contributions of the churches in the Sandwich Islands have for some years been $24,000 per annum. In Liberia our church has had a steadily increasing membership, with a steadily diminishing appropriation from our missionary society. In China only evangelists are supported wholly by us. The maximum aid granted to any native Chinese Methodist pastor is one-half his support.

—The American Board publish a table showing the proportional disposition of every hundred dollars received. It is as follows: In Mexico, $1 25; in Spain, $1.50; among the North American Indians, $2 50; in Ceylon, $3; in the Hawaiian Islands, $3.50; in Austria, $3.75; among the Zulus, Southern Africa, $4; in the Foochow missions, China, $4; in the Micronesian Islands, $4.50; in Northern China, $5; in European Turkey, $5.50; in Central Turkey, $5.50; in Western India, $7.75; in Eastern Turkey, $8; in the Madura District, Southern India, $8.25; in Japan, $8.50; in Western Turkey, $17. Making an aggregate of $93.50 thus widely distributed. The remaining $6 50 constituted the total cost of the home administration, a part of which was employed in the service of the missionaries abroad, and a part in the communication of missionary intelligence at home. The total cost of administration last year, relatively to the entire receipts, including the payment of the debt, was only five and three-quarters per cent.

News of the Week.

—The Communists of Chicago met at the Exposition building Saturday night in great crowds. The daily press says the object was ostensibly to celebrate the anniversary of the Paris Commune of '48 and '71—really, to make money enough to carry their political spring campaign and to transform the tri-weekly communistic sheet of this city into a daily paper. The Exposition building was densely packed by the 30,000 Communists who kept up their howls all night. And even as late as six o'clock Sunday morning crowds of drunken fellows from the scene of rejoicing rushed along Adams street crying "fire." In one part of the building the Socialist military companies, being the Lehr and Wehr Verein, Jaeger Verein, Bohemian Sharpshooters, and Fifth Ward Labor Guard, drilled and were cheered by the many lookers-on. There were about 1100 men in the ranks. All bore the latest improved muskets. Some wore red plumes in their hats. Some wore gray uniforms. Some wore blouses. All carried belts and cartridge-boxes and bayonet scabbards. They looked as though they meant business. About $5,000 was realized from the demonstration, and it was daylight before the crowd went home. The celebration was continued Sabbath afternoon. The crowd numbered no less than 10,000 people, but what they came for no one seemed to know. There was some poor music and considerable loud talking, but no regular programme was carried out.

—One feature of the Senate committees which will attract national attention is that Withers, of Virginia, who had command of the prison pen at Danville, Va., during the war, where Union soldiers suffered almost as much as at any prison in the South, is made Chairman of the Committee on Pensions, and to him disabled soldiers are to look for relief.

—After this month the streets of Brooklyn will be lighted with naphtha instead of gas. It is said the local gas companies mourn the loss to the extent of nearly a half million dollars per year.

—The terrible prairie fires which recently occurred in Republic and Cloud counties, Kansas, extended over an area ten miles long and three wide, and swept everything before them. It is said about 100 homes were consumed; and also large quantities of grain, farming implements, hay and other property. The winds were so high, the fires so fierce and hot that the inhabitants were obliged to take refuge in cellars, dugouts, or underground habitations. But one life was reported lost—that of Mrs. Borversox, who was burned to death while attempting to release some horses from burning in a stable. Several other persons were severely injured. The loss is estimated at $40,000.

—The forty-fifth Congress, which recently adjourned, voted $375 to every one of its members for stationery, or a total of $124,225. This was so much that the members were not able to take it all in stationery, but took cash, and others opera glasses, books, carpet-bags, razors, and other articles of use and ornament. This refers only to the House of Representatives.

—Another calamity, it is feared, has befallen the fishing city of Gloucester, Mass. From the thirtee missing vessels of the George's fleet, long since due, thre are still no tidings, and the belief has become general among the citizens, reluctant as they are to accept it, that they are lost with their crews and their catch. This means a loss of 156 men of Gloucester, husbands of forty-one wives and fathers of nearly a hundred children, and property which cannot be replaced for less than $75,000.

—The dispatches from England stating that a number of live cattle shipped from Boston to Liverpool on the steamer Brazilian had been slaughtered because of the existence of pluro-pneumonia among them are pronounced by shippers as incorrect, private dispatches to the contrary having been received. A number of shippers in this country continue to send the dead meat in refrigerators. Since the Brazilian sailed from Boston two other steamers have left that port with live cattle, the Sumatra sailing last week with 120 head for London, and the Massachusetts, last Wednesday, with 276 head for Liverpool. The only shipments of live cattle from this port to English ports since the order of the Privy Council was 100 head on the steamship Holland, which sailed on the 5th of March for London. These are all western cattle from Missouri and Ohio.

—The first dispatches received from Cabul, the Afghan capital, since the death of Shere Ali are just at hand, and announce that tranquility reigns there. Yakoob Khan has been proclaimed Ameer at the capital.

—The expenses of the International Exposition at Paris were 55,000,000 francs; the receipts amounted to 30,000,000 francs.

—At a banquet given by the advocates of the abolition of slavery at Madrid, Spain, last Sunday night it was resolved that the society for promoting the total disappearance of slavery from the Spanish colonies should be organized. Senor Castelar and 103 former deputies of the Cortez have issued a manifesto to the Democratic party. They announce as their programme a sincere return to the constitution of 1869, which proclaimed religious and educational liberty, freedom of the press, and liberty of meeting and association. The manifesto also declares in favor of universal suffrage, inviolability of Spanish territory, and the payment of interest on the public debt, and recommends a policy avoiding alike reactionary excesses and demagogic utopias.

—An educational bill before the French Assembly states that according to existing laws foreigners are not allowed to teach in France, and declares that the same should apply to an order essentially foreign by the character of its doctrines, nature, and aims of its statutes. This passage refers to the Jesuits, who have twenty-seven colleges in France, with 848 teachers. Twenty-six other communities, having sixty-one establishments and 1,089 teachers, are also unrecognized by the state.

—The French floating battery Arrogante foundered off Hyeres Wednesday. Forty-seven men were drowned out of a crew of one hundred and twenty-two. A storm arose during firing practice, and the Arrogante sprung a leak. The ship Souverain, near by, was unable to render any assistance. An effort was made to beach the Arrogante, but she sunk about a kilometer from the Isles of Hyeres. The Arrogante's armor was five inches thick at the water-line.

—It was announced on Monday morning from St. Petersburg that in consequence of the representations of Lord Dufferin and Count Schouvaloff, concerning the views of England and Bismarck, a new conciliatory line of policy has been decided upon. Russia is now giving orders to her troops in Turkey to commence evacuation in the middle of April, and terminate it within the period prescribed by the treaty, and is ready even to propose a mixed occupation of Eastern Roumelia for a limited term.

—Prince Gortschakoff of Russia, in a diplomatic note to Salisbury of England, says that his government must support within the limits of the treaty of Berlin, the interests of population, for whose defense Russia made war. A general understanding would be greatly facilitated if those populations acquired the conviction that their interests would be effectually defended by Europe within the same limits when Russian troops were no longer there to protect them. All that the British government and its agents can do to induce in them confidence, moderation, resignation, and thus effect an equitable and pacific execution of the treaty, will meet with Russian co-operation.

—Pinto, the Portugese explorer, who has crossed Africa, telegraphs: "I struggled with hunger, thirst, native floods, and drouth. I have saved all my papers, twenty geographical charts, many topographical maps, three volumes of notes, meteorological studies, drawings, and a diary of complete explorations of the Upper Zambesi, with its seventy-two cataracts."

—One hundred and twenty thousand persons were rendered homeless by the recent overflow in Hungary. Eighty-two hundred out of ten thousand houses have fallen, and one thousand nine hundred persons drowned in Szegeden.

—Many avalanches have recently occurred in Austrian Tyrol. At Bleiberg, ten houses were crushed, forty persons killed, eighteen seriously injured and fifteen missing.

—The British steamer Boliver, Captain Doherty, plying between Liverpool and St. Thomas, came in collision with the Haytian steamer Michael. The latter sank and sixty persons were drowned.

—The Swiss State Council, by a vote of 27 to 15, resolved to restore capital punishment in Switzerland.

Home and Farm.

Buying Farm Tools.

The following suggestions from an exchange regarding the selection and purchase of machinery and tools seem to us wise. They are, it seems, addressed to farmers who expect either to use or store their tools; for those who intend to leave their machinery in the field, or their plows, etc., wherever they used them last, or where they expect to need them first in the spring, we should all, of course, advise the buying of the very cheapest out:

Decide on the most efficient implement to accomplish your purpose. If a corn-sheller, do not consult a false economy by getting one a little smaller than you can most profitably use. If a cultivator, get one that is strong enough to wear. If a pulley, one that is stronger than any possible strain to which you can apply it.

Always get the best and most thoroughly built instrument in the market, and be willing to pay for the workmanship. A cheap tool is never satisfactory in the end. Buy at as low a price as you can, but don't get a cheap tool!

Before buying see if you really need it. Calculate the gain which will come from its use and the saving which may reasonably be expected from its ownership.

Remember that too many implements and too expensive implements, are a ruinous draft on the farm profits. Balance this thought, however, with the opposite reflection—there can be no greater waste of resources than going without a tool that is really needed.

Few farmers buy too many tools, but many farmers buy unintelligently and wastefully. The best tool is always more profitable to buy than an inferior one, and yet, no matter how good the implement, it is unsatisfactory unless you find for it advantageous use. The saving from machinery comes from use, not from storage.

Bloat in Cattle.—A French veterinarian has been investigating the nature of the gases found in the stomachs of cows and other ruminants that had become bloated by over feeding on green clover and similar foods. Gas present in the rumen (or "paunch") of a cow that died scarcely two hours after access to a clover field, was found to consist of 74 30 per cent carbonic acid, 23 46 per cent carburretted hydrogen and 2.21 per nitrogen. Neither oxygen nor sulphuretted hydrogen could by traced. In the case of a "bloated" sheep, also, 76 per cent of carbonic acid was found. From these observations M. Reisit is led to suggest alkalies as remedies especially recommending ordinary magnesia.

Whitewashing.—Pour boiling water on unslaked lime, that is, lime in the shape of stones, which have not fallen apart by exposure to the dampness of the atmosphere; cover the vessel over to prevent the steam from carrying away the finest particles of the lime, which are needed to permeate the smallest crevices; add one pint of salt to four gallons of the white-wash, stir it well, and apply where desired; the salt unites with the lime and forms a smooth, hard, white surface, lasting next to paint. A good whitewashing of all the fences and outbuildings of a farm house adds so much to the cheerfulness, tidiness and healthfulness of the premises, that every intelligent farmer owes it to himself, his family, his neighborhood and the general interest of the community in which he resides, to make it a point, at least once a year, to use a liberal supply of good whitewash wherever it may be applied with advantage, with the assurance that it will make his place much more salable, besides more healthful.—Sel.

To Preserve Fence-posts.—Fence-posts can be preserved for a great length of time by painting the portion which is set into the ground with the following preparation: Mix very thoroughly equal parts of coal tar and raw linseed oil. To this add as much finely pulverized charcoal as can be made to adhere to the timber when applied with a brush. Apply a thick coating of this preparation, allow it to dry a day or two, then set the posts and they will be found to be almost indestructible.

To make Cleaning Easy.

An exchange offers the following good hints to housekeepers:

The pantry shelves are getting grimy, or finger marks around the door latches are looking black and unsightly. For lack of time they are left day after day, for it is hard work to scour all the time, and it wears off the paint too. The husband keeps his bottle of oil, or perhaps a large can holds it, for he never stints in that. Now suppose his wife had her bottle of spirits of ammonia to use; she takes her basin of water and clean cloth, just puts on a few drops of the fluid and wipes off all the dirt; it is worth more than half a day's labor and does not hurt the paint either. She could put a few drops of the fluid in her dishwater and see how easily her dishes could be cleaned; a few drops on a sponge would clean all the windows in the sitting room, making them shine like crystal. It would take the stains off the teaspoons, and a teaspoonful in the mop pail would do more toward washing up the floor than ten pounds of elbow grease applied to the mop-handle. A housewife has just as much right to make her work easy and expeditious as her husband has. If she does not, the fault is her own in a great measure.

A Useful Preparation.—A dressing of linseed oil will serve to prevent iron and steel from rusting, and mixed with lead and applied will prevent the decay of wood in farm implements and machines.

A pail of milk standing ten minutes where it is exposed to the scent of a strong smelling stable, or any other offensive odor, will imbibe a taint that will never leave it.

Leaves are the best bedding. A stove in the piggery, and a warm blanket for the sow, may save a litter in cold weather. In arranging a piggery this should be considered.

As soon as the teeth begin to fail, the animal—whatever it may be—is past a profitable age. Sheep go down hill fast. Weed out the flocks and keep only thrifty sheep over the winter.

It is more honorable and dignified to be living independently on a farm, making good butter and cheese, and raising abundant crops and fine stock, than to sit in high places and aid in making bad laws.

Publishers' Department.

J. P. Stoddard sends seven subsciptions for one year each from Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

P. P. Perry, Fort Scott, Kansas, assisted by Mr. Sackett, sends five subscriptions for one year each and two for two months each. He writes: "I tell our people here I want them to take the paper to know who they are working for; whether for themselves or for the rich, and more particularly who to vote for. As long as we vote for secret oath-bound lodge men, no matter what party they belong to, no matter what principles they advocate, temperance, grangerism or finance, we may expect to be deceived."

C. C. Foote, Detroit, Mich, sends eight subscriptions for three months each, hoping that some of them will subscribe.

A friend in Canada sends the money for sixteen subscriptions for three months each and six of the names. He writes: "I think the Cynosure is doing a great amount of good here and I wish to see it largely circulated."

Thos. White, Brooklyn, N. Y., and S. L. Cook, each send two subscriptions for a year each.

Mr. E. J. Chalfant, of York, Pa., has sent a rousing appeal to thinking men and women to subscribe for and read the Cynosure. He realizes the importance of its increased circulation and thinks that such a paper signed by seceding secret order members (telling the number of degrees in the order with which they have been connected that they have taken) and philanthropists everywhere, and endorsed by the National Christian Association, would be extensively circulated and increase the mail list to fifty thousand.

One friend wrote saying: "I wish you had continued to take subscriptions at $1.50 at least until the first of May." Another writes that he had intended to work for the Cynosure, but the roads had been so blocked by storms that it was impossible to do so.

In regard to Mr. Chalfant's appeal we would say we are saving it for future use. In the meantime we have Supplements which are excellent canvassing documents, which will be sent free in small quantities with subscription papers to persons wanting them strictly for canvassing purposes when requested to do so.

The price of the Cynosure is still but $1.50 to clubs of ten, and persons who have already sent one, two or more subscriptions this year may fill out the club, making it ten or more at the same price. We believe that some persons can canvass better in the spring than in the winter, and also in some localities money is more plenty then than in the winter. Friends, please be watching your opportunities and STRIKE FOR THE MAIN CHANCE. We are still aiming for a list of 10,000 subscribers. Let us complete the first half of this list at the earliest possible date. It wants about 1,000 new names to do it; ten each from 100 persons.

F. R. Hill, Wilbur, Douglas Co., Oregon, writes: "I will promise to get up a club of one dozen subscribers for the Cynosure the coming summer. There are at least one hundred in Douglas county who would like to take it."

D. B. Heckert, Ogden Center, Mich., adds another name to the five reported last week and writes: "I still expect to get some names."

P. Nicklas & Bro., Chambersburg, Pa., expect to send a club this week.

J. N. Norris & Son, Birmingham, Iowa, send another subscription and write: "We will gather up all the subscribers we possibly can and thus help to diffuse light."

A new friend from Lafayette, Yamhill Co., Oregon, has just found us out. He writes: "I am one of the boys that is constitutionally opposed to secret societies, and I am living in a nest of them. They want something else beside my Bible to convince them that they are walking in darkness and in sin. I want the best you have got." etc. Our resources for opposing the works of darkness in this land are only beginning to be developed. Circulate the Cynosure.

Geo. W. Clark, Dansville, N. Y., sends a specimen copy of the Cynosure to twenty-five different persons. Friend, you are not alone in working for the paper.

W. R. Morley, Brush Creek, Fayette Co., Iowa, writes: "I will continue the offer to citizens of this (Fayette) county, new subscribers in clubs of ten or more to the amount of one hundred, at fifty cents a copy. * * I will do so much towards the 10,000." The above stated fact was mentioned last week; this week we give the exact words.

Remember that many subscriptions expire before June first, and that at that time the mail list is to be reported. Let us keep the renewals and new subscriptions coming in so that on the first of June the mail list will have completed the first half of the ten thousand.

Four letters were received last week from persons who want the Cynosure but were not able to take it. One of them sends twenty-five cents; he says by the skin of his teeth so as to secure a few copies. He is a crippled soldier unjustly removed from the pension roll.

Red Clover Tea

A Cure for All Blood Diseases.

I am seventy years of age, am in good health for one of my years. Fourteen years since I had Scirrhus Cancer. Tea made from Red Clover Blossoms cured me. I have advised its use in many bad cases of Salt Rheum and it has proved a success. By permission I refer to Capt. David H. Small, No. 44 Winchester Ave., Chicago, who was cured by the use of clover tea of a cancer in the stomach after being pronounced incurable by physicians. I will gladly impart all the information in my power, and no charge, when a stamp is sent. I have the clover picked in full bloom and cured the same day with the Alden Dryer. It is not possible to have it better; also the Extract, equally good.

TO THE PEOPLE OF NEBRASKA.

The time has come that the friends of light and truth in this State should organize to oppose secret lodges. The cause of every man, woman and child in this State is suffering from their influence. Let us rally at YORK, York County, Nebraska, on Wednesday, April 30th and May 1st, 1879, and set up our banners in the name of the Lord. Rev. J. P. Stoddard, Secretary of the National Association opposed to secret societies, will be present, and other distinguished speakers and lecturers are expected. Let there be a general attendance of all.

W. S. SPOONER,
J. M. SNYDER,
Kearney, Neb. Committee.

TO THE FRIENDS OF CHRISTIAN REFORM IN NORTHERN NEW ENGLAND:

Failing health makes it important that I go home for a season for a little rest, but I hope to return in about a month to Vermont and spend about three months in Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine. Shall be glad to hear from brethren in reference to the work.

Address me at Wheaton, Ill., or the Cynosure office. H. H. HINMAN.

WISCONSIN. LECTURE WORK.

Permit me through the CYNOSURE to urge the friends of the reform in the State of Wisconsin to rally to the help of the cause in the State. We are about to employ a lecturer for the rest of the season. Send on your subscriptions to the treasurer, M. R. Britten, Vienna, Wis., and let those appointed last fall at the State meeting go work in earnest. Also those of the friends who want the State meeting held in their place please inform me of the advantages and prospects of being well sustained. ENOS COLLINS, Pres.,
New London, Wis.

Pastor Leavitt of the Lincoln Park church of this city, repels the attack of the subsidized Masonic press upon the evangelist Pentecost in a sharp, manly letter. Mr. Pentecost, he says, is here at the invitation of the Chicago churches. He is conducting the meetings on the North Side in answer to the written call of fourteen churches and pastors; and is therefore their guest. They do not mean to dishonor themselves by allowing him to be meanly attacked. Moreover, "no inconsiderable portion" of the Christians of Chicago agree with Mr. Pentecost in his position on the Author's Carnival. This carnival has been preparing for months. Car loads of scenery have been prepared in Buffalo at great expense. Eighteen hundred ladies have been spending time and money over it; Mr. Pentecost made the low estimate of $5.00 each for dress, or $9,000. They may be able to raise as much for the six charitable institutions designed to be aided. The reason of the criticism is obvious. Yet this carnival is more creditable than the performances got up to ridicule our great-grandparents and with outlandish dresses and singing the hymns that were the solace of those old hearts to raise the laugh of the vulgar for the sake of a little gain.

There are grave charges hanging over the head of Senator Ingalls of Kansas, elected this year to fill a second term. They are to the effect that he "secured his election by acts of bribery and corruption, and that, by himself and his agents, acts of bribery and corruption were resorted to" to induce a large number of members of the Kansas legislature to vote for his re-election. Only six years ago Samuel C. Pomeroy, who had long and faithfully served the State and nation was candidate for re-election. Opposed to him was Ingalls, a Mason, and Cornelius Logan, who had been at the head of the Odd-fellow order in this country—that is, openly opposed, his real opponent was the Masonic lodge, which at last in a meeting of conspirators found a tool fit for their despicable work, a man named A. J. York, who made frequent visits to Mr. Pomeroy's hotel trying to no purpose to get a consideration for his vote. Late at night before the day of election he gained a private interview, and, promising his vote, asked for a loan for his bank at Independence, Kansas, to carry it over a trying time. The loan was given, and next day the roll of greenbacks was shaken aloft at the critical moment and with a howl of bribery the vote was taken and Ingalls elected. The charges against the latter are explicit, and if the permission of the Masonic fraternity is given will be thoroughly investigated.

Along with the colored colonies in Kansas and the Mennonites in Dakota the Romanists are undertaking a vast colonization scheme in the latter territory. Mile after mile of land has been purchased or otherwise secured and several colonies have started in a thrifty way. The priest is one of the first on the ground with a jealous eye upon his increasing flock, but neither they nor the country at large have such fear of his peculiar power on the broad plains. It is the Romanist colonies in the cities that are to be dreaded. In them the priest it a despot as well as a ring-leader. Removed from the cramped alleys and tenements and poisonous air of the city to Dakota the earth will swallow up the dragon-flood of superstitions on which they have been fed for religion, and useful occupation will train them to be quiet citizens.

Serious and dark pictures are too often dropped off our end of the Atlantic cables. Here is one from last week which presents a view of England, armed and struggling to prevent her numerous colonies from slipping away from paternal control, though insatiable and grasping for further conquest over weak and barbarous tribes: "It may be stated with authority that in the best informed political and commercial circles a serious alarm is felt for the immediate future of England. In addition to the wars of Afghanistan and Zulu Land, the government appears likely to become involved in a conflict with Burmah, while the correspondence with Russia concerning the execution of the treaty of Berlin is anything but pacific in its nature. In his dispatch to Lord Loftus, which the latter was directed to read to the Russian Prime Minister, Lord Salisbury charges that the Russian agents in East Roumelia are permitted to lead the people there to believe that an insurrection against Turkey will secure their independence and union with Bulgaria. The Russian reply is by no means conciliatory, and the situation is extremely strained. To add to the gravity of the situation, the latest advices from Afghanistan indicate that much more fighting at a very large cost, will be necessary. There are 8,000 English troops in Afghanistan, many of whom are daily becoming incapacitated by the climate. The quarrel with Burmah will require at least 5,000 troops, and 15,000 men are now either in South Africa or on their way thither. Meanwhile business does not improve. The slight amelioration caused by the opening of the spring trade has passed away. The large manufactories are doing bad trade. The financial news from India is most gloomy, and a new loan of $25,000,000 is to be asked for by the Indian government to meet the losses caused by the demonetization of silver in England. Altogether, the outlook is regarded as extremely discouraging." Not an armed power in Europe to-day but is struggling with difficulties equally great and alarming. Nor can it be hoped that the gloomy scene will be lightened until the trade of war is abandoned for rational and peaceful measures of arbitration.

Cheap telegraphy is promised before we are ready to adopt the postal system. It is reported that a new company has been incorporated in New York with a capital of $3,000,000, which promises to construct double lines to the West and South and operate telegraphic machines capable of transmitting one thousand words per minute, and of performing with these wires the whole telegraph business of the country at the maximum rate of twenty-five cents for thirty words, east of the Rocky Mountains; night messages fifteen cents for fifty words; press reports ten cents per one hundred words. Under an arrangement with the postoffice they promise to use stamps for messages, and utilize the street letter-boxes for stamped messages collected every fifteen minutes during the day. The company claims to operate under an entirely new invention which has been thoroughly tested. The conjury of invention has disarmed doubt and we have ceased to wonder at the powers of electricity. By Edison's quadruplex instrument four men can now operate at each end of a wire, and do for twenty-four hours each week day between Chicago and New York, two transmitting and two receiving dispatches. The only wonder about this new invention is that it should be unheard of until a company, full armed like Minerva, springs into being. It will be hailed throughout the land as a destroyer of the existing monopolies.

The Unfathomable Wickedness of the Lodge.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

Not content with its tremendous power and mischief in the present world the lodge system strikes its baleful roots deep into the eternity to come. Its devotees neither enter into the kingdom of heaven themselves nor suffer those that would to enter in.

A friend of mine said to a religious (?) Mason, "If two young men were attending a revival meeting, one of whom was a Mason and the other not, which of the two would be the more likely to become a Christian, the Mason or the not Mason?" A pregnant question! Not only the moral character, but the very life of the lodge is involved in the answer. An evasive, or a hesitating response would be equally fatal. This the man clearly saw, and for once honesty triumphed over duplicity, and he answered, "The Mason would stand the poorer chance of the two."

Here then is the frank confession of one who knows, that Masonry enhances the peril of the souls of its votaries; and renders their eternal perdition more probable! Is not this appalling fact enough to place such a system of iniquity under the ban of the universe? It is easy enough to see why this man gave the answer he did, and two facts will make it clear that he gave the true answer.

Fact No. 1. That young man had been told that, "if he lived up to the religion of the lodge, that would save him." So a Master Mason once told me. Why should he then seek salvation from the Son of God, who was not a Mason? To do that would be to pronounce the pretensions of the lodge a "damnable heresy," (as in truth they are) deserving the execration of heaven and earth. This would be equivalent to an acknowledgement that Masonry is itself a fraud, and that consistency required him to renounce it, or abide the fatal consequences. Well might the Saviour say to those in such a plight, "How can ye escape the damnation of hell?"

Fact No. 2. That young Mason had seen a minister of the Gospel led into the lodge, "neither clothed nor naked," hood-winked, cable-towed, "seeking light," confronting an invisible altar, his passive hands placed upon the book of God by an unseen person, there kneeling to "an unknown god," and taking a sacreligious oath, with horrid penalty never to reveal the secrets, however heinous they may be, of which he is about to be made the guilty custodian. And all this is but the beginning of deeds of darkness that unconverted young Mason is destined to witness in that same deluded minister.

Now if all this is not enough to generate in that young man the profoundest contempt for the Gospel preached from the pulpit, and caricatured in the lodge by that minister, then he must be a victim of unlimited credulity or an infinite simpleton.

Take another fact. At the close of a discourse in one of the churches here, in which I had said that no man could enjoy the presence of the Holy Spirit in the lodge-room, the pastor arose and said, "Brother Foote has told the truth. I have tried it, and know that it is so; and that is why I left." Thousands have borne the same testimony, many of them men of world wide renown.

Who can fathom the sin of an institution whose practices necessarily give away the pure and blessed spirit of God. Well might Rev. J. M. Whipple, in the Cynosure of March 13th, pronounce Masonry "one of the greatest monsters of wickedness that ever cursed the world."

By their Fruits.

BY REV. P. B. WILLIAMS.

Editor Cynosure:—I know of but one authorized way of judging men and institutions—"By their fruits;" and judging the institution of Masonry by this rule, I am led to decide at once that the "tree" is evil in its nature and tendency. Evil are its deeds because it seeks "darkness." And in its dark places it proposes to unite all men, Jews, Mohammedans, pagans and Christians, in one common brotherhood, which is evil in its tendency. Oil and water will mix together more easily than Christianity and Judaism or paganism.

I was diverted some time ago by a Mason trying to dodge this point by saying that, "At the lodge door the Jew must leave his Judaism and the Mohammedan his Mohammedanism." "Then," said I, "if this be true, the Christian must leave his Christ and his Christianity and meet upon the level with all these others to learn of the Masonic order, virtue, morality and science. Is it not a shame for any one professing Christ so to do? Whatever Freemasonry does as an institution each individual member is charged with the same and must be considered guilty by those who think on the subject but a little. Masonic lodges are chartered under the laws as corporate bodies. Every act done in their order brings every member of the corporate body under accountability. When Captain Wm. Morgan was murdered it was done by the whole Masonic fraternity. The number remaining in was guilty. When the order rejects Jesus Christ, every member remaining in, is guilty of rejecting him. No man can belong to a Masonic lodge without sinning. Remaining in them is where the sin is. Things are done in those orders that will not stand the light. A life of purity cannot be led in a Masonic lodge. While everything else is open to investigation and criticism, our governmental affairs and the system of Christianity, its doctrines and institutions, Masonry hides itself behind its secrecy (so-called) as a kind of a touch-me-not, and says to the world, "Stand off and let us alone, for you know nothing about us." If these words of Masonry were true, it would be one of the best arguments in all the world for Christians not to enter these lodges.

Again, as a fruit of this institution, let a minister or any one oppose them, especially in public, and they will begin the work of slander and every device that can be invented will be brought to bear upon his character just as if their cause could not be sustained in any other way; and in all my experience I have never known any other kind of Masonic argument. If they want to try to point a moral, or adorn a tale they will take the private character of some one who happens to be "mean enough" to think Masonry wrong.

The recent Masonic concert at Ft. Wayne, Ind., displayed some of the fruits of the institution. It is evident to the casual observer that Masonry favors gambling; and not only so, but taking the above mentioned concert as a sample, it favors cheating in gambling! Will they deny? They can boast of their help to the widows and orphans; but, Mr. Editor, at Fort Wayne, Ind., they have cheated the widows orphans and all others out of all they possibly could, at one grand concert!

We are not looking for fruit different from the above until we have first made the tree good, which we are trying to do as fast as possible, "This kind goeth not out save by fasting and prayer." The devil of Masonry is a hard one to cast out, you know, it tears men so. Some are being torn by it here, but we hope soon to unmask the beast for them and get them restored to their right minds.

Parasites.

BY JOHN V. BAKER.

An able teacher, in a lecture on on animalcules, delivered in Louisville University a few years ago, made use of this quotation:

"Large fleas have little fleas
Upon their backs to bite 'em!
Little fleas have smaller fleas,
And so on, ad infinitum."

Judging from the statements of their own authorities, secret societies are in the same condition as the insects referred to. While they all draw support from the people of all classes, and are a source of much evil to the churches and our government, let us be thankful that they also prey upon and weaken each other, otherwise their power might be still greater.

Grand Master Lininger of Nebraska, in his annual address to the Grand Lodge, regrets that so many Masons belong to other secret societies. He says of the brother who joins other societies: "How can he assume new duties until he knows they will not conflict with those he has already obligated himself to perform?"

The National Grange, at its annual session in November, 1877, enacted the following law:

That any member of our order found engaged in organizing a secret society within our order, or consisting in whole or part of members of our order, is regarded as a conspirator, and all members of our order engaged in the same, assisting in the same, or remaining in the same, should likewise be deemed conspirators against the life and prosperity of our order and shall be liable to expulsion, upon charges, trial, etc.

This is quoted from the instructions of H. Eshbaugh, Master Missouri State Grange, and he says it is in full force and effect in that State. It seems to shut the door of the grange to the introduction of new secret societies into the order, or the participation of any of its members in any new secret society.

Taking the ground that secrecy is right, as secretists do, this law seems to be the product of despotism, for how soon may some of the brethren feel it a duty to organize a secret anti-tobacco society, or a secret society for the suppression of lying, or one to fight against the sin of profane swearing, etc., etc., but they dare not engage in any of these "laudable undertakings," for fear of expulsion from that order which claims that "Its teachings are the loftiest that man can seek," namely, Patrons of Husbandry.

The Murphy Movement.

BY GEO. W. CLARK.

Mr. Francis Murphy, after "swallowing" intoxicating drinks until he had, to use his own words, "lost all," ruined himself and family and found himself in prison, was induced to "swallow from the temperance world" the saving doctrine of total abstinence. Rescued thereby from prison and from drunkenness, he commenced relating his experience, and finally became very successful in the work of rescuing others from drink. Many thousand victims of the liquor traffic have been "plucked as brands from the burning" by his example and appeals — restored, "clothed and in their right minds." Many of them to-day, by the grace of God, are standing firm in their deliverance. Joy and gladness have been carried into many dilapidated and wretched homes, and into many broken and desolate hearts. Convictions have been deepened in the public mind in regard to the great criminality of the liquor traffic, and the necessity of its extinction if we would save our country. In fact, no one can know until the judgment day reveals the extent of the good resulting from such labors. It is true that some of the best seed "falls by the wayside, and on stony ground" and does not bear much fruit, but the truth shall not return without "sheaves!" Some seed shall find its way into "good soil" and shall "bring forth fruit to the glory of God." Doubtless greater results and more rapid and continued advance would be made in this reform if the good people would more heartily and unitedly sustain and keep up the work after the new laborers have left for other fields. But no reformed man or reformer of men was ever perfect, or ever accomplished all that could be desired. Mr. Murphy's great mistake was in teaching "cessation of hostility to the liquor traffic"—the very traffic which nearly caused his own ruin and the ruin of all the wretched creatures he was trying to save, and thousands of its palsied and fettered victims beyond his power, and whom no human efforts can ever save until prohibition puts the destructive poison beyond their reach. It was through the conscienceless traffickers in intoxicating poisons (to whom Mr. Murphy has misapplied Lincoln's "meritorious phrase") that many of his partially reclaimed subjects were tempted and drawn back again to ruin, and that is filling the land with crimes and wretchedness, and woes unutterable, and would, if it could, flood out all trace of Francis Murphy and every other temperance lecturer's foot-prints.

Mr. Murphy would have shown more wisdom and would have accomplished vastly more permanent good had he in every place organized and trained his newly converted and zealous disciples into an army, solid not only for total abstinence, but solid for prohibition of the wicked traffic, and appealed to all good citizens, not only to take the pledge against liquor drinking, but to take the ballot against the liquor vending. No doubt Mr. Murphy's mistaken policy in this direction has been a "bonanza" to the drink traffickers, and given them a new lease of encouragement in their work of death. But the "triumph of the wicked is short." Mr. Murphy, however, is not the authorized oracle of the temperance world. However liquor dealers may have received and taken umbrage under Mr. Murphy's policy, it is a great mistake to say that the "temperance world swallowed it as a panacea to cure all the ills the liquor trade is father to." Whatever a few temperance men or Murphy followers may have done the great "temperance world" looks upon this traffic as the crime against God and against human society, and never did, do not now, and never can adopt Mr. Murphy's parodied aphorisms, or his strange and anomalous policy in relation to it. Total abstinence from intoxicating drinks, and prohibition for the drink venders, moral suasion for the drunkard, but legal suasion for the drunkard makers, is the doctrine upon which the "temperance world" is organized and operating, and upon which it is steadily concentrating its forces, and upon this platform in the near future will the intelligent, humane, patriotic and Christian elements of the civilized world unite for the overthrow of this greatest enemy of the human race.

Law and Gospel.

BY JAMES BARNET.

The obligation of the law, embracing the Gospel upon the Christian, is as immutable as the throne of God.

To annul the law of God between the believer and God, would be to destroy the necessary and natural relation between the creature and the creator. The additional bond of redemption does not annihilate, but strengthens the obligation. We do not cease to be creatures, by becoming new creatures. Does the law lose its force, by being conveyed to us through the hands of Christ—himself being Lord of all? Why do men wish to be rid of this rule? The proof of our love to the Saviour is the keeping of his commandments. (John 14: 15).

The law, partially at least, as in the case of the heathen, is discoverable by the light of nature. (Rom. 2: 14, 15). Whereas the Gospel is the hidden mystery of God, which could only be known by the light of revelation. (Rom. 16: 25).

There is a perfect harmony of the Law with the Gospel; though distinct they are not opposite; they coming from the same source, must ultimately meet in the same plan, and subserve the same end. They harmonize in mutual subserviency in the Christian system. The provisions of the Gospel are fully commensurate with the demands of the law. Its righteousness fulfills the law as a covenant. Its grace obeys it as a rule. Both have a commanding and a condemning power. Both combine to bring the sinner to Christ—the law indirectly, as a schoolmaster, showing his need of him; the Gospel directly, exhibiting him in all points suitable to his need.

In this center of everlasting love, the "mercy" of the Gospel, and the "truth" of the law "meet together." The "righteousness" of the law, and the "peace" of the Gospel here "embrace each other." Both unite to endear the ways of God to us—the law as an instrument of conviction, teaching us to prize the grace of the Gospel; the Gospel as the principle of holiness, exciting us to delight in the law of God after the inward man.

As both are transcripts of the Divine mind and image, both must be hated or loved together. It is a bad business to try to separate the law from the Gospel; for the law is a constituent element of the Gospel.

When Jesus Christ was teaching the Gospel to a lawyer, he gave information that the two tables of the law were two commandments, of love to God and love to our neighbor. (Matt. 22: 35-39.) So the Gospel requires, that "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," and "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." And "on these two commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets."

"God is love." (1 John 4: 8,) and his law is a law of love. Even the penalty of the Law, is a penalty of love to the believer. The Psalmist said, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes." (Ps. 119: 71.) We have in 2 Samuel 12: 9-11, an account of King David's sin, and what came upon him as penalty for sin; a penalty which he was to endure through life. The Rev. Thomas Boston, the author of "The Crook in the Lot," was born A. D. 1676, and ordained a preacher in 1699. He departed this life 1732. On page 29 of his book he says:

"It cannot be questioned, but the crook in the lot, considered as a crook, is a penal evil, it is certainly a punishment of affliction. Now, as it may be, as such, holily and justly brought on us by our sovereign Lord and judge, so he expressly claims the doing or making of it. Amos 3: 6. 'Shall there be evil in the city and the Lord hath not done it?' Wherefore, since there can be no penal evil, but of God's making, and the crook in the lot is such an evil, it is necessarily concluded to be of God's making."

Page 52: "Although the crook in thy lot be immediately from the creature's hand, yet it is mediately from the hand of God, there being nothing of that kind, no penal evil, but the Lord hath done it. And albeit thou hast not deserved thy crook at the hand of the instrument which He makes use of for thy correction, thou certainly deservest it at his hand."

Page 175. "There is a certain portion of suffering that is allotted for the mystical body; the head has divided to the several members their portion thereof."

Paul looked on his life as a going on in that work of suffering (Col. 1: 24). The faithful preaching of the Gospel is a work always in connection with suffering. Paul commanded Timothy in these words, "Be thou partaker of the afflictions of the Gospel according to the power of God."

Now the head and body are always in fellowship in sufferings, in glory, and in joy. Phil. 3: 10: "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death." 2 Cor. 1: 5-7: "For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ. And whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer: or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation. And our hope of you is steadfast, knowing that as you are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the consolation." Rom. 8: 17: "If so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." 1 Peter 4: 13: "But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." And so Christ mystical, endures the penalty for the sins of the elect; and that revelation, that God executes a portion of the penalty on us, due for sin, for our sanctification, is one part of the Gospel.

Secrecy.

"Secrecy and treachery are the bane of society, the overthrow of churches, and the downfall of nations. They wear a slimy, snakish appearance; and hence a secret organization cannot exist without affording at least a pretext for evil surmising; while we are exhorted, by the great apostle, to abstain from all appearance, or from every form of evil.

"It is admitted that national institutions and official positions are greatly controlled by secret organizations, by which the wheels of government are retarded, and even churches are trammeled in their influence for good by the same means.

"It is evident that secret organizations partake, more or less, of the nature and character of a conspiracy, grasping for governing power, and claiming special allegiance, and have somewhat similar modes of operation, though ranging from treasonable associations down to the latest and most lax of secret societies. Claiming to be oppressed, they take the world's plan of trying to beat their oppressors at their own game, in place of overcoming evil with good. Although the object may be a good one, the end does not justify the means; even as in taking carnal weapons to defend a good cause, the loss may be greater than the gain.

"The early promoters of Christianity had the fiercest opposition to meet in attaining their great end, in the midst of a wicked and gainsaying world; yet the openness of their work was their great boast. 'The king knoweth of these things,' said Paul, 'before whom also I speak freely; for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him, for this thing was not done in a corner.'

"Our Saviour expressly declares, 'I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing.' Nowhere do we find an apostolic example of secrecy; Judas being excepted. Hence all secret organizations are without Gospel foundation, and lead to strifes, divisions, and often to the downfall of things which they profess to build up. Frankness, openness and manliness are better than craft and guile and secrecy."—The Christian.

We have given ourselves away; that implies that we have no longer anything to do with ourselves. Our money for example is all God's. He leaves us what is necessary for us, and he manages it like a good father who provides largely for all our needs. But the rest is his, and he has a right to dispose of it.

Reform News.

Report of Iowa State Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies, convened at West Branch, Cedar county, Iowa, March 18, 1879, at 2 P. M.

The proper officers not having arrived, the hour was improved in devotional exercises, after which Bro. J. P. Stoddard, Secretary National Christian Association, delivered an address which every body said was good, just like him, for this is one of his peculiarities.

The train having arrived, Bro. M. S. Drury, Corresponding Secretary, came in, and in the absence of the other officers called the convention to organization. Bro. M. S. Drury was chosen President, and he presided over our deliberations with excellent grace and ability, dispatching business with ease that showed he was no stranger to the duties of the chair.

In the evening Elder D. P. Rathbun proceeded to give the audience "farther light in Masonry" by working the first degree. Bro. Rathbun's work needs no comments; it speaks for itself. He was assisted in working the degree by Sam'l E. Starry, a Master Mason of Springville Lodge, Linn county, whose demit is dated March 8, 1879. Bro. Starry has recently seceded and is a bright Mason and intends entering the lecture field. He is a young man of promise. Bro. J. Ferguson acted as Junior Warden, also a seceding Master Mason. Bro. D. E. Middlekauf, of Polo, Ill., testified to the truthfulness of the exposition.

Wednesday was spent in the transaction of business matters of the convention. The spirit manifested during the transaction of business breathed of the spirit of the Master; no clashing, no dissension, but every one seemed to be there for the purpose of standing squarely and firmly in defence of our principles.

Elder D. P. Rathbun made his report as State Agent which will be forwarded to you as soon as a copy can be obtained. He reported as having delivered 133 lectures since he entered the State the 20th of last June; had received in all a trifle over $200. The committee on finances reported that the Association pay the sum of $50 as justly due to him for his services. The report was unanimously adopted and the money was cheerfully and quickly raised and handed over to Bro. R., thus meeting the obligation of the Association made to him.

Bro. Rathbun was retained as State Lecturer, to be assisted by S. E. Starry. The labors of Bro. R. have been most keenly felt by the lodge in almost every portion of the State. Crowds have flocked to hear him at every lecture. The lodges tremble at his approach and immediately are taken with spasmodic constrictions which purges them of their contents, and reveals to the world the food they have been feasting and living upon, viz., lies, slander, corruption and all manner of uncleanness. The lodge is receiving its death blows. So mote it be!

Resolutions were adopted declaring "that ministers of the Gospel who hold membership in the Masonic fraternity and uphold its principles are not worthy to be recognized as evangelical clergymen to occupy our pulpits, or to be invited to officiate in any capacity as Christian ministers."

"That persons who are adhering Masons are not according to Gospel rule properly eligible to membership in any Christian church," etc.

Also recommending the circulation of the Christian Cynosure, American Freeman and reform tracts and anti-secret books. Political action was deemed necessary as an effective measure for the promotion of the cause.

Bro. Nutting, editor of American Freeman, presented very ably the interests of the publications with which he is connected, also the proposition of G. W. Needles, proprietor of the American Freeman, to donate to the cause of the reform his entire publishing house, located at Albany, Mo., to become the actual property of the State Associations of Missouri and Iowa, provided an endowment fund of twice the value of the property be raised to ensure the continuance of the publication. This offer of Bro. Needles was very highly appreciated by the Association. The committee appointed to consider the proposition reported no action, in connection with the following resolution:

Resolved, That the American Freeman, published at Albany, Mo., under the joint editorship of Needles and Nutting, be heartily endorsed; and is as heartily commended to all the friends of anti-seerecy throughout the State and throughout the country. W. P. Johnson, Ch'n.

Which was unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

The measures adopted, as reported by the committee on finance, for the purpose of raising means to carry forward the work of sustaining a State lecturer and other expenses, was in the form of a contract or agreement, which found many supporters at the convention and has quite a list of signatures attached to it already. Let the friends who desire to carry forward this work send in their pledges to Moses Varney, Springdale, Cedar county, Iowa, Treasurer State Association.

A committee was appointed to appoint a committee of one in each county in the State, where the cause has friends to help carry forward this work. As soon as these appointments are made they will be published.

The following is the report of the Corresponding Secretary, which the convention voted to have published:

Report of Corresponding Secretary.

Beloved Brethren:—It may be expected that a statement of our work since we met in Washington, Iowa, be submitted to you. You are aware that our last State meeting fixed the place of its next annual session at Chariton, Lucas Co. The time also was fixed for Dec. 10, 1878. As your corresponding secretary I wrote letters and visited conferences in the interest of the said meeting, believing it best to meet at the time and place fixed by the State meeting inasmuch as said meeting did not delegate its power to the Ex. Committee to change either time or place.

Some of our dear brethren thought it wise to change the place of said meeting and so published a call for the convention at Cedar Rapids without the knowledge of the Vice President and several of the committee. This the Vice President and myself, with others, thought unwise and would lead to division. No hall or church had been secured in which to hold the convention, and the time being too short to prepare the way for a successful meeting, the call was withdrawn. This mistake cost me much writing and trouble. In all this, however, I wish to say no brother's motives should, for a moment, be questioned. All aimed for the best interests of the reform as seen by them.

This meeting was called in haste. After I got word that our friends here would gladly accept the meeting, the time was too short to hear from all the committee before the notice should have been published and I ventured to issue the call. I am sure you will approve the course pursued, and now let me say that good work has been done during the last year by Bros. Stoddard, Rathbun, Ronayne and others as lecturers, and the way is open for better organization and greater success. We cannot afford to be divided. Let us all labor and pray for this work.

Very respectfully submitted,
M. S. Drury, Cor. Sec.

(I have changed the words in the above report of President to Vice President. The president elect, Dr. McAyeal, having removed from the State the vice-president became president of the association, and in the above report was called such; but I have taken the liberty to make this change so that none may mistake.)

Also the following resolution concerning our Lecturer:

Whereas, We have witnessed the exposition of the first and third degrees of Masonry by Rev. D. P. Rathbun on the two consecutive evenings of our State Convention; and

Whereas, We have listened to the report of his labors since coming to our State; and

Whereas, We find in him a spiritually-minded Christian with whom we can confer in reference to the interests of our cause, and whose presence in our conventions, in our churches, and in our homes is both pleasing and profitable; and

Whereas, We believe God has called him to a special mission in working and discussing the degrees of Masonry; therefore

Resolved, That we commend him to the favorable notice of all who desire a thorough, candid, consistent and Christian exposition and discussion of this question in their midst, especially to friends of our anti-secrecy reform in the State of Iowa.

The convention was enlivened and made profitable by the presence of Bishop Wright, who addressed the convention on the subject of "How to promote the success of the anti-secrecy movement."

Rev. Joel H. Austin, Sister A. A. Rathbun and others, by their presence and their words, cheered our souls and gave vigor and tone to the convention. Long may they live!

J. P. Stoddard's presence and stirring appeals will not soon be forgotten. Just give him a chance; sympathy is not much sought, but a chance is always improved; give him a chance, brethren.

The time for holding next meeting was fixed for Sept. 16th, 17th and 18th, 1879; convening on Tuesday evening Sept. 16th at 7:30 P. M. Let the brethren take due notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Eleven denominations were represented. One hundred and forty-one delegates enrolled. Bro S. A. Flanders, Burlington, was elected delegate to National Corporation meeting. A resolution of thanks was offered the good people of West Branch for their Christian entertainment; it was glorious, without flattery. God has a true people there whose kindness will not be forgotten.

Nebraska Organizing.

Chicago, March 27, 1879.

Under the generalship of Bro. Rathbun and his able coadjutors scattered over the State, Iowa is advancing nobly in the effort to free herself from the incubus of lodge rule. Encouraged by the example, friends have inaugurated a movement for a like purpose in Nebraska. The effort to secure concert of action and unite the anti-secrecy forces of this new State, now receiving such an influx of population, should receive the attention of friends everywhere. Especially should every free man and woman in the State pray for the success, and if practicable arrange to attend the meeting for discussion, consultation and organization, on the 30th of April next. Great wisdom is required to lay the foundations and set up the pillars of this great movement and every one should be at his post, to aid in starting a work which is imperatively demanded in the interests of civil government as well as for the largest success of the cause of Christ. Society is now, in a measure, in process of formation, and on that account there is much less to contend with than in older States where the "ruts" are worn deep and habits have become rigid. Let Nebraska be annexed to the other States, that have already joined our union, and let every friend who can be present to aid and assist. Iowa and Kansas, your near neighbors, will each lend you a helping hand when they find that you are in earnest, and in endeavoring to help yourselves, you will secure the sympathy, prayers and co-operation of all who are struggling against this monster evil.

NEW ENGLAND NOTES.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn, Mar. 25, 1879.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—Windham is one of the old time New England villages, staid, substantial and conservative. Besides a Protestant Episcopal, it has a good large Congregational church over which labors as pastor, Rev. F. Thompson, who formerly labored in the Sandwich Islands. He is reputed to be a Mason, but he received me very kindly, used his influence to get me the lecture room of the church and to have the regular prayer meeting given up for the lecture. If he is a Mason at all I think he is a reformed Mason. I lectured to a full and attentive congregation of intelligent men and women.

My next visit was to Mystic in southeast Connecticut. This is historic ground. Here was the seat of the Pequods. Their fort near here was captured by Capt. Mason, and Mason's Island at the mouth of the river was given to his heirs. A remnant of the tribes till remains on a reservation near here. I spoke on Sunday, March 22d, at 10:30 A. M. in the S. D. Baptist church, their pastor, Rev. T. L. Gardner, kindly giving me his hour. An intelligent and attentive audience gave good heed. In the evening I spoke in the hall of the Y. M. C. A. The night was dark and it rained heavily. Only about twenty-five were present. On the 23d I preached in the evening in the Congregational church. On the 24th I visited western Rhode Island. Spent the night at New London, Connecticut, and go from here to Hartford. Yours truly, H. H. HINMAN.

THE WORK IN INDIANA.

At a recent meeting of the State Executive Committee, it was decided to hold our next meeting of the State Association on the 21st, 22d and 23d of October next. We announce the time at this early date, so that all who desire to attend may have ample time to make their arrangements. Please, friends, make a note of the time, and let no other engagement claim your services then. The place is not yet agreed upon, but due notice will be given. The committee desires to make especial request that churches, associations, and communities appoint or elect delegates to the State meeting. In connection with the appointment arrangements should be made to defray the expenses of delegates to and from the meeting.

Especial request is made for churches, and quarterly and annual conferences, to take timely action in this matter, and send delegates. Besides those who may come as representatives, all who are interested in this reform movement are also invited to attend. Remember the time, and keep a "sharp look out" for an announcement of the place.

It was decided to make an appeal to the friends of the reform for means, (of which we stand much in need) to carry forward this work. The plan proposed by Dr. Champ in a former number of the Christian Cynosure, was adopted by the committee, viz., the raising of a fund of five hundred dollars by securing the pledges of one hundred persons for five dollars each, to be paid when the one hundred names have been secured. All the members of the committee who were present gave their pledges. The committee authorized the State Agent and Lecturer, Dr. S. L. Cook, and the Vice-Presidents who were elected at the last meeting of the State Association to make personal solicitations immediately, and report to Dr. G. W. Champ, Chairman Executive Committee, New Lisbon, Henry county, Ind. The following is the form of subscription drawn up by the committee:

"As soon as one hundred obligations for $5.00 each have been secured, we, whose names are hereunto subscribed, do promise to pay the amounts annexed to our names severally for the purpose of carrying forward the interests of the anti-secrecy reform in the State of Indiana, subject to the order of the Executive Committee of the Indiana Christian Association opposed to secret societies."

The services of any one who will take the matter upon themselves to copy the above subscription and canvass their community, and forward the subscription to Dr. Champ will be gratefully acknowledged by the committee. It is earnestly requested also, that all who may feel willing to give their personal obligation on the above plan will send up their pledges at once and have their names recorded on this roll of honor.

There has been some desire manifested to have the next annual meeting at Indianapolis. This would be advisable, and expedient also, provided we could have an assurance of a good attendance of the reformers of the State. We must not, at this time undertake to hold a meeting of the State Association at Indianapolis without a strong force to commend the enterprise to the consideration of the worshipers of Baal and their sympathizers.

It is desired that all who will make it a point to attend a meeting of the State Association at Indianapolis at the time stated above will drop a line to Dr. Champ and inform him of their intention so to do.

The executive committee will hold another meeting in a few weeks and are anxious to hear from the friends of reform in reference to the place of holding the next annual meeting of the Association. Who and how many are willing to rally around the "flag of freedom," at Indianapolis next October? Let us hear from you, friends, immediately.

PENNINGS FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

The Anti-masons in this part of Greene county, Pennsylvania, have associated themselves together under the name of the "Christian Association of South-western Pennsylvania, Opposed to Secret Societies." The work was accomplished through the instrumentality of Jonathan W. Moss, who has also been the means of securing me the pastorship of Sugar Grove church. I had the privilege and pleasure of presenting some arguments and facts at the Anti-masonic meeting a few days since, and also of preaching twice at Sugar Grove on Sunday last (March 16, 1879).

My physical, theological, and polemical health is in an excellent state of preservation, and the Lord may yet use me as an instrument to jostle up the lodge in various places by showing up the immoral and injurious character of the foul fraternities. The truth tells. Masons manifest wrath and slavish respect for their unhallowed extra-judicial oaths, yet the light is breaking and the darkness has begun to flee away. There are some—a few—of the followers of the meek and lowly Saviour who "in secret said nothing," who have boldly resolved to no longer support a hood-winked and cable-towed ministry, and from them I will receive a small sum (as they are not persons of much means), to preach the truth and do that which God will have me perform.

The financial prospect before me is very dark just now; but a light, I firmly believe, is soon to scatter the surrounding shades. We shall see. Trust in Christ, the only great light, and the exercise of true moral courage, will carry on our reform to a point of success. Our help and our hope is not in man but in God. Freemasonry shall be rooted up, torn out of the very soil, and destroyed.

Its standard works, on nearly every page, incur the guilt of blasphemy; and the systematic falsehoods which are retailed in the lodge to the dupes from whom it gets money by false pretences, are becoming so generally known that Christian men are not very favorable to the corrupt craft. As a school of depravity and infidelity, the lodge has no superior, if indeed any equal. The disgusting ceremonies of initiation, passing, raising, etc., have become public property, and the boasted secrecy of the order has been broken in upon by so many honest and honorable men that the Freemason's cry of "Perjury!" now does full as much execution at the breach as at the muzzle. The man who will take and keep an unscriptural and immoral oath, has committed moral perjury. He can only wipe the stain away by repentance and abandonment. The conscience which has been illuminated by light from on high will not be stilled with sophistry and threats of vengeance by lodge-lovers.

The pleas which are urged in defending the secretism of the various orders, will bear no examination. While the claim to vast antiquity continues to be made, it is now mostly made by the deplorably ignorant or by the grossly dishonest. The disproof of this claim, though easy, is superfluous, since intelligent Freemasons do very generally concede, when questioned, that the claim of their order to an existence prior to the eighteenth century of the Christian era, is utterly unproved and unprovable. Hence, upon their own testimony, they are guilty of teaching a tissue of lies in all their lodges, every time they refer to Solomon or any other Bible personage as having had aught to do with their ignoble institution. With a singular incongruity, they insist on having the superstructure outlast its foundation. Though the very title by which they claim the right to exist, i. e., the antiquity of their order, has been admitted to be false and invalid, they still would save the property (or secretism) at the expense of conscience itself.

D. B. TURNEY.

THE ZANESVILLE COURIER'S ESTIMATE OF FREEMASONS.

NEW CONCORD, Ohio.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I like to read in your pages "Reform News," so would like to give a little when we have it. Bro. Stoddard spoke three times in Zanesville, March 11th, to rather small, but respectable audiences. Some of the craft were there. Here is what the Zanesville Courier says:

"Rev. J. P. Stoddard addressed two very small audiences in Music Hall Tuesday afternoon and evening —on secretism. The reverend gentleman is a pleasant, rapid speaker, but in the discussion of the subject he presents ridicule for argument, and indulges in wholesale vituperation against a class of citizens that, at least, deserve to be ranked among the best in community."

No man can expose Masonry and all secret orders without ridicule, for the whole thing is so ridiculous, he

Birminghan, Iowa, March 18, 1879.

Dear Cynosure:—When Elder Rathbun was here he requested me to write to Dr. Coates, the Worshipful Master of the lodge at Clarence, Iowa, in regard to his character. I did so and received in reply a letter from Geo. E. Smith, J. W. of Euclid Lodge, No. 177, Clarence, Iowa, who gave Elder Rathbun a very fair character and referred me to Rev. O. E. Aldrich of Wyoming, Jones county, Iowa, for a completer history of Rathbun's character. I wrote him the following letter:

O. E. Aldrich, Wyoming—Dear Sir:—A fellow claiming to be Rev. D. P. Rathbun was here lecturing against Masonry and worked the first and third degrees last week. I wrote to the Master of the lodge at Clarence, Dr. Coates, to find out his real character and was referred to you. Any information you may be pleased to give us about him will be thankfully received. He is well versed both in the esoteric and exoteric work, and is calculated to do the order a great deal of harm. How can such a fellow be managed?

Fraternally yours,
W. Pitt Norris.

P. S. A speedy answer is requested.

In due time the following reply was received, in which Rev. O. E. Aldrich gives himself and Masonry completely away:

Wyoming, Iowa, Mar. 7, 1879.

W. Pitt Norris - Dear. Bro:—Yours in regard to P. D. Rathbone is received. He is employed by the Cynosure association and the Wesleyan Methodist to expose Masonry. I have met him twice and pronounce him a black-hearted villain. I regard him a book Mason; if he was ever a regular Mason he has perjured himself; if he never was made a Mason in "due form" he is the prince of liars for claiming this. The secretary of Clarence □ has a certificate from St. John's □ 24, Wis., stating that he was never made a Mason there or ever belonged to any □ in Wis. I would make no admission as to his work being correct; it is not. It is book Masonry learned from Morgan, Bernard, Finney and others. Money is what he is working for. With such a record as Masonry has he can't do much harm. Washington, LaFayette, Jackson—all the generals of the Revolution except Arnold—were Masons. He ought not to complain if he receives the penalty attending the violation of his obligation. His exposures gave Clarence and Keystone □ new members. Christians do not go to Julian the apostate, to prove what Christianity is! Masonry numbers its membership by millions, its property by billions; embracing the purest, the most intelligent men in the civilized world, and its foundations will be moved by Rathbone. Fraternally,

O. E. Aldrich.

There's his reply verbatim et literatim! You will notice by his own admissions that it is not possible for a Mason made in "due form" to know the difference between a "regularly made Mason" and a book Mason, thus virtually admitting the correctness of Morgan, Bernard, Finney and others, as to the esoteric work. He says he regards "him a book Mason," and then goes on to say, "he ought not to complain if he receives the penalty attending the violation of his obligation. Now if he is a book Mason what obligation has he taken or violated? I suppose he means he ought not to complain if he has his "throat cut across, his tongue torn out by the roots, his left breast torn open and his heart and vitals taken from thence, his body severed in twain, his bowels taken out and burned to ashes," etc. These are some of the penalties that "pure and intelligent men" would love to see visited upon a fellow-man because he chooses

> "To loose his neck from this ignoble chain,
> And dares to say, I'm free."

Masons, you know, always use the "good man" argument, the "all the brains" argument, the Gen. Washington argument, etc., ad nauseum. Now what are we to think of this "Superintendent of public schools of Jones county, Iowa," this reverend gentleman, this Christian (?) minister, who advises me to make no admission, (i e. to lie like any Mason) as to the correctness of Elder Rathbun's work here, and at the same time gives a broad hint in regard to what should be done with him for violating his Masonic obligations. O no; Masons never killed Morgan! Masons are too pure (?) to think of such a thing! Away with such tergiversation and bald hypocricy! W. Pitt Norris.

Where Shall the Dead Nations be Gathered?

East Westmoreland, N. H., March 18, 1879.

Editor Cynosure:—In your issue of March 6th there is an excellent article on the first resurrection, by Rev. Ezra Jones, on which you make some editorial comments, near the close of which occur these words: "Yet this and all other discussions are poor and beggarly accounts of what the millennial world will be when we get to it, or what Christ will do with this planet which would not afford standing room for our race if they were all here to-day."

That idea is not new. It has been often so stated. It is really believed by most people and has been urged as an insuperable objection to the literal resurrection of the dead. Some have said there would be enough to cover the earth several times.

A little arithmetical calculation will very readily show its incorrectness. It would seem startling indeed to say that the New England States or the single State of Missouri would be sufficient to hold the entire population of the globe from Adam to the present time; and yet it is true. One town six miles square is sufficient to hold the population of these United States, or near 42,000,000, and give every person four square feet.

Missouri has 65,350 square miles. Now for a basis of calculation (though too large) we will allow 1,200,000,000 from Adam, say for six thousand years and that a generation has passed off every thirty years which would make 200 generations. Now the twelve hundred millions multiplied by the two hundred generations will give the whole population for 6,000 years, and by reducing the area of Missouri or the New England States, which would be a trifle more, to square feet and the correctness of the result will be readily seen, which will be surprising to any one who has not given it any thought.

I am a reader of your most excellent paper, the Cynosure, and am in hearty sympathy with its bold and faithful exposure of the abominations and blasphemies and solemn mockeries of that mystery of iniquity. I remember the Morgan excitement. My plainness of speech in those days caused much offense to the Masons, just as my preaching since then, for twenty years, has aroused the wrath of many because I persistently and fearlessly denounced, in no measured words, that "sum of all villianies." I used to tell my people in those days "that tried men's souls," that padlocks would be at a discount, while that "peculiar institution" continued in this land of freedom(?) where it was held to be a crime to believe and practice the sublime and godlike principles set forth in the declartion of independence and the golden rule!

I used to be told in those days by those attending my ministry, to let Masonry and slavery and intemperance and war and sectarianism and other social evils and vices alone and preach the Gospel. I was accused of making divisions. Well, the Saviour came for that very purpose to "make divisions." All true and faithful ministers of the Gospel of Christ will do the same. Not a division among the good, the disciples of Christ; but made in consequence of a portion of those in error and in sin embracing the truth which would necessarily and rightfully result in conflict and division. There will, of course, be conflict, division, between truth and error, right and wrong, light and darkness, sin and holiness, Christ and Belial. It has been said that a "holy war" was better than an "ungodly peace." "First pure then peaceable," is the divine injunction. No peace is desirable and no real peace is possible that is not based on purity and righteousness.

The Word of God and over forty years experience in the Christian ministry, have effectually taught me these important truths. My prayer is that all the ministers and all others who are laboring so arduously for the dissemination of light and truth and the utter overthrow of this anti-Christian and anti-republican "mystery of iniquity," may have a large measure of the sweet and gentle spirit of the Divine Master; speaking the truth in love, so that if they are called to suffer in the prosecution of their good work it may not be justly for their faults, but for their unswerving fidelity to their highest convictions of right and duty. And may God hasten the day of final victory.

Jehiel Claflin.

He Didn't Know it was a Mason's Daughter.

Sullivan, Ashland Co., O., March 24th, 1879.

Dear Cynosure:—I wish to inform the readers of your excellent paper of some of the events that have taken place in our midst within a few days. A young man with a family, came into our town a year ago, to work at his trade. Being a professor of religion, soon gained the good will of our townsmen, and was looked upon as a gentlemen; until a few days ago the mother of a five-year-old girl discovered that there was something wrong from some expressions of the child. She therefore watched her daughter and soon found that this young man, her next door neighbor, was the instructor of her in things which ought not be taught by any one to youths, and which were of the most abominable nature. When the mother learned this she was indignant and justly enraged at the villianous conduct of the man and threatened to burn down his shantie. She besought her husband to have him arrested; but this he refused to do, as the above man was a fellow Mason. So she informed some of her neighbors what had been done and they took the fellow, placed him on a rail, rode him out of town and dumped him into a mud hole. During his ride he gave the hailing sign of distress; but no one came to help him. They then gave him time to leave town until next day, and told him in case of refusal or delay he would fare worse. So he made off next day.

Yours truly,
J. B. Cressinger.

"It is hard work combatting secretism here, but thank God, the light is spreading."

J. W. Law, Solsberry, Ind., writes:

"Lodgism has got quite a hold here, and is seeking to decoy and destroy the young men of this community. Nine-tenths of the ministers sent us are Masons. The lodge are making a terrible effort at this point to put down everything good, but we have determined to fight it to the death."

G. Marcy, Portland, Mich., writes:

S. Rowley, Bemus Heights, N. Y., writes:

"To me it is unaccountable how a minister of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, can, while admitting the evil, refuse to expose or even to oppose."

Moses Ferrin, Ellington, N. Y., writes:

"I have scattered a good many tracts, and lend my books, and think they do good. This is from an old man, almost 81 years old. I yet remember the Morgan murder."

J. C. Bartholomew, Ely, Ia., writes:

"I was informed by an old minister of the U. B. Church that we Anti-masons have taken this matter by the wrong end. He said we should put down intemperance first then we would succeed in putting down Masonry. He said a preacher told him that the Masons got him drunk and then swore him in. I said in auswer to him, Do away with Masonry and that would do away with intemperance.

"The Methodist minister of this place is a Freemason, also the Lutheran minister is a Mason of twenty years' standing. The prophet Hosea chapter 4:9 says 'like people like priest,' and Jeremiah says, 'My people love to have it so.' What an awful condition we as a people and a nation are in. Now may the Lord wake us all up is my prayer, before the judgments of God fall upon this nation. I honestly believe the U. B. church are losing ground every day on the subject of secretism, for which I greatly grieve."

E. I. Grinnell, Blairsburgh, Ia., writes:

"I love the principles which the Cynosure enforces, and am doing all I can to establish them. You may publish my name in the Cynosure list as a lecturer. I have done and shall do all I can in the lecture work consistent with ministerial duties."

George Reubush, Middlebrook, Va., writes:

C. B. Sherk, Charlotte, Mich., writes:

"I have just closed a meeting in this city which resulted in some twenty-seven making a profession of religion. Among them a Mason and also an Odd-fellow. The Odd-fellow has renounced his allegiance to the lodge, and I am of the opinion that the Freemason will renounce his Masonry. I showed him 'Freemasonry at a Glance,' and he acknowledged it true, and now wants Ronayne's book. He is under conviction; says he never thought much about the oaths and obligations until he was converted and I spoke to him about them. He acknowledged also that the name of Christ is prohibited from being used in the lodge in prayer. This little city has no less than seven different lodges of secret societies."

Samuel Guengerlsh, Ames, Ia., writes:

"I have been taking the Cynosure ever since I have known it (about four years). I like its principles and its fearless and unfaltering manner of expression. I think it should find its way to every family in the land. I think if it could be placed in the hands and read by every young man in the land, the works of darkness would soon have to subside. You have my prayers and I wish you, and all engaged in this noble cause, a good success in disseminating and promulgating the truth of the Gospel, and exposing the wickedness and folly of secretism in every form. Christ said, 'In secret have I said nothing.' So if there is anything good for one or several men, it may be good for all, and therefore should not be kept secret. We should do unto others as we would have them do unto us."

"I am making an effort to get subscribers."

Mrs. J. K. Pierson, Goodrich, Mich., writes:

"I am a firm believer in the doctrines of our holy religion. I believe that God in his own good time will bring this abominable idolatry and these unfruitful works of darkness to an end. You have my most heartfelt desire for the circulation of your most excellent paper, and the success of the great work so many noble men are engaged in. Go on in the name of the Lord of hosts."

Jacob Lohman, Lexington, O., writes:

"I have been reading a few copies of the Cynosure and think it just the paper for the times."

Henry Ernst, Alden, Minn., writes:

"I look upon secret societies as a detriment to moral reform. I never belonged to any and think I never shall. Secretism often disturbs the harmony of churches, and is a great detriment to the prosperity of our holy religion. Christ has set us a good example, for he said, 'In secret have I said nothing.' What cannot be done in organized bodies openly is not worth much. I will be glad to see your cause prosper until all the secret combinations shall be driven from the land."

Jno. Ball, Ulster, Ia., writes:

"I aim to distribute my Cynosures after reading them where they will do the most good. I send many through the mail. I want to help in overcoming the powers of darkness to the extent of my ability assisted by grace. I have been a reader of your paper from its start, and have received great light upon the workings of the secret orders. I deprecate the condition of church and state through their influence, but am thankful to God for the bold and efficient workers raised up to shed light upon the dark places; the increasing desire on the part of the people to hear and learn from sources where they will still be left free; the more recent expressions of necessity for doing this work in the spirit of Jesus, in love for the ensnared; these are all indications to me, and should encourage us all in the fact that God is working, and your labor in him is not in vain."

A lady, Courtland, O., writes:

"Please send me the book 'Odd-fellowship Exposed,' to aid me in my good work. I think the Odd-fellow lodge is a place of sin and darkness. They tell me to join the Rebecca lodge and then I will know all about it. No, never. That is only a blindfold used by the Odd-fellows to deceive their wives in regard to their wrong-doings, and thousands are thus deceived, but I am not. The husband attends the Rebecca lodge, but can the wife who ought to be the husband's nearest and dearest confidential friend, attend his lodge meeting? Husband and wife are said to be one, and ought to be, but the lodge separates them."

B. Williams, Warren, Ill., writes:

"I am anxious to get the Cynosure before the people, as I think it is the most important paper of the age, and is doing a needed work. I am glad to say the opposition to the lodge is increasing in these parts. We need some public lectures. It looks to me that the fields are ripe, but no one to lead the way. It would seem that common sense would teach a Christian that Baal and Christ have no concord, yet here in Warren we see the pastor give his hand to the church in covenant relation, thus becoming a member of Christ's body, accepting Christ as Master, High Priest, appointed of God. Some dark Saturday night he may be seen climbing up to the third story of a brick block on Main St., where with the profane, the drunkard, saloon-keeper, gambler, he joins hands, and enters into covenant relations with them, thus becoming a member of what is called a Masonic lodge, and helps them make a Worshipful Master, and a Grand High Priest, and does other religious work. Sunday morning he enters the pulpit, his Masonic Master and High Priest conspicuous in the congregation by his shining emblem, and then perhaps commences the service by reading Heb. 3: 'Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus; who was faithful to Him that appointed him,' etc."

LESSON XV.—April 13, 1879.—PROSPERITY RESTORED.

SCRIPTURE.—Job 42:1-10.

1 Then Job answered the Lord, and said,

2 I know that thou canst do everything, and that no thought can be withholden from thee.

3 Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge? therefore have I uttered that I understood not; things too wonderful for me, which I knew not.

4 Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak; I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

5 I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee.

6 Wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes.

7 And it was so, that after the Lord had spoken these words unto Job, the Lord said to Eliphaz the Temanite, My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends: for ye have not spoken to me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath.

8 Therefore take unto you now seven bullocks and seven rams, and go to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt offering; and my servant Job shall pray for you: for him will I accept: lest I deal with you after your folly, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, like my servant Job.

9 So Eliphaz the Temanite and Bildad the Shuhite and Zophar the Naamathite went and did according as the Lord commanded them: the Lord also accepted Job.

10 And the Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: also the Lord gave to Job twice as much as he had before.

[From the Westminster Teacher.]

When Elihu had ceased speaking, the Lord is represented as answering the complaint of Job. 38:1; 40:2 By a series of questions, he directs the mind of Job to the consideration of his knowledge, wisdom and power; in a word, his greatness, as exhibited in the works of creation and providence. At the question, "Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty instruct him?" Job was moved to venture an interruption, and made his first confession. 40:3-5. Without an apparent notice of the interruption, the Lord continued speaking, still setting forth his wisdom and power in his works. Job seems to have listened in silence until the Lord had finished. He then uttered his final confession.

NOTES.

"Can be withholden from thee."—A literal rendering would be, "no purpose or plan is inaccessible to thee." Of this, there are two interpretations. 1. No purpose or plan, conceived or attempted by men, is inaccessible to thy mind, i. e., concealed from its observation. This is in strict accordance with the usage of the verb in Hebrew. 2. No plan of thine is inaccessible to thee, i. e., out of thy reach, or impracticable. According to the first interpretation, the statement respects the knowledge of God; according to the second, the power of God. The margin has, "No thought of thine can be hindered." This seems to have the preference among the best authorities. The Lord had passed before the mind of Job some of the most wonderful of his works. Job exhibits the impression made on his mind, "I perceive that thou art able to devise and execute whatever thou mayest will."

"That I understood not."—Heb. "and did not understand," i. e., that which I undertook to explain. The meaning is expanded in the next sentence. Job had contemplated the wisdom of God in the works of creation. He drew the rational and necessary inference that God must be just as wise in his works of providence, whether in any special cases he could perceive it or not. He accordingly confesses that in questioning the divine procedures, and trying to give a sufficient explanation of them, he has gone beyond his ability and province, he has been judging of that of which he knew nothing.

"Repent."—Heb. "grieve." The two elements of true repentance are manifest. Job is convinced of his sin, and because constrained to condemn it, grieves over it; and rejecting and sorrowing over it, of course purposes to abandon it. He does not, by this, intend to take back what he had asserted to his friends, concerning his integrity. In the sense in which they had charged him with unrighteousness, he denied the charge and claimed to be righteous. He was in no sense a more wicked man than those who had not suffered as he had suffered. But, absolutely, before God, he did not claim to be righteous, but confessed that he was a sinner, self-condemned, but repentant.

"The thing that is right."—Heb simply the "correct," or "fit," i. e., appropriate thing. The position of Eliphaz and his friends was this: God is just. He exercises his justice by favoring the righteous with prosperity, and visiting the unrighteous with adversity. Hence, Job had been unrighteous to a degree measured by the extent of his adversity. This, Job denied. The Lord sustains the denial.

"My servant Job hath."—Job maintained that God was just. But he asserted that his ways could not be explained by reference to exact, impartial and completed justice. They were, accordingly, at present inexplicable to man. This, the Lord confirms as correct.

"Shall pray for you."—The Lord, by these words, authorized Job to act the part of a priest in behalf of his friends. In early times the patriarch was the priest of his household, and sometimes exercised the function for those not of his household. Melchizedek was in some way recognized as "a priest of the most high God." The Lord, who knows the heart, anticipates the willingness of Job to intercede for his friends, notwithstanding the fact that they had aggravated his affliction by manifesting distrust of his integrity and charging him with aggravated sins.

"Folly."—The Hebrew word has often a stronger meaning, but the milder sense is probably the most suitable. The friends of Job were guilty of presumption, rather than of impiety of a more culpable sort. Indeed, there may have been a pious element in the intention to justify the ways of God. But they attempted the justification by appealing to erroneous considerations, and were led to administer an unjust and uncharitable rebuke to a truly pious and relatively righteous man. It was a fine vindication of Job on the part of God when he sent these men to ask him to intercede for their offence.

"The Lord gave Job, etc."—The purposes of the trial having been accomplished it was no longer necessary that it should be protracted. We are to be careful not to consider the renewed prosperity of Job to be the reward of his righteousness. If we do, we go over to the very ground occupied by his friends, and for the assumption of which they were rebuked. God, first of all, intends to make his children holy. He will send prosperity or adversity, as either may tend most to the accomplishment of that end. When that end is assured, he will grant them so much of this world's good as may be demanded by the stewardship he has allotted to each. They are to use what he gives for his glory, not for self-indulgence.

THE WEALTH OF JOB.

"This man was the greatest of all the men of the East."—Job 1:3.

At this distance of time supposed to be 3,000 years since he existed, it is difficult to estimate Job's wealth; but as some items are given it may be attempted although the relative value of money at the extremes of 3,000 years leaves us at a loss to calculate the precise amount.

1. The extent of the land he owned may be found from the support his stock needed; 7,000 sheep would require a range of as many acres; 3,000 camels would need five acres each, 1,000 yoke of oxen an equal range of five acres with the camels; 500 asses about two acres each; and his household, which was very great, 2,000; in all 30,000 acres. The value of this amount at five dollars per acre, $150,000.

2. The cost of Job's cattle—7,000 sheep at $2 each; 3,000 camels at probably $50; 1,000 oxen at $10 each, and 500 asses at the same price. This would equal about $175,000.

3. To tend such vast herds, according to the custom of the East, the number of laborers must have been large. Abraham, contemporary with Job, could muster in his own family retinue 318 trained men at arms. As many more must have remained at home to attend to his flocks, etc., when the patriarch went in pursuit of the invaders of Lot's territory. Job may have had 300; their pay and support $20,000.

4. The necessary houses for living and shelter, and the folds could not be less than $25,000.

The whole value of the above would be about $370,000.

All this wealth seems incredible, were it not declared so by the voice of inspiration. At the close of the book we are told that even this amount was duplicated, or $740,000.

When we compare this with the relative present value of money and that of Job's day his wealth was enormous.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 1879.

MEETING OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS.—This meeting noticed in the present number was held at the Carpenter building on Wednesday last, March 26th. Mr. Carpenter was in the chair and the Board well represented and harmonious in all its votes.

We call special attention to one resolution, that inviting all the State associations to be present in the annual meeting of the corporate body on the third Wednesday in June next by at least one representative. At that meeting the treasurer's report will present a manifest or exhibit of all the property of the National Association, productive and unproductive; its income and what has been done with it.

It was not to be expected that a work of such magnitude against the secret anti-Christian or lodge worships of this world could be achieved without difficulties, misanderstandings and trials. From creation to the present hour, the cause of Christ and truth has been beset with such. Considering that our reform is set against all the opposition worships of the earth's false religions, and all pagan or human corruptions of the true; and considering, moreover, the great power and rapid strides of the reform, and the almost endless diversity of religious views among its friends resulting from their earnestness, sincerity and fearless devotion to truth as they understand it, the reform itself is a moral miracle and its unity thus far an eminent token of God's favor. But these are only so many reasons why every precaution should be taken to "keep peace in and prejudice out," which can only be done by the most perfect openness and thorough mutual understanding in the management of all its temporal affairs.

We hope therefore, that each State Association will take pains to represent itself in our annual corporate meeting next June, by some gentleman in whose good judgment, good sense and integrity they can confide.

THE BISHOP WEAVER MATTER.

We notice the editor-in-chief of the Telescope has returned to his post, and suppose we are indebted to him for some severe strictures on the editor of the Cynosure for its censure of Bishop Weaver's letter to the Itinerant endorsing that paper; which paper the secession convention proposed to remove to Dayton, and issue as an opposition to the Telescope, which leading speakers in that convention bitterly condemned. Of course the nullifiers did not propose to publish the Itinerant in Dayton, under the eaves of the U. B. Printing House, and by the side of the Telescope, in any other character than that of an opposition paper—opposition both to the church and its organ. Does Bro. Hott love the Itinerant better than the Telescope, which it was avowedly intended to oppose, if not supercede? Does he love his enemies better than himself?

Bishop Weaver wrote "that weak letter" (he is capable of writing a strong one) cheering and encouraging the Itinerant and we rebuked him for it. Did we err or sin in so doing? If so, we hope Bro. Hott will point out our transgression and we will repent. Does not the Telescope editor know that the Masons of Elder Rigor's (Lancaster) district love the Itinerant and regard it as the friend and ally of the lodge? If so, did not Bishop Weaver err (as the Apostle Peter did) in aiding and abetting the Itinerant. It is now many years since the General Conference (I think at Lebanon, Pa.,) chose Bishop Wright (then a young U. B. minister,) editor of the Telescope, after a fearful struggle on this very lodge issue. The sainted Bishop Edwards, whose soul was moved to its clear depths, notified us daily of the progress of that great agony and triumph. Does brother Hott think the Brethren church has changed since then? and that he has been elected on other grounds than Bishop Wright was chosen? I trust not. The colors of Christ against anti-Christ are not at half mast in the church of Otterbein and Boehm.

Returning after a short absence, I find letters from United Brethren preachers of Pennsylvania, one for publication, thanking the Cynosure for its vindication of their church against the non-committalism of the Itinerant and the wavering of their respected Bishop Weaver. One of these ministers has served Christ in the Brethren church more than forty years. We shall answer these brethren, and "follow after the things which make for peace, and things whereby one may edify another."

"MEN SHALL REVILE YOU."

The evangelist, Rev. G. F. Pentecost, not long since, as noticed in the Cynosure, gave an explicit testimony against the lodge and spoke of himself as in moral darkness when he entered it "hoodwinked" and partially denuded. The daily press of Chicago suppressed this testimony in their report of his discourse and said nothing of it at the time, but after a few days the Inter-Ocean opens on him with great bitterness and flouting. The points on which it assaults him are two: That he coarsely insulted the ladies of his audience by speaking of them as "ladies of leisure," whereas the Inter-Ocean thinks they were burdened with domestic cares; and that he suggested that the 1500 benevolent ladies who have given much time to preparing for an "Authors' Carnival" in Chicago, might have done more for God and humanity in some other way. The facts were that Mr. Pentecost complimented instead of reproached the women of his audience by suggesting to them that God had blessed them with means and leisure to do more Christian labor than they were doing; and he made no attack on the Authors' Carnival as such, but thought the 1500 women engaged in preparing for it might better have paid $5.00 apiece for charity directly than to devote a considerable share of the winter to the carnival instead of the cause of religion.

These, so far as we noticed, were the only counts in the Inter-ocean's indictment of this minister of Christ, and we run no risk in saying that they are not the real ones. They furnish no satisfactory explanation of the rancor and bitterness of its attack; but his opposing the lodge does. Ex-Senator Pomeroy shared the same treatment after he spoke against Masonry in Farwell Hall. The Leavenworth Herald notified his Kansas constituents of his speech, and predicted that he would not return to the Senate. From that time the batteries of the lodge were masked and silent, till the time for his re-election in Kansas furnished them an opportunity to open on him. Not a word more was said of his Farwell Hall speech against the lodge, but Masons who testified that they had importuned him for loans of money, and promised him their support, made his compliance with their request the ground of their attack, and swore that they swindled him of his money and then betrayed him in order to convict him of "bribery in elections!"

We have an insitution spread over the world which considers this virtue. The lodge lies hid. It seldom assails men for opposing itself, but copies the methods of Satan, its "god," who keeps himself out of discussion, and relies on general reviling to destroy good men who disturb his dark realm! What a fearful institution in this!

N. C. A. DIRECTORS' MEETING.

The Directors of the National Association met in the Carpenter building on Wednesday last. There were present Messrs. Carpenter, Wait, Cook, Hildreth, Hagerty, Kellogg, Hodge, Blanchard and Thompson; also the Secretary of the Board, J. P. Stoddard, and Mrs. E. A. Cook. After prayer by Mr. Hodge and approval of minutes, a report of the National Convention at Worcester was presented and approved. The financial part is as follows:

Rent of Mechanics' Hall	$175 00
Services and expenses of E. Ronayne	75.00
Expenses Dr. A. M. Milligan	25.00
" Prof. C. A Blanchard	47.00
Printing, postage, distributing bills, etc.	67.68
Total	$389.68
Collected for payment of expenses	345.00
	$44.68

The committee on building reported no change or improvements made at the expense of the Association since June last. Some back rent is yet unpaid. Part of the second floor has been rented for a term of two years at $12.50 per month, all improvements to be left in the building. The total expenses for coal, taxes, insurance for three years, gas, etc., since June is $110.88; receipts for rents during same time, $777.13. The hall has been rented during the winter for occasional meetings; from this source $30.62 were received.

Committee on loans reported two applications examined but not taken.

The treasurer reported $1,625 of the publishing fund invested; $308.25 of the debt cancelled, and on hand in Pub. House account $463 25, in general account $102.25.

The committee on Exposition work reported $12 25 from donations and $79 63 from book sales. Paid for permit, tickets, agents to attend stand, drayage, etc., 46.84; for books and tracts, $44.04. E. A. Cook & Co. accepted the sum in the hands of the committee in full payment for books and tracts, although it was a little short.

The tract committee repoated an agreement on the subject matter of four tracts, but none yet prepared. The proposition embraced the following:

1. A 2-page tract containing: (1.) Brief quotations from representative men and representative bodies, as legislatures and ecclesiastical assemblies, from 1800 to 1868; and (2.) A brief sketch of the rise of the N. C. A. to carry out the principles enunciated in part 1st, with information respecting its aims, work and necessities, with invitation to assist.
2. Extracts from resolutions and addresses of Worcester convention, sustained by testimonies of prominent men in church and state. (4 pages.)
3. A Finney tract, containing extracts from Pres. Finney's book and his letter to Woodruff Post in 1870. (2 pages.)
4. Ronayne's affidavit with note bringing the case down to date, and adding the testimony of twenty-five seceding Masons. (4 pages.)

Voted to authorized the printing of tracts and that the plates be paid for from the permanent fund.

The committee on supplying Masonic books for the reading room reported that the want was partly filled, and recommended but two books in addition.

The joint-donation of Mr. N. W. Myers of Vineland, N. J., was taken up and the thanks of the Board voted to Bro. Myers for the gift. The following was also voted:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this Board that the recent donation of Rev. N. W. Myers be applied towards canceling accrued indebtedness of the N. C. A., and that the treasurer with the committee on loans be authorized to so apply the above sum.

This donation is a secured note for $2,300, to be equally divided between the N. C. A. and Wheaton College.

The appointment of representatives from different States to attend the annual business meeting was heartily approved and the following adopted:

Resolved, That we learn with pleasure that the State Christian Asciations of Michigan, Iowa and Ohio have appointed gentlemen to represent them in the next annual business meeting of the National Christian Association, on the third Wednesday of June next; and we hope and request that other State Associations will appoint similar representatives to meet the National Christian Association on that occasion.

After prayer by President Blanchard the Board adjourned.

THE EXPOSITION OF GOOD TEMPLARISM in pamphlet form, entitled "Good Templarism Illustrated," which was printed in the columns of the Cynosure is now ready and is furnished at the popular rates advertised on page 13, single copy, postpaid, 25 cents; by the hundred $10.00. Express charges extra.

—The Chicago Christian Association holds its regular monthly meeting next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in Carpenter Hall, 221 W. Madison street. Friends of the reform temporarily in the city are cordially invited.

—Secretary Stoddard returned from Iowa in time to attend the Directors' meeting on Wednesday last. He expects to remain here until the Nebraska meeting, speaking in the vicinity as there may be opportunity.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman returned to his home in Wheaton last Saturday. As announced in the notice on the first page, he expects to return for a three months campaign in Northern New England. He has been laboring almost incessantly in Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island since the early part of November last, and was much in need of rest. Otherwise he is in good health and is very hopeful respecting the reform in New England. Bad roads and unsettled weather would very much interfere with the success of the lecture work during the present month. Both will mend while the lecturer rests at home and recruits his energies for vigorous work from May until August. The friends at Wheaton were glad to welcome him home again.

—A correspondent asks if the display of a five-pointed star on a business sign has any Masonic significance. The star is so often used as a symbol without any connection with the lodge that the question is not easy to answer. If Masons wish to advertise themselves as such, a Greek cross (Knight Templar's sign) or a square and compass are generally used, because their significance is generally known. If there is nothing about a man's business which would render the use of a star appropriate as a symbol and he himself is a Mason, the inference would be strong that it is a Masonic advertisement.

—Some samples of Masonic advertising which are worth mentioning are found in the Illinois Masonic Register for 1875. The Commercial Hotel of this city is put down as "Masonic headquarters." In the same pamphlet are four advertisements of a page each of the wholesale drug house of E. Burnham, Son & Co., in each one of which is a direct bid for trade on account of the Masonic relations of a member of the firm who is advertised as member of Lafayette chapter, Apollo commandery and Oriental consistory of Sovereign Princes of the Royal Secret, 32 deg. It will be no inducement for any foolish Mason to follow their example to know that the hotel is in serious difficulty on account of debts, and the drug firm broke down within a year from the publication of that advertisement, and the aforesaid Knight Templar and Sovereign Prince was arrested for heavy forgeries to which he plead guilty, but by some means was never prosecuted. His Masonry saved him from the penitentiary if it did not help his trade.

—The "Independent Order of Knights of the Wrench" have an "asylum" in Boston, have "banquets," dub each other "Sir Knight" and have numerous "grand" officers. What a fine thing to be "Sir Knight" anyway, even if you only grease cart wheels, turn grindstone, or curry horses in a livery stable.

—Next month, May 5th and 6th, the Psi Upsilon secret college fraternity meets at Yale. B. K. Phelps is to be the speaker; Dr. J. G. Holland (Timothy Titcomb) is poet; Gov. Andrews of Connecticut will preside; and Rev. Henry M. Dexter, D.D, editor of the Congregationalist, Boston, will attempt to introduce the solemnity of prayer.

—The Christian, of Boston, which has a well-earned reputation as the best paper of its class in the country, takes a stand against secretism in the last number beside Moody and Pentecost, its editor, Bro. H. L. Hastings, being also an able evangelist. This is, so far as we know, the first article making direct issue with the system of secret orders ever published in the Christian, although doubtless Freemasons who have read it thought it altogether opposed to their order, which it certainly was in spirit. Bro. Hastings has also taken hold of the anti-tobacco work, left by the late Rev. George Trask, with commendable energy.

AN OPEN LETTER.

To the Readers of the Christian Cynosure, Friends of Moral Reform and of Christian Education:

Dear brethren and sisters, workers in a common cause, prompted to our work, I trust, by love for truth, for purity, for Christ, shall our work fail of a permanent result? We are painfully conscious of the fact that we are fighting battles that were gained once by our fathers. A sense of over security, resulting from the complete victory of Anti-masonry in Morgan times caused them to neglect the protection of their children from the insiduous influences of secretism. Shall we commit the same mistake? neglect to make sure the work of our hands? Shall a part of our legacy to our children be these same moral battles to be fought? Shall we, in chosing the institution where our children are to be educated, leave the secret society question out of the account?

Let me assure you that there are institutions, both colleges and preparatory schools, that are safe,—institutions where the reformatory, moral and religious influences are good, where the moral atmosphere is as pure as can reasonably be expected in a sin-cursed world. Let me also assure you that these influences cannot affect your children (strange?) unless you send them where the influences are. Let me further assure you that these institutions cannot live unless you patronize them. Christ says, "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." So the adherents of the lodge, as a rule, show their hatred of such institutions by circulating slanderous reports, tampering with their students, and hindering their work in every way possible.

Well, my dear brother or sister, if what I have said has aroused or intensified your interest in Christian education and the life and prosperity of reformatory institutions, let me refer you to the advertisement in another column of this paper, of the Wesleyan Methodist Seminary of Minnesota, located at Wasioja, Dodge county, and if you wish more information write to me for a catalogue.

Some one may say, "Minnesota is too far away." Let me offer two considerations:

1. In these days of quick travel, if one is going from home at all, the distance makes but little difference.

2. You may save more than the railroad fare in the lessened expenses here. Have you an institution of this character near you? Patronize it then by all means.

You have no children? Then at least you are one of the Lord's stewards and may have money in your hands that he wishes invested in this institution. Will you please ask him about it, and as a faithful steward do as he tells you?

In the love of Christ, for the cause of Christian education, cannot tell the truth about them without it. This is all Bro. Stoddard did. Where the "wholesale vituperation" came in, I was unable to discover; but I could see that the whole exposure was a bitter pill to the cable-towed and hood-winked that were there. I never heard so calm and clear an expose of these evils as Bro. S. gave us in these lectures; great good must be the result, with the blessing of the Lord.

Your brother.

E. G. PAINE.

Bro. S. also spoke three times on the 12th in Cambridge the county seat of Guernsey county. I was too unwell to accompany him that day, but I hear from a number who were there, that he had a full house, good order and close attention, and a goodly number of the orders with their wives, from the "reverends" down to the saloonists!

The prayers of many Christian households are ascending to God to destroy these systems of darkness and degradation by the breath of his mouth and the brightness of his coming. May the Lord of hosts hasten it in his time.

H. P. MCCLURKIN.

FROM THE TREASURER OF THE IOWA STATE ASSOCIATION.

We have just closed our State Convention at West Branch, Iowa, with a good time and full attendance, and feel refreshed and encouraged to press on in the good work, believing that God is prospering us according to our faith and trust in him.

I want to say to every subscriber and friend of the cause in Iowa that we have determined to press the work forward, and it cannot be done without money, and I would therefore request the friends of the cause in every county in the State to organize and select the most efficient financial worker in your county, in accordance with the instructions of the convention, and forward the name and postoffice address to me, so that we can complete the list as soon as practicable and forward it to the recording secretary.

I also send a copy of a pledge or contract recommended by the convention, and request that it be circulated as soon as practicable so that we can have funds on hand at our next State meeting in September to keep one or more lecturers in the field.

If you cannot get the five dollar pledge, get the friends to give what they can as God has prospered them, for every dollar given for the advancement of Christ's kingdom will bring forth, according to promise in his Word, a hundred fold; and his promises are sure, and this is one of them if we act in faith believing.

MOSES VARNEY.

Address, Springdale, Cedar Co., Iowa.

COPY OF CONTRACT.

We, the undersigned, citizens of the State of Iowa, agree to pay the treasurer of the Christian Association opposed to secret societies, the sum of five dollars ($5) annually for five successive years, in semi-annual payments, in advance; the object being the support of a State lecturer and agent and other objects of the association. The first payment to be made September 15, 1879, and semi-annually thereafter until the term of contract ceases.

The Lord is my Shepherd.

The Lord is my Shepherd, nought else shall I need!
Once far from his fold in my loneliness pining,
To his own verdant pastures he brought me to feed,
And by the still waters I now am reclining.

Though darkness, at times, should be shrouding my sky,
And I gaze on a wilderness blighted and dreary;
The meadows seem withered, the rivulets dry,
I wander through thorny brakes, footsore and weary:

'Tis only in order my soul to restore,
And for His Name's sake in a right path to guide me:
My Shepherd would teach me to seek for no more
Save the pastures his wisdom sees meet to provide me.

Yea, though I should journey through Death's shadow'd vale,
No evil I fear, for his arms will enfold me:
With his presence vouchsafed, not a foe can assail,
His rod and his staff through the gloom will uphold me.

The Keeper of Israel a table has spread,
Prepared in the presence of foes that surround me;
With oil, rare and precious, anointing my head;
The wastes of the desert made fragrant around me.

Surely Goodness and Mercy with blessings anew,
Will follow me on to the brink of the river:
The rush of its waters conducting me through,
To dwell in the house of Jehovah forever!

Mammon in the Pew.

A learned bishop, in commenting recently upon the change that had taken place in the relations between the Christian church and the world, remarked that Mammon now rents a pew and helps run the establishment. It would be an interesting experiment if some one would take the book of the Acts of the Apostles and try, just for amusement, to imagine how the narrative would have read if it had been written as a record of the movements of the church and the church people nearly two thousand years later. Suppose, for example, that such a record should contain information like the following: Peter went to Cesarea to carry the gospel to Cornelius, but upon arriving at his destination he discovered that he had accidentally left all his sermons behind at Joppa, and as he did not know how to speak extemporaneously he was obliged to postpone the intended Sunday service until he could send and fetch his manuscripts.

Again, the church edifice at Antioch cost $375,000; two-thirds of which remained as a mortgage upon the building. The brethren strove earnestly to reduce the debt, and with this intent they held a fair at which pin cushions, ice cream, fried oysters and other refreshments were sold, and during which there was much excitement over a raffle for a cake. The gold-headed cane, that was offered to whichever clergyman obtained the greatest number of votes, was awarded to Paul, who had 381 votes, while only 270 were given to Peter, and 111 scattering. The attempt to raise the money having, however, failed, the edifice was sold by the sheriff, and was purchased by a Roman, who fitted it up for a circus.

Or, Philip, having for many years performed pastoral duties faithfully in a parish of Ethiopia, a number of members of the congregation grew tired of him, and they cut down his salary to get rid of him. When he resigned a younger man was called, and as nobody extended a call to Philip, he was admitted to the Home for Decayed Clergymen, where he ended his days.

Or, Paul preached at Corinth with power and fervor, and at the conclusion of his sermon he asked that a hymn should be sung. It was given in an artistic manner by the choir, the solos for the soprano and alto being unusually brilliant, while Paul was especially pleased with the left-hand playing of the organist.

Or again, when Paul visited Ephesus, he was entertained by Alexander the Coppersmith, who, although not a believer, held a pew in the middle aisle of the church, belonged to the vestry, and contributed so liberally to church objects that he was more highly regarded than any of the converts whose circumstances were not so good. Paul, while in the pulpit, preached with force against sin; but of course, carefully avoided saying anything that might hurt Alexander's feelings. And so forth.

A narrative which should treat such a subject in such a manner might be open to a charge of undue levity; but such an accusation could not fairly be made by those persons who approve of the things upon which the treasury is based. The Christian church to-day sanctions, to a greater or less extent, these very things; and it is not any more shocking to imagine St. Paul approving an effort to reduce a church debt by the help of a raffle, than it is to regard the fact that such methods are actually employed, supposing these methods to be lawful. The church of to-day is a power for good and it contains tens of thousands of good people. It is doing noble work and doing it earnestly; but Mammon does sit in the pews and help to pay the expenses; and there are few ministers who have courage enough to stand up in the pulpit and tell the rich sinner in the pew the honest truth about his conduct.

The modern preacher is in a sense in the position of a sportsman who could fire straight at his prey while the prey was far apart from him, but who was deeply perplexed what to do when a bird which he wanted to shoot came and perched on the barrel of his gun.—Selected.

Possessed of Devils.

In a little village away up in the province of Udine, on the borders of Italia Irredenta, there is a great alarm and commotion; for the young girls of the place, one after another, are showing outward and visible signs of being possessed by a devil. According to all accounts there are now about thirty young women in this unhappy condition. Why the evil one should have selected so obscure a village for his operations does not seem quite clear. Indeed, the blame is not laid on him but on the priests. Inquiries made by the authorities have elicited the fact that in Lent last year a series of discourses were delivered by a priest, in which he described at great length and with much detail the pains of hell; thereby terrifying weak young women that they were already lost and that the devil had entered into them. The priests, who at first were rather pleased with the impression their brother made, have since found that though they had raised the spirit they had no power to lay it again. Holy water produced no effect, the most searching exorcisms fail, and even such practical measures as beating the person affected, have been found useless.

While the fit of madness is on, the "possessed" crow like cocks, or mew like cats, or bark and howl like dogs and wolves. What is worse they shock their neighbors by blasphemous and obscene language, being especially violent against the priests, cursing them for their inability to relieve their suffering by casting out the devil The prefect of the province has sent a commission to Verzegnis, the name of the village, to see what can be done to stop the progress of this madness; for, by force of example and terror it threatens to spread. The people of the district cannot be persuaded but that the devil is really at large among them.

A curious incident of the same kind was related to me a few months ago by a friend who had heard it from the lips of one of the doctors at the lunatic asylum at Siena. At Siena there is a very large asylum in proportion to the number of inhabitants, but it is nearly always full. Among the patients is a man who was formerly servant to a priest in a town, and had been remarkable for his piety and devotion. A year or two ago he began to show signs of religious mania, and his master in hope of curing him, sent him to a country house for change of air and scene. The man appeared to get better, and after some months returned to the town, but the mania soon began to show itself again. He had an idea that he was a bishop and used to preach in the streets; so it was resolved to place him in the asylum. Two attendants were sent with a carriage to remove him; and to get him away quietly, he was told that he was to officiate at a religious function. As he was driving through the streets he blessed the people, and, on nearing the asylum, he expressed a wish to go in and bless "the poor mad people," and so was taken in. It was easy to persuade him that the patients were his flock, and he used to preach to them, and assist the keepers in many little ways; and so, being gentle and harmless, he became a great favorite. Among his flock was a very violent lunatic, who constantly used language so blasphemous and disgusting that it shocked the keepers, and even the other patients; and to this man he specially devoted his attention, trying to reason with him and bring him to a calmer state, but always in vain.

One day, without any warning, he fell on the blasphemer and strangled him; telling the keeper that the man was possessed with the devil, and he had long tried to cast him out, but in vain, and so, as the possessed creature was too wicked to live, he had killed him. But now it seemed as if the spirit of the dead man had entered into his murderer. Religion was forgotten, and its place was taken by all the vicious passions of his victim. The most blasphemous language continually issued from his lips that hitherto had been pure of evil speaking; his gentle nature gave place to the violence which had characterized the man he had killed; and from being the most tractable of patients, he has now become one of the most dangerous, and the one of whom the keepers are most in fear. They all firmly believe that the evil spirit cast out of the murdered man actually did enter into the body of the murderer. —Pall Mall Gazette.

Do Children Read too Much?

With the great development of interest in literature, the marvellous increase of books and periodicals, the improvements in the art of printing and illustration, and all the other influences that have so greatly extended the circle of readers and swollen the total of reading, one result is reached beyond the limits of what is to be desired. This is that a good many children have come to read too much. The boys, now, have access to libraries—and there are very few, except in sparsely settled country localities, who are not within reach of one—run through "story books" and tales of adventure at most reckless and unprofitable speed. In a report of the Harvard Library Association of recent date, it is mentioned that in six months one boy had taken out, and presumably read, 102 story books, while, in the same time, a girl took out 112 novels. This was at the rate of four a week, which, with school studies, must be considered very rapid, and, doubtless, very injurious work. A large part of the "series" books for young folks are of the class that encourages this rapid perusal, and, from personal observation of the way in which they are read in our circulating libraries, we are quite convinced that most of the boys who run through them derive no advantage whatever from the excursion. So long as he selects books of value, the person who reads too little will be much better off at the end of the year, than the one who reads too much, and in the case of children, the volumes supplied them ought to be something more than mere narratives of travel and adventure, easily and quickly skimmed over, and incapable of leaving any valuable impression. As we have said above, we repeat it with emphasis, the present tendency with children is to read too much, and the literature supplied them is, to a large degree, utterly worthless. — Philadelphia Times.

The Little Brown Seed.

"I'm of no use," said a little brown seed;
"Where shall I go and hide?
I'm little and brown, with nobody's love,
And ugly beside."

So she rolled, and she rolled very quickly away,
And tumbled on the ground;
And the rain came in torrents, and fell upon her
And all things around.

And she felt herself sinking in darkness beneath,
Poor little faithless seed!
Where never an eye could see her sad fate,
Oh! she was hidden indeed!

The little brown seed lay still in the earth,
To herself still sighing—
Till at last with an effort she roused up, and cried,
"I'll begin by trying."

"I'll try and stop fretting, for 'tis of no use,
And if I've nobody's love,
I'll look up in hope, for there is One who will see,
The dear God above."

Oh, would you believe it! straightway the dark ground
Began to tremble and shake,
And make way for the little seed, hopeful now,
Her upward way to take!

Up, up she went, till at last she saw,
The lovely, bright blue sky;
Oh! the beautiful spirit had found release,
And the summer time was nigh.

And brightness and beauty that grew upon her,
I cannot begin to speak:
Crowned with flowers she stood, beloved by all,
So lovely,—yet so meek.

The Fisherman's Daughters.

CHAPTER V.

Two years had passed over the old house without bringing any great change either to persons or things, excepting that Sam, and Tom, were now big, strong men.

Harry's one constant thought was still Elsie's happiness and Elsie's recovery. He was sure, he said, if she could but have the care of some clever doctor she would, with God's blessing, get well, and this idea went on growing in his heart, stronger and stronger, till he seemed to quite pine over it. He was always talking to father too about it, and worked him into being as miserable as himself. Mother was angry at that, and forbade him saying any more on the matter. "What was the use," said she, "of worrying, fretting, and longing for that which was utterly beyond their power to obtain as the moon to the child that cried for it? It was wrong, it was flat rebellion against the will of their heavenly Father, who, if he sent an affliction upon poor folks, who trusted in him, of a kind they could not by any possibility get themselves out of, they might be sure and certain that he had some great and good reason of his own for doing so, and which, if they could not see and know now, they would hereafter." Father sighed and said she was quite right, and from that day he would not say any more about it.

As for poor Elsie, she was not better, nor was she, to say, any worse; she was thinner, certainly, and even paler, but she was more resigned to her sorrow, and more happy than she was two years before.

One evening, having been in the house all day attending to Elsie and helping mother, who had hurt her foot so much she could only move about very slowly, and that with pain, they told me to go out and run and play about in the fresh air for an hour or so. I did not like leaving them, but Elsie would have me go. Did a good angel urge her to insist upon it? But all things are arranged by God's good providence.

Out I went therefore. At first I bethought me to run round down to the beach and try to see the "Elsie," our little vessel, but remembered that father and brothers, and also the Joneses in their vessel, had gone a good distance down the coast to fish for herrings, which at this time of year came up in large shoals in that direction, and that none of the party would return till morning, the tide obliging them to remain where they were until it again served. So I determined instead to wander about the old ruined outhouses, and into the wood, to find some nice flowers for Elsie, especially snapdragons and wall-flowers, which grew in all directions over the old broken walls.

It was now the middle of September, and the evenings beginning to close in early, so I hastened on to the wood first, not liking to be there in the gloaming, and intending to return in time to gather the wall-flowers and snapdragons near the house afterwards.

The weather was very pleasant, though not bright, for the air was still, and full of sweet sounds and scents coming from the hills, wood, and the sea shore; and a gladsome time I spent gathering wood-flowers and then those which grew, as I said, amongst the walls in the grassy courts by the side and at the back of the house. Just as I was climbing up a heap of stones and rubbish to pick a fine wall-flower, what should I see but one of Sam's favorite rabbits that had escaped, I know not how, from the hutch, and was making for the wood. He had only a pair left now, and was very careful of them, for they were a rare sort, being large and tortoise-shell colored, with long silky ears. Jumping at once down from the stones, I ran and tried to stop and drive it back again to its box; but instead of that it dashed off into another court, and then down the steep steps into the dungeon I told you of before. Without waiting a minute I flew to the kitchen for a light, and the followed it as quickly as I could. The hole was so dark that I could not see a yard before me, and groped along with the lantern close to the ground, hoping to catch a sight of bunny, who from being in reality very tame I knew I could soon then manage to secure him.

It was not in the first great black hole, so I went into the next. Whatever was the reason I don't know; whether I tipped it too much on one side, or whether the oil was spent, but out went the light, and there I was left quite at the other end of the second dungeon in total darkness. I had never before been so far in without a light by myself, and I did not like it at all, and began making my way out as fast as I could. Fearing to miss the opening by crossing the second dungeon, I felt with my hand round the wall, and had nearly reached it when suddenly I heard the sound of heavy footsteps coming down into the hole. Without a feeling of doubt but that it was Sam returned home and come to look for me, I was just on the point of crying out "Here I am, Sam," when the person at that instant missed his footing and fell, utter at the same time, in a strange voice, such frightful words as stopped my steps, and gave me a shock almost as great as if I had been knocked down. Then came other voices and other feet, a great many, and they all, as they got down, spoke such dreadful words against the darkness of the place and the steepness of the stairs that a horrible feeling seized me.

Presently I heard them call each other by their names, and now they began talking in a way and on matters I could not at first understand. By the sound of their voices I knew I was near the opening, and it was curious how clear the heavy stillness of the place made every, the least, little noise—it seemed to me I heard each movement even.

But at last the meaning of their words came upon me. They had come down from London, at different times and by different trains, to escape being noticed and suspected, having agreed to meet in the big hole in Tom Millar's old house (how had they found it out, and how did men living in London know father's name?), and their motive for coming was to rob a great, grand house seven miles from here, that very night. Sir Henry and his sons, they said, were up in town and only the ladies and servants at home; and as for them, why, the butler they would soon put into a sounder sleep than he had ever enjoyed in his life before (and here they all laughed); and the others were pretty certain, at the distance they lay, not to be wakened by the noise, and if they did, well, let them look to it, that was all. (And again they laughed a low, frightful laugh.)

"Hush!" they said, in a hissing whisper, "some one will hear us."

"I wish some one might hear us and come in here now," exclaimed a savage voice, that I could scarce believe was a man's, it sounded so cruel and harsh and altogether unnatural like. Then they again laughed, oh! so fearfully I shuddered to hear them all.

At two o'clock they had fixed to break into the house, and went on to talk of how it was to be done. "Oh!" I thought, "what did they intend doing the meanwhile? stay where they were? What was I to do? and what would be mother's terror, and poor, poor Elsie's, when hour after hour passed away and I did not return? And then father and brothers, they would certainly —if, after all, they came home tonight, and it was not quite improbable that they might do so—seek for me in this hole, thinking I might have fallen asleep somewhere."

My terror and agony was now so great that but for the remembrance of Elsie's frequent advice to me, "to pray, pray ceaselessly to God under all trouble, danger, and grief," I should have cried aloud. Sinking on my knees, however, I entreated the great God to have pity on Elsie and mother, and to keep father and brothers from coming there. I forgot myself and kept saying, "Save them good God! save them!" without hardly knowing what I said. Indeed so frightened was I, I listened no longer to their words, but became only attentive to catch any sound of well-known and beloved steps.

Just then a stir amongst the robbers again made me hearken to them; and oh! with what joy did I hear one of the men say, "Well, come along and get some supper. I am as hungry as a shark, and could eat a bit of roast butter if I had it," at which they all laughed horribly again.

"Three of us had better go the Dragon, and two to the Duck and Drake," he went on; "it won't do for us all to go to the same place, for fear of drawing attention, and let us part t'other side of thill, where we can't be seen."

"Yes, that will be best," they all said, and directly began leaving the dungeon.

And now my prayer was changed to, "Oh! I thank thee, my God! Oh! my God, I thank thee!" And this I continued saying till all their steps died away in the distance; but even then, and for a long time after I did not move. They might have dropped something, I thought, and come again to seek it, or they might not be far enough not to see me come out of the court. Oh! how little dreamed they who was so near them hearing all they said; for though it was easy to find the outer dungeon, the inner one could not be entered without a light, the opening into it being so small and almost hid by a part of the wall which stuck out beyond the rest.

But now they were gone, quite gone, and the place once more in its old state of deathly stillness. Slowly I groped my way towards the steps, and there for a space, I again waited and hearked, then crept up and out into the sweet, fresh air. Oh! how sweet after the long darkness, damp closeness, and, more than all, the horror I had been in! I almost felt as if I flew, I ran so fast along the court, into the house, up the stairs and into Elsie's room. Mother was still there as I had left her, sitting by the window working. I could scarcely breathe as I panted out my awful story; and now what was to be done? how were we to save the family of Sir Henry Barton.

Mother and Elsie were so terrified at the thought of what I had escaped, and of the danger hanging over the Bartons, that they could not at first speak. At last the only thing we could as yet decide upon was for me to run to Mrs. Jones—she was our only neighbor within three miles—and beg her to walk to Barton Court and warn the family of that which threatened them. But, alas! Mrs. Jones was not in her cottage, and I could nowhere find her, and no time remained to be lost, for the evening was just over and the night coming on.

—Before the present King of Denmark came to the throne, his income was only about $10,000, and in course of the economy practiced in his family, his daughters were brought up to make their own bonnets and clearstarch their own collars. One of these ladies is to be the Queen of England, another Empress of Russia and a third is princess Thyra, just married to the young man who hopes to be King of Hanover some time.

—On the Sabbath two deacons, John Christie and Prof. H. A. Fischer, were set apart by prayer and laying on of hands in the College church at Wheaton. Prof. Blanchard preached in connection an impressive discourse on church officers and their ordination. The elders of the church with Pres. Blanchard, Dr. J. B. Walker, Dr. A. H. Hiatt and Revs. J. P. Stoddard and H. H. Hinman took part in the interesting services.

—Francis Murphy, the temperance reformer, lectured to a large audience in the College chapel, Wheaton, on Friday evening last and on Sabbath evening a Scriptural concert exercise on temperance was given by the Sabbath school.

FREE METHODIST.

—Bro Edward Mathews continued the revival meetings in Hudson, Mich., through last week, holding two services daily, with large congregations and much interest. One old man of seventy-five with his only son are among the converts. Prayer is now the order of his house where games of chance were before. The "popular" ministers absent themselves, but some of the lodge men are seen in the rear of the room. The reform issues are kept before the people. Last Sabbath and Saturday a quarterly meeting was held. On Sabbath morning after love feast brother Mathews preached on the subject: "The Lord's Supper and who are proper subjects."

—A discussion has arisen between writers in the daily press of Sycamore, Ill., and the Free Methodist, started by a Masonic funeral performance. Bro. Baker of the Free Methodist prints a very able reply in his last paper, proving that Freemasonry is undeniably an idolatrous system.

—Superintendent Roberts is expected in Seattle, Washington Territory, soon. Revival interest has taken hold on the brethren there and the result is thorough conversions, with the giving up of Freemasonry, tobacco, and other works of the flesh.

—Revivals at Perryopolis, Ohio, and Orleans, Mich., were blessed with power from on high to reach lodge members. One Mason came out in each place, and in the latter several grangers; there also great opposition was experienced on this account from lodge-loving churches.

—Rev. L. H. Robinson preached in quarterly meeting, Fulton, N. Y., about the first of March on modern Delilahs, whom he classed as intemperance, Catholicism, secretism, worldly conformity and formalism.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—An Ohio correspondent, G. H. R. Hawk, on reading the remarks of the Norwich, O., Courier on Rev. Warren Taylor wishes to subscribe to the good character of that faithful minister of the Lord Jesus Christ and can if necessary procure scores of witnesses who can testify to his unblemished Christian character. His efforts for religion and education at Wilkesville were successful in building a church and an academy; but his exposition of the sins of secretism brought down the wrath of the lodges upon him and forced him to leave southern Ohio.

—The Secretaries of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions state that on February 1, they were $90,000 in debt, and that their expenses for the next two months before the close of their fiscal year will be $45,000 in addition. They appeal earnestly for the removal of the debt.

—A Scotch correspondent of Our Banner describes the spiritual condition of the Established church of that country as at a very low ebb. The letter says:

"In the Established church all is quiet. Nobody is prosecuted for heresy. A minister in it may preach up the atonement or preach it down, may deny eternal punishment, may advocate a kind of modified purgatory, laugh to scorn the spiritual independence of the church but no church court calls him in question. In short, Dr. Tulloch, the present moderator of the Established church, is the leader of the Rationalist party in Scotland, and the evangelical men in that church are of such a milk-and-water type that they seem able to tolerate anything but disestablishment. That, they declare with great emphasis, would involve them in treason to Christ. Any other error can be endured by them but that."

—On the 9th ult. Rev. A. E. Kittredge of this city preached a sermon on the power of the Gospel, in which he referred to the Chinese question at some length, questioning how the country could endure the "avalanche of heathenism," and claiming that with their heathenism and idol worship they can only be a curse to the land, and that their presence here as voters will imperil the very existence of our Republic. Dr. Kittredge well says that our only hope as a nation is in the dissemination of Gospel principles; but he omits any reference to the darker, more subtle and dreadful idolatry of the Masonic lodge, which mingles its foul odors even with the incense on God's altars.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Rev. Henry Easson, missionary in Latakia near Beyrout, Syria, writes to Our Banner a comprehensive sketch of the work in this the only foreign mission station of the church:

"In Latakia we have three schools; 1st. The boarding school with one hundred scholars, including pupil teachers. 2nd. The girls' day-school containing 145 pupils. 3rd. The boys' day-school with 115 pupils. We have also a small school in Bahamra, another in El Douey, another in Mucherafee, and one in Gunemia; making in all in the Latakia district seven schools. Besides we have two schools in Suadea; one for Christians, and the other for Ansairiyeh. I have preached all these places during the year, and Miss Crawford examined nearly all of the schools. The work of Miss Crawford for the past two years has been to superintend and examine the schools. This work will now have to be done by the writer, and I am willing to acknowledge that it will not be done as it has been done in the past. Miss Wylie has a class in the girls' day school, which with her studies, and helping to care for the sick, keeps her well occupied. Mrs. Easson has charge of the commissary and clothing departments, etc., in the boarding school, and the fancy work of the advanced classes in both of the girls' schools. So you see we are all pretty busy, but with the help of the Good Shepherd the work will go on. We hope to see Dr. Metheny and family back about Oct. 1st, with least at two helpers. If the church could only give us another 100 pounds sterling a year, we could open several new schools in the mountains. I have urgent applications from six mountain stations for teachers, each village promising to furnish a house free for the school. Doors are opening, and may the Lord grant his people grace to enter and take possession."

—From the same journal is taken the following description of the Chinese converts in the mission at Oakland, Cal. We have occasionally noted the devoted work of Rev. N. R. Johnston among the Chinese, and our readers will desire to know more intimately its nature and results:

"A short time ago I wrote you that two baptized converts, Lem Fong and Ju On, had been added to our list. At their examination and baptism, they gave satisfactory evidence of true piety. Ju On is young amiable and promising. Lem Fong is a mature man, diffident and reserved. We are not yet well acquainted with him, but we regard him as a man of more than ordinary worth. His acceptance of Christianity and of Christ, was complete and unwavering. In deportment he is a model. Since their baptism, both have led in prayer in our Chinese prayer-meetings, and, I believe both are led by the Spirit.

On Sabbath, January 12th, four more converts were baptized. It was a most joyous occasion to them, and to the converts previously baptized, and to us who have been laboring, praying, fearing, and hoping so long. A marvelous change has passed over these young men, Chu Hop, Gin Ho, Ju Di and Ju Bong; they seem to have fully and willingly abandoned their pagan religion. I think no temptation could induce them to return to idolatry. A year or two ago, when Gin Ho entered our mission Sabbath school, if any one had told us that he would now be a Christian we would have replied, Impossible! But on the Sabbaths and at night, during the past months, he has received lessons in the class-room, as well as lessons in the Gospel preached in various forms. Now you have the result. To God belongs all the glory. In ways that we knew not the Spirit was moving upon his heart. With Him we share the joy.

During several weeks prior to their baptism I met with them frequently for special instruction, prayer and help. So early are errors and pagan superstitions imbedded in the Chinese mind, the Spirit of God only can eradicate them. These young men had their difficulties, but they had well nigh overcome them all before baptism. How much that had always been dear to them they had to give up no one unacquainted with Chinese customs and character can know. All had been forsaken for Christ.

WESLEYAN.

—Bro. J. A. Richards of Ft. Scott, Kansas, has been engaged in revival work in his church again this season. He has to overcome crushing opposition from the lodge and worldly churches but is able to say triumphantly that God's grace is sufficient.

—Rev. D. F. Shepardson, who with his wife published the Bible Banner at Wheaton some years ago has removed from Wasioja, Minn., to Oakwood, Brookins county, Dakota, where he hopes to assist in establishing Wesleyan societies and directing the settlement of emigrants so that they may not be without religious influences.

—Rev. H. C. Jackson of Dayton, Ohio, has reorganized the church at Chambersburg with seventeen members.

—Secretary McAllister of the National Reform Association of Philadelphia is expecting to attend the Syracuse conference to present the claims of his society. Rev. A. T. Wolff is to visit the Rochester and Lockport conferences on the same mission.

MENNONITE.

—There are twenty-five Mennonite villages in Manitoba, 480 dwellings and 2,841 residents. The immigrants from Russia have 10,470 acres under cultivation, 362 horses and some two thousand five hundred cows, and have already large stores of grain and other produce. They are growing rich rapidly and prove the very best of citizens, settling all their disputes among themselves, and having in their colony neither a constable nor a jail.

GERMAN BAPTIST (BRETHREN).

—One hundred and eighteen additions to this body of Christians are noted in a late number of the Pilgrim from fifteen congregations.

—At Huntingdon, Indiana, not mentioned above, a revival meeting lately closed with 49 additions to the church.

GENERAL.

—The Christian people of Springfield, O., have formed a law and order association, to attempt to prohibit the sale of papers, liquors, cigars, etc., on Sunday and to suppress Sabbath desecration generally.

—The soldiers of Fort Snelling, Minn., have organized a Young Men's Christian Association, the first connected with the United States Army.

MISSIONARY.

—A correspondent of the Christian Intelligencer gives the following picture of the present religious condition of Italy:

In Milan, Turin, Pisa, Florence, and notably in Rome, I gleaned but one impression—that the papal church was fatally and irretrievably losing its hold upon the masses of Italy. An eminent man, who enjoys the friendship of the present pope, remarks in an article furnished to a late number of the Contemporary Review, that "if the word Protestant could be accepted as the synonym of anti-papal, the people of Italy are at the present moment the most Protestant nation in the world."

Go from one cathedral to another, and while you witness the pageant of the ritual, or listen to the richest music, you look about you and wonder at the absence of worshipers. The splendid churches remain, but the spirit which once built them is gone. They remain, but instead of being thronged with eager worshipers, they are only vast ecclesiastical show-shops, and shrines for the worshipers of art alone. Indeed, they seem painfully like the mausoleums of a dead faith.

The visitor is also struck with the many evidences of a waning respect and veneration for the church. In Rome you will waken no "holy horror," but rather provoke a sympathetic laugh, when you speak in a light vein of the Vatican. Indeed caricatures and cartoons, at the expense of the papal court, form no small part of the capital of the Italian press. We need undertake no exposition of the causes of such a state of things beyond the general and sufficient explanation that the nineteenth century with its first edge of life is beginning to touch Italy.

News of the Week.

—At the annual meeting of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, in this city last week, Mr. Willard offered a resolution requesting the Directors to instruct the officers of the road to suspend the labor of all employes of the company as far as practicable on the Sabbath.

After discussion the resolution was laid on the table until the next regular meeting of the stockholders. It is believed that the object sought to be attained is already enjoyed.

—President White, of Cornell University, was last Wednesday nominated as Minister to Germany. He was one of the United States Commissioners to the late Paris Exposition, and has written some valuable chapters on exhibitions in general, and especially upon the subject of education as there illustrated. He has long been an intimate friend of the President. Two of the President's sons have gone through Cornell and one of them is now at that institution.

—On the same day Dr. Cornelius Logan, of Chicago, was nominated as minister to the Central American States. One of his qualifications is that he is a distinguished member of the order of Odd-fellows, being a Past Grand Sire of the institution. It was he who introduced the order into Chili and Peru and translated the ritual into Spanish.

—By the burning of the Tremont House, Claremont, N. H., five people were burned to death.

—An explosion of gases in a block of buildings in Madison, Wis., on Saturday afternoon injured thirty persons.

—A dispatch from Frankfort, Kentucky, announces that Colonel Thomas Buford, of Henry county, shot and killed John M. Elliott, of the Court of Appeals, with a load of buckshot, and that he also intended to kill Chief Justice W. S. Pryor of the same court. Judge Elliott was assassinated and instantly killed on the street, in front of the Capitol hotel, at 1 o'clock to-day. Judge Elliott had rendered an adverse opinion to a case Buford had in court for some time. Buford loaded a double-barreled shot-gun, and waited for Elliott to come to dinner, and walked up and shot him through the heart without warning. Buford was arrested and is now in jail. Great excitement prevails, and there is a strong feeling against him. Buford, after his arrest, acknowledged that the other barrel of the gun was loaded for Pryor, and he would have killed him also had not some children been in the way.

—A letter from Brazil says that 18,000 people died in Tartaleza in December, one-fourth of the population; that 27,000 recorded interments were made in two months, while a number of bodies were sunk in the bay. In the villages round about poor people were dying like sheep. A horrible stench arises from the cemeteries, and the black plague is feared. Starving refugees clamored at the barracks for food. The commandant attempted to arrest the ringleaders, but was shot down. Four soldiers and several rioters were killed in the struggle that ensued. Finally the military were driven out of the town and the provision houses sacked.

—In the House of Lords last Friday Lord Huntley suggested that inquiry be made into the depression of commerce and agriculture. Lord Beaconsfield acknowledged that the depression in the agricultural interest was unprecedented, but a depression was anticipated when protection was abolished. It was estimated that the public wealth had diminished £80,000,000, and the area of land under cultivation had dimimished 1,000,000 acres. English industry and commerce, however, kept well on a level with those of foreign countries.

—There is war in Afghanistan again. A dispatch from Calcutta states that Major Cavagnari had an interview on Wednesday with the Viceroy of India, at which he informed the latter that all hope of peaceful negotiation with Yakoob Khan had failed. An immediate advance upon Cabul has been ordered. The Shoutar Gordon Pass is practicable. General Roberts can reach the crest of the pass in a week.

—The famine in Upper Egypt causes terrible suffering. In some villages the people, naked like wild beasts, dig for roots. In one town women and children fought over scraps of bread. The inland villagers are said to be starving like dogs.

—The recent fire at Akyab, Farther India, which was accidental, destroyed the native portion of the town. The loss is estimated at £500 000. A thousand people were rendered homeless.

Vick's Monthly. This rich floral offering for April talks of ventilation and carpets, Bee plants, the Pansy, Tomatoes, Onions, etc., with many useful hints to ladies on floriculture and to everybody about good gardens and fine yards; all finely illustrated: $1.00 per year. James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

The April number of the North American Review opens with an article entitled "Retribution in Politics," by ex-Gov. Hendricks. It is intended as a reply to the charges which Senator Blaine in the March issue made against the Southern wing of the Democratic party.

A good story is told by George Alfred Townsend respecting the discussion of this question in the March number, to this effect: Speaking of the design of the North American Review to secure articles on the negro question from the leading statesmen of the day, it seems that Senator Blaine gave the suggestion to the editor of the Review. Garfield is to write one of the articles. Yesterday Garfield asked Jere Black when his article was to be ready. "For," said he, "Judge, I see that you are announced as one of the writers on that theme." "Well," said Black, "I do not think I shall write any article on that subject. I have an idea that Blaine put it up. It is said that the way they tame elephants is to tie the elephant to a tree and have a man come up with a whip and flog him terribly until the elephant howls. Suddenly another man appears on the scene and attacks the flogger of the elephant with a whip, and in turn beats the whipper unmercifully so that the brute can see it. It is rumored that thereupon the elephant evinces a great fondness for the man who whipped his whipper. Now," said Black, "I do not mean to be sent forward, if I can help it, to flog the negro elephant so that Jim Blaine can come up afterward and whip me!"

The second paper is on "The Public Schools of England," and is by Thomas Hughes, author of "Tom Brown at Rugby," and shows the need of establishing in the United States educational institutions similar to those in England.

"German Socialism in America," embraces a large number of statistics of the origin and progress of socialism in this country that have never before been published, and states the dangers that are believed to threaten the States from measures which Prince Bismarck is said to be taking to rid Germany of the socialistic element.

A plea for the Indians, by the noted Nez Perces chief, Joseph, with an introduction by Bishop Hare. "The Pronunciation of the Latin Language," and "Hartmann's Religion of the Future" and other religious articles.

Published at 551 Broadway, New York, and for sale by booksellers and newsdealers generally, at 50 cents per copy.

—The use of tobacco in any of its forms, is at the best a rather filthy habit, but however careful and cleanly persons using it may be at first, they are apt to grow careless; and in old age a snuff taker or a smoker or chewer of the foul weed is likely to become a nauseous object. We suggest that our young gentlemen who parade the streets with their cigars, look ahead a few years and try to see themselves, as others will see them, sitting among a crowd of loafers and bummers in a low saloon smoking an old black stub of a pipe. If they like the outlook, then, travel on; if not let them send to H. L. Hastings' Anti-tobacco Tract Depository, 342 Washington street, Boston, Mass., and get some documents that will post them as to the evil effects of this wide spread habit.

One of the most useless of all things is to take a deal of trouble in providing against dangers that never come.

OBITUARY.

William Jenkins died at Boston Highlands, Mass., of pneumonia, February 2nd, in the 85th year of his age. He was born in Strafford, Vt., whither his father, Enoch Jenkins, had settled after obtaining an honorable discharge for faithful service through all the trying years of the Revolutionary war. His grandfather, Nathaniel Jenkins, was the town schoolmaster of Malden, Mass., for many years.

The subject of this notice, went to Hanover, N. H., when about 16 years of age to learn the saddle and harness maker's trade, and while there commenced a Christian life, and laid the foundation for those principles of temperance, freedom and fearless resistance to all evil, which so emphatically marked his long career.

In 1816 he settled in the village of Attica, in western New York. At a quarterly meeting in May, 1816, he was baptized by his brother, Rev. Herman Jenkins, who became extensively known in the West as a successful preacher and evangelist.

He was married in 1818 to a daughter of Rev. Salmon Hebard, formerly of New Hampton, N. H., who united with him in erecting the family altar, which became a prominent institution in their household, long to be remembered by their children, the workmen, and frequent guests of the family. Their house was ever the home of all Christian laborers, irrespective of name, but especially for the ministers of the Freewill Baptist denomination to which he belonged, and whose labors were generally evangelistic.

He was a pioneer in all the reforms of the day; of temperance when its advocates were few; an indomitable foe to slavery, he kept a station for fugitives on the "underground railroad," and was one of the first three in his town who opposed the iniquity of American slavery by their votes at the ballot box.

Amidst the terrible excitement which prevailed in western New York on the occasion of the abduction and murder of Wm. Morgan, he served on the grand jury at Batavia, which found indictment against several of the conspirators, and from that time he regarded secret societies as hostile to the best interests of our free institutions and to the universal law of love and good will to all men.

In his last painful illness he was calm and cheerful. At one time he said, "Every hour grows richer nearing home," and an hour before death, when asked if he had anything to say to present and absent friends, he answered: "Be faithful—unto God—love—one—another." With his last breath he signified that he was almost over the river.

Funeral services were held on the 4th inst., at his son's residence, Forest avenue, where were gathered some of his children, grand-children and great-grand-children.

On the following day the body was taken to South Carver, and an address was delivered in the Union Chapel by Rev. Mr. Plumb of Walnut Avenue church, Boston Highlands, to an attentive congregation of friends and workmen in the mill, with whom he had been long associated; after which his body was placed in the beautiful country church yard where his first wife and eldest son are buried.

Home and Farm.

Washes for Fruit Trees.

Insects and mildews injurious to the leaves of the fruit-tree seedlings and root grafts can be kept in subjection, or destroyed by a free use of the following combination of lime and sulphur: Take of quick or unslaked lime four parts and of common flour of sulphur one part; break up the lime in small pieces, then mix the sulphur with it in an iron vessel, pour on them enough boiling water to slake the lime to a powder; cover the vessel close as soon as the water is poured on. This makes a most excellent whitewash for orchard trees; and is very useful as a preventive of blight on pear trees, to cover the wounds in the form of a paste when cutting away diseased parts; also for coating the trees in early spring.

It may be considered as a specific for many noxious insects and mildew in the orchard and nursery; its material should always be ready at hand; it should be used quite fresh, since it soon loses its potency. This preparation should be sprinkled over the young plant as soon or before any trouble from aphides, thrips or mildew occurs, early in the morning while the dew is on the trees. This lime and sulphur combination is destructive to these pests in this way giving off gaseous sulphurous compounds, which are deadly poison to minute life, both animal and fungoid; while the lime destroys by contact the same things, and its presence is noxious to them. In moderate quantities it is not injurious to common vegetable life.

Another recipe for a wash for orchard trees is to put one-half bushel of lime and four pounds of powdered sulphur into a tight barrel, slaking the lime with hot water, the mouth of the barrel being covered with a cloth, this is reduced to the consistency of ordinary whitewash, and one-half ounce of carbolic acid is added to each gallon of liquid at the time of application. Apply to the trunk; it will not hurt the branches or foliage if applied to them also.

An experienced fruit-grower recommends the use of the following simple method: He takes lye from wood ashes or common potash, mixes a little grease with it, heats quite warm and with a little syringe throws it up into all parts of the tree, branches and trunk. It will effectually kill all kinds of caterpillars and worms that are infesting the tree or running over the bark. Trees treated in this manner are exceedingly healthy and vigorous in appearance, possessing a smooth, glossy bark.—Inter Ocean.

Onions.

No vegetable is more extensively known and cultivated than the onion. It has been the common seasoning for soups and meats, of all nations, from time immemorial; and in cooking it is indispensable. It possesses valuable medicinal properties, and is used in colds and coughs as an expectorant. It contains considerable nutriment and is tolerably wholesome, especially if boiled. Raw, fried or roasted, they are not very digestible. Eating a few leaves of parsley will destroy, in a measure, the unpleasant smell they impart to the breath.

Onion seed should be sown from the first of April to the middle of May (the earlier the better), provided the ground is dry enough to work light and fine. After preparing the land by manuring heavily and harrowing and raking fine, draw drills fourteen inches apart with a marking rake, and sow at the rate of six pounds to the acre, if wanted for bunching; but for onions to sell by the bushel, five pounds will be sufficient. The sowing is mostly done by machines, which can be adjusted to sow any desired quantity to the acre. If convenient, it is better to go over the ground with a light roller immediately after sowing. It is customary to weed them three times. At the first two the earth is drawn up a little to the plants, and at the third or last weeding it should be brushed clear away with the fingers, to give them an opportunity to bottom entirely above ground. Onions are an exception to the theory of rotation in crops. They succeed equally well any number of years on the same ground if kept highly enriched with hog dung, or fine yard manure, spread on every spring, and turned with a light furrow. A top-dressing of wood ashes applied after the second weeding is very beneficial to this crop, as will soon be observed by the dark and healthy change of color given to the plants.—Interior.

Sowing Flower Seeds.

Very few persons who purchase and plant flower seeds properly understand the work undertaken. This is to be expected, for perhaps until the time of sowing they have never given the matter a thought. There is a very general idea abroad, with those who have not learned by experience, that all that is to be done is to get good seed and plant it and plants are bound to follow. Our experience teaches us that flower seeds never do so well when sown in open ground—as they are of delicate nature and are liable to become imbedded too deeply, or destroyed by the sun or wind, after coming up. Seedling plants can be grown about as well in the window of a sitting-room as in a green house, provided the temperature is right.

We recommend sowing them in shallow boxes, say three inches deep filled to within one-half inch of the top with light, rich earth—the best soil is leaf mold from the woods, if it can be procured; in the absence of this, light sandy soil mixed with an equal quantity of thoroughly decomposed stable manure, will answer nearly as well. When the box is filled level it nicely by patting it down with a smooth board until it is quite even; then with a common meal sieve dust as much soil over it as will barely cover the seed; after this sprinkle with water from a watering pot with a very fine rose; keep the box in a temperature from 55 to 60 degrees, taking care to give it a sprinkle of water only when the surface appears dry. When the plants are in the second or rough leaf they should be transplanted to similar boxes in rows, say two inches apart each way and treated with water as before; the plants in a short time will be ready for the flower beds, and may be planted out on any cloudy day.—Selected.

Roads and Paths.—Surface water should not be allowed to remain upon roads or paths, or in ruts. Let it off, and fill up the holes or ruts with dry earth or gravel from a bank. A dry road will stand many times as much wear as one that is wet and muddy. Paths should be made dry, or planks laid down for walks over soft ground. When wet ground gets puddled, it takes a long time to dry.

Lecturers and others who wish to find the best arguments against the Lodge, should send for this book.

Albert M. Paull, Providence, R. I., more than fills his pledge to send a club of ten by ordering twelve copies of the Cynosure for one year each. He writes: "I hope to do some more thorough canvassing for your paper in the summer and fall."

J. P. Stoddard, sends ten subscriptions for one year each, all from Clarence, Iowa.

Wm. Gray, Albia, Iowa, sends six subscriptions for one year each and writes: "I wish I could make out the 10,000."

E P. Townsley, DeKalb, St Lawrence county, New York, writes: "I hope to be able to get more subscribers in this vicinity before many months."

Albert Holt, Carthage, N. Y., writes: "I am anxious to see this enterprise pushed ahead. I think it will be for I believe it is of God and it will prosper."

J. K. Weber, Titusville, Pa., writes: "I will try to do all for your paper I can."

As the spring advances we trust that many of our friends who have been unable to work for subscriptions during the cold weather will do what they can to bring the list up to 10,000.

—About 2,500 colored people from Louisiana and Mississippi have reached St Louis on their way to Kansas. Many of them are unable to pay their way further, but they are determined not to return to their old homes. The Globe Democrat publishes a number of affidavits as to causes of the exodus, and adds:

"The affidavits made by a large number of the negro refugees contain a terrible condemnation of the bulldozing policy now pursued by the white people of Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas. These affidavits all tell the same story, and they are true. The negroes are robbed of their political rights; they are not permitted to hold political meetings of any kind, and their lives are in danger if they attempt to vote the Republican ticket. A well organized system of terrorism prevails. The whites cannot tolerate a "smart nigger." They look upon such a man as a fire-brand who is a constant menace to Democratic supremacy. The colored man who reads the newspapers is hunted down like a mad dog, because there is danger that he may communicate the poison of information to his less gifted neighbors."

Red Clover Tea

A Cure for All Blood Diseases.

I am seventy years of age, am in good health for one of my years. Fourteen years since I had Scirrhus Cancer. Tea made from Red Clover Blossoms cured me. I have advised its use in many bad cases of Salt Rheum and it has proved a success. By permission I refer to Capt. David H. Small, No. 44 Winchester Ave., Chicago, who was cured by the use of clover tea of a cancer in the stomach after being pronounced incurable by physicians. I will gladly impart all the information in my power, and no charge, when a stamp is sent. I have the clover picked in full bloom and cured the same day with the Alden Dryer. It is not possible to have it better; also the Extract, equally good.

TO THE PEOPLE OF NEBRASKA.

The time has come that the friends of light and truth in this State should organize to oppose secret lodges. The cause of every man, woman and child in this State is suffering from their influence. Let us rally at YORK, York County, Nebraska, on Wednesday, April 30th and May 1st, 1879, and set up our banners in the name of the Lord. Rev. J. P. Stoddard, Secretary of the National Association opposed to secret societies, will be present, and other distinguished speakers and lecturers are expected. Let there be a general attendance of all.

W. S. SPOONER,
J. M. SNYDER,
Kearney, Neb. Committee.

WISCONSIN LECTURE WORK.

Permit me through the CYNOSURE to urge the friends of the reform in the State of Wisconsin to rally to the help of the cause in the State. We are about to employ a lecturer for the rest of the season. Send on your subscriptions to the treasurer, M. R. Britten, Vienna, Wis., and let those appointed last fall at the State meeting go work in earnest. Also those of the friends who want the State meeting held in their place please inform me of the advantages and prospects of being well sustained.

ENOS COLLINS, Pres.,
New London, Wis.

—During the present month all subscribers to the Illinois State fund are requested to forward part or the whole of their pledges to the treasurer, H. L. Kellogg, at this office, to meet the salary of the State lecturer due May 1st.

Topics of the Time.

Chicago last week passed through another exciting municipal election. The candidates for Mayor who had any expectations of election were A. M. Wright, Republican, and Carter Harrison, late Democratic Representative in the lower House at Washington. The friends of the former were sanguine of victory, and the result was probably contrary to the general opinion. Harrison was elected by four or five thousand majority, One of the means by which this result was accomplished was a circular addressed to the "temperance and Christian voters of Chicago" issued by the Reform Alliance, which contained translations from the leading German papers claiming that Mr. Wright was with them on the temperance and Sunday question, and quoting his emphatic assertions of opposition to the Sunday law and friendly feeling toward the theaters which remain open on the Lord's day. One of these German papers says: "It is essential that these nativists and temperance people within the Republican party should be checked and put in the background!" Such cool arrogance is hard to find outside the lodge or the commune. Verily we must consult these late-landed refugees, whose crimes or violent opinions rendered them insufferable in Europe, to learn what rights we have left us. Chicago may be congratulated in escaping the rule of a man who could make pledges with such an element.

The Catholic Review advertises a "grand drawing" (lottery) in aid of Romish church building in Olathe, Kansas, tickets sold at a dollar each. In addition to the chance of the drawing a further inducement is held out; for every one who invests in the lottery, or entices others to do so, or contributes anything for the church, twenty-five masses will be said for his soul. Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, promises also "the last masses of a long priestly life" to those who aid in cancelling the debt so fraudulently accumulated by him. Dr. Samson, of New York, who suggests that American Protestants might wipe out this debt for him, should receive the special benediction of the Archbishop and masses enough to prevent any disaster in respect to the future. But the mercenary nature of these religious promises would abash any one whose moral perceptions are not blunted or destroyed by long practicing with falsehoods in religion, as a Jesuit or a Freemason. And only such would be duped into these investments, in the belief that God will heed petitions sold like cabbages in the market, whose virtue is a price and not faith.

If the citizens of the United States find it necessary to practice rigid economy as individuals, they may yet view with feelings of national pride the progress that has been made in refunding the debt of the government. Within the two years administration of President Hayes, not only has resumption of specie payments been quietly accomplished, but over five hundred millions of the national debt has been called in and replaced with bonds bearing four per-cent interest, thus saving $11,000,000 to the Treasury from interest. The friends of Secretary Sherman call this the greatest feat in the history of finance, and few will care to dispute their praise. Last Friday the Secretary issued a call for all the outstanding "5-20" bonds bearing six per cent. interest amounting to $58,000,000, selling on the same day four per cent bonds to the same amount, one New York bank taking $12,000,000 and another $40,000,000, said to be the largest single subscription ever made to a government loan. These large subscriptions are allowed by the government one-fourth of one per cent commission, but a greater profit will be realized on the premium at which these popular bonds will be held. As these immense transactions are carried on without the aid of foreign capital it is a gauge of popular confidence in the stability of our government which cannot mislead. The people that can lend their national treasury $500,000,000 in two years will not tamely see that treasury despoiled for the payment of Southern war claims, or the pensions of rebels.

Nevertheless, we may not deny that such demands, and more even, may have to be sternly met within the next four years. Plenty of unconvinced and unsatisfied rebels are drawing salaries from the government, which under the circumstances is next to a pension, and Secretary Sherman has already received a Confederate bond to be filed for redemption. Ridiculous as the demand may appear the following letter sent with the bond is no joke: "Inclosed please find $1,000 (one thousand dollar) bond of the Confederate States of America, issued in accordance with the sixth section of an act of the Confederate Congress, Feb. 17, 1864. I desire to have my bond filed for redemption at some future day. I believe that a law sooner or later will be passed making them convertible into United States bonds. This view is founded upon the fact that two-thirds of the present members of the Senate and House have been Confederate bondholders. Such a law would produce a vast deal of consolation among Southern people, who have been made destitute by the war. My object in filing now is to entitle me to the precedence in time of settlement."

All last week the House was discussing the army appropriation bill, the point of division being an amendment repealing the election law allowing the use of national troops at the polls to preserve order. The amendment was opposed strenuously by the Republicans, but passed by a vote of 148 to 122, not enough to overcome a veto. The Democrats claim that all means to prevent intimidation at the polls should be left to State legislation. One Southern member whose district is several thousand Republican majority carries about a cannon, which is fired to help the blacks vote right. This member votes against the soldiers because he could not overcome that 10,000 Republican majority with a fair vote. The Senate is hearing long speeches this week. That body is so controlled by the Democrats, that measures are even postponed until they can be considered in the Democratic caucus.

Senator Pendleton of Ohio, has introduced a bill making cabinet officers ex-officio members of the Senate and House of Representatives during their term of office, and shall have the right to participate in debate on matters relating to their respective departments. The cabinet officers are divided in their opinion of the utility of this plan. Sherman thinks well enough of the theory but his judgment si against the practical effect. Schurz and Key favor it. McCrary thinks legislation would derive many advantages from suggestions and information furnished by the heads of departments, but there are other reasons, such as pressure of official duties, the disgrace of personal attacks on the floor of Congress, the necessity of keeping confidential matters in the state and war departments, which decide his mind against the bill. If this measure, in imitation of the British Parliament, is adopted, it may open the way for other changes which are now held to be obnoxious to American institutions.

Carmen Saeculare.

BY PROF. O. F. LUMRY.

[Suggested by the Carmen Saeculare of Horace.]

O God, that rulest heaven and earth and main,
Thy glance illumines all things, above, beneath;
Thee we adore, Almighty Lord and Saviour,
Answer our prayer.

Our country's God! Thy people sing thy praises,
No gods but thee, the living one, shall rule us,
Sons of the favored land, America, the Refuge of freedom.

Let heathen sing of Sol as ruler, source of Light, whose absence nature fills with gloom and night;
Thy growing brightness, Lord, has broken god and Seven-hilled country down.

The god o'er offspring Roman could not his wards
From dread decay exemption one hour vouchsafe;
Mothers and children long since have passed away
In death's long stupor.

On festal days their gods the ancients praised;
Our grateful prayer at morning, noon and eventide
From loving hearts and altars ever true shall rise
Eternal God to thee.

Nor fates nor Terminus could fix thy landmarks;
Apollo's shield was powerless thee to protect;
Diana's shafts thy enemies destroyed not,
Imperial Rome.

In vain thou traced thy lineage from aged
Troy's most noble race and most heroic blood;
Thy mighty men have only in poet's song
An airy being.

Thy land by fostering care of Ceres failed
To sustain its sturdy race of Sons of Mars
From hands of whom enfeebled the sword has slipped Away forever.

Despite no power possessed to shield
His subjects from wasting storms and tempests dire.
With death of men the very air they breathed decayed,
And ruined all things.

Thy household gods, all-conquering Rome, were lies,
Stupendous frauds, imaginations vain, devils,
Fictions of kings to enslave the common mind
And keep it fettered.

Thy onward march, Emanuel, has broken
Fetters from off unwilling hands and aching
Hearts; set free the slaves of ignorance and vice,
Never more to serve.

Thou art our country's God, in thy name we trust.
Keep from destroyers' paths our youth, we humbly
Pray. Their hearts with loyalty to thee imbue
Thy power display.

Of Satan's wiles give them full knowledge, ample
Warning; his worship manifold and nature foul,
Where'er in secret lodge or chapel open
Their hiding place is,

Do thou to heaven's sunlight with scourge drive forth.
Let all men know that worship, not in thy name,
To whom and wheresoever given, is Satan's gift
Not thine, my Saviour.

No god of heathen ever his country saved,
Then why should we repeat their sin and folly
In splendid temples, all abodes of idols,
Since that from out which

Thou with scourge of twisted cords didst drive Mammon's
Blind worshipers? If greater sin brings greater Punishment, what can we expect, who devils
Joyful serve e'en now?

O God! do thou with power divine open
Blind eyes of giants, groping in the darkness for Pillars on which is resting freedom's fair house,
Lest they destroy it.

Let not free government, united with worship
True in bonds so close, be torn asunder by Slaves of sin and worshipers at altars false
And tyrants haughty.

Make all to see by thy unerring Spirit,
While we are true to thee, O Saviour mighty,
No enemy can harm us or freedom's good
Heritage destroy.

While circling ages onward roll their tardy
Course, or time yields not to vast eternity,
The nation is free indeed, forever free,
By thee enfranchised.

Not Mixed with Faith.

BY REV. GEO. R. MILTON.

The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews gives in the following words, we think, the secret of the failure on the part of many who attend the stated means of grace to bring forth fruit unto God. The writer says: "For unto us was the Gospel preached as well as unto them, but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." (Heb. 4: 2.)

We have often wondered how people could attend upon the preaching of the Divine Word for months and years and yet be apparently no better. But here we have the mystery solved. The Gospel is preached, but the word preached does not profit; and God says it is for this reason: "That it is not mixed with faith in them that hear it." Food in the mouth does the holder of it no good until it is swallowed and mixed with the gastric juice of the stomach. In like manner the simple hearing of good news does no one any good until it is mixed with faith in them that hear it. The anxious parent may hear of good news from an absent child, but there is no comfort in it, unless it is mixed with faith in him who hears. The condemned criminal in his cell may hear the good news that he is pardoned, but not till the hearing is mixed with faith will joy and comfort arise in his bosom. The sick man may hear of a medicine that will cure his sickness, but not until it is mixed with faith sufficient to take the medicine will it profit him. The best news that ever fell upon mortal ear will be profitless unless it is mixed with faith in him who hears it. We may hear of fortunes being left to us who are poor, medicines for us who are sick, help for us who need it, and joy for us who are sorrowful, but not being mixed with faith in us who hear it will do us no good.

Thus was it with the Gospel that was preached to the ancients. The fault was not in the Gospel. It was not in the circumstances. It was not in the times in which they lived. It was not in the prophets who delivered the message. It was not in God. But, it was in those who heard. The Divine assertion is: "It did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it."

Adam and Eve had the Gospel preached to them in the Garden of Eden; they heard the Gospel of obedience, and they heard it from the lips of the Eternal himself, "but the Word preached did not profit them not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." The antedeluvians had the Gospel preached unto them, and so did the disobedient Jews, but the Word preached did not profit all not being mixed with faith in all who heard it.

This same thing has been true all through the ages; and is true this hour and this minute. Look at the hundreds and thousands who hear the words of eternal life. They hear of pardon and redemption and sanctification and divine wisdom and righteousness; they hear of peace and joy and the ability and willingness of Christ to make happy the most sorrowful, and pure the most impure, and holy the most unholy, and free the veriest slave; to give life eternal to the dead, health to the sick, sight to the blind and heaven to those who are on the way to hell. They hear all these things, but the hearing does not profit, "not being mixed with faith in them that hear it."

We have reason for believing that tens of thousands after hearing the proffered mercy of salvation for twenty or thirty or forty years, are no nearer the kingdom of God than they were at the end of the first sermon. Not because the words of God have lost their efficacy and power, not on account of the illogical methods of the preacher, or his stammering tongue, or his offensive appearance and style; not on account of the outward wickedness of the community, nor the business temptations, nor any other outward circumstance by which we may be surrounded, not in any of these, but in our unbelief—"Not being mixed with faith in them that hear it."

It matters not what may be our outward condition or what may be our inward state, if we will only look to the divine Son of God with a constant and an unwavering trust in him, nothing shall or can overcome us, neither the world, nor the flesh, nor the devil. St. Paul says: "We are more than conquerors through him that loved us." That was his experience, and it has been the experience of a great multitude who have "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Christ can keep us without falling here as well as he can keep us without falling in heaven. He can keep us from evil while in the body as well as he can keep from evil out of the body. He can keep us from evil in this world as well as he can keep us from evil in the world to come. For whether in the body or out of the body, whether in this land or in that "Land beyond the river," we understand that Christ is our Keeper. He is our Shield; and he is our Refuge. The soul that has placed his mortal and his immortal all upon the altar of God and keeps it there, has no thought of ever looking to any other than Christ to keep him from falling while he tabernacles in the flesh, while he reigns with Christ in glory. To him it is all the same. His song is: "Unto him who is able to keep you from falling and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy" (Jude 24). To such the Word preached is profitable, because it is mixed with faith in them that hear it. For it is the purpose and the wisdom of God to honor those who honor him, and to bless those who put their trust in his Word.

What the Lodge will do for One-third of a Cent.

The following case is reported in daily papers Washington:

"Yesterday, in the Criminal Court, before Justice Wilie, James H. Whitten was placed on trial charged with presenting a false claim, with the intention of defrauding the Government.

The evidence showed that the accused personated Second Lieutenant H. H. Bailey, of the Fifth Infantry, made out two accounts for the month of November, signed them, and was about receiving a check from Paymaster Wingard when the imposition was discovered.

The point being raised that the proof offered was at variance with the claim as set out in the indictment and sustained by the court, a verdict of acquittal was returned by the jury. The man Whitten is the same party that was convicted of presenting a false claim to Paymaster Sharp, sent to the penitentiary, and pardoned by the President.

His honor remarked that he must be out of his head, or else some strange infatuation possessed him, as he recollected the former trial and its result. He said that Whitten came of a fine family in Indianapolis, and that his military record was excellent, but what lead him to such strange actions it was difficult to tell. He thought it would be best if he could be impounded in a prison or some institution where he would be out of harm's way. The judge then directed his discharge, despite the request of the district attorney for his detention, who stated that he had two other charges against him."

The technicality of which the court took advantage to set at liberty a man who had within a year been dismissed from the army and also pardoned out of the penitentiary by the President, being that the claim was for $128.33⅓ while the indictment charged it as $128 33. I have made inquiries to ascertain what secret order this man belonged to and although it was admitted at first by those who ought to know, that he did belong to some lodge, after a consultation it was denied that he belonged to any.

It is difficult to conceive to what combination of fortuitous circumstances this man owed his discharge unless that always produced by the speaking of the cabalistic dialect of "Tubal Cain" and "Ma-ha-bone." It cannot be accounted for on the ground of mercy: For it would be an act of mercy and of justice to a man who committed three or four penitentiary offences yearly, to confine him in some place where he could be of service to the community and be protected from himself; not to mention or give any consideration to the citizens upon whom such a person must necessarily prey, or the propriety of making an example and upholding the dignity of violated law. Here in the capital of the nation we see a judge, said to be a Mason, directing the district attorney, also a Mason, to discharge a prisoner whose guilt is established because of a variance in the proof of one third of a cent, and that too when the attorney protested that there were two other charges against the man. Such performances as these cannot but add to the disrepute into which the criminal court of this District has fallen in the last few years by reason of it being under the influence of secret societies.

I have noticed within the last year a decline in faith of Masons hereabouts and do not know what to attribute it to unless to your Association which is already assuming formidable proportions, at least to criminals.

It will not be long before people will speak their minds upon the subject of secret societies, since professed Christians are exposing them; and it will not be long before it will be next to impossible to get any decent man to acknowledge in public that he is a member of a society which practically excludes his fellow citizens from the rights of citizenship, (holding office.)

How to Unmake a Mason.

BY ELDER N. CALLENDER.

How can a Mason cease to be a Mason? By non-attendance, non-payment of dues, or taking a demit? No; according to Mackay's Lexicon a man may, through indifference or real repugnance to the institution, do any one or all of these and still be held a Mason. How then may a Mason cease to be one?

We answer, by a voluntary and deliberate purpose to break the Masonic covenant, and openly renouncing the institution as an evil thing to be turned from with a penitent heart. No less than this can satisfy a "good conscience toward God." Evils must be treated as evils not only in God's sight, but in the sight of men as a warning to them. Such is the voice of common sense. It is not enough to keep aloof from great moral evils and so be silent regarding them. If such a course will answer in regard to the false worships of the lodge, why not adopt it in regard to intemperance and all other abominations in the land? Why not hush every warning voice in the world and call in every reformer?

Let the Goughs, Murphys and Finneys be silent, only keep away from the evils which would, had they abandoned them, have sunk them into hell. Men who have been into an evil which has nearly sunk them into the abyss, are those upon whom devolves the duty, with double force, of lifting up the warning voice against that evil, and no power of earth or hell can exempt him. Reformed drunkards, like Gough and Murphy, can reach men for good which others cannot. Is it not their duty to use such an opportunity for God and humanity? So renouncing Masons can do under God, what others can not. Ought they to adopt silence through regard or respect to the old brotherhood?

"Wo unto Him by whom the Offense Cometh!"

BY A SECEDER.

It is no wonder that men who have never been enlightened by the Holy Spirit, who have never tasted how sweet it is to serve God with an undivided heart, who are wilfully ignorant of the truth as it is in Jesus, worship Masonry and idolize such self-made religion; but how ministers of the Gospel, elders of churches and men who profess to be Christians can serve both God and Mammon is a mystery to us. When we read in the Holy Bible that "by their fruits ye shall know them," let us see how Masonry uses that Holy Word of God.

Many a time have Masons asserted to anxious inquirers that "they also use the Bible, it always lies open on the altar in open lodge; that they could not get along without it." And why? Because it is a simple piece of furniture with them, like their candlesticks, pillars, altars, etc., and in order to make their oaths more deeply binding upon the minds of their poor deluded candidates. Yes, it is used in the lodge, it is used to obligate a new-made brother as Satan quoted Scripture, like a rag to cover their unrighteousness; and on that same plan ministers of the Gospel, elders and lay members are made use of to give the devil and his followers a chance to crawl or hide behind their religious cloak; and for that same reason ministers of the Gospel receive their degrees gratis and are exempt from dues. As long as they can be feasted once in a while they are perfectly willing to play the part of chaplain; but remember! even if you do retire a little earlier from the boisterous boys, you have assumed the responsibility of all that transpires afterwards, all the drinking and uttering of blasphemies; and even more, by your presence you have encouraged several young and tender consciences to sink down a little deeper. If Rev. A. and Elder B. think it is all right, why should I hesitate? No, if you really and truly wish to serve Christ, "Come out from among them and touch not the unclean thing!" And remember that you give offense to all true Christians, many of whom know as well as you do what Masonry or secretism is, and those who do not, can with a little exertion inform themselves by reading the exposures for sale all over the country, and by simply watching the members thereof.

Freemasonry also makes its brag, that "Atheists cannot be made Masons," and knowing from personal experience that many an atheist belongs to the craft, let us see why. When asked, "In whom do you put your trust?" the answer follows: "In God." Most of them would naturally answer that, as the question is put to the candidate immediately after a prayer; and those who do not are prompted and simply considered a little green. But to show up the real fact why the devil instructed his followers to make use of the name of God, is answered in the explanation of the form of initiation by their Worshipful Masters. "You were asked, 'In whom do you put your trust?' Because according to our Masonic institution no atheist can be made a Mason. You therefore professed your belief in Deity, otherwise no oath or obligation would have been considered binding upon you."

Thus you can see it is not to adore and worship God, but to simply make their oaths more binding. It is disgusting to think that men can sink so low as to worship such religion; but how much more are such men to be pitied and prayed for, who profess and pretend to be Christ's ministers and followers and act openly the part of teachers in false doctrines. Brethren and sisters in Christ, "beware of the wolves in sheep's clothing!"

The Last State Dinner.

Conscience and high principle, aided by woman's tact and devotion, have won many a victory but none more remarkable than that which has recently entitled Mrs. Hayes anew to the thanks and admiration of the Christian people of America and the world. The occasion was the brilliant state reception given at the White House in honor of the official representatives of foreign governments at the national capital. Besides these, the assembly included a large number of very distinguished guests, including cabinet officers, judges of the Supreme Court, military officers of high rank, senators and representatives, and others of distinguished station. In the state dining-room a sumptuous collation was spread, and coffee, chocolate and lemonade were served, but no wines. The Washington correspondent of the New York Times says: "It is understood that it was the original intention to furnish wine, in consideration of the presence of the foreign ministers, but this order was subsequently countermanded by direction of Mrs. Hayes." On previous occasions when state dinners have been given in honor of the diplomatic corps, the influence of Secretary Evarts has prevailed so far that wine was furnished to the guests, though none were placed at the plates of the President or his wife. For this Mrs. Hayes was not strictly responsible, as the dinner was under the direction of the Secretary of State. On the last occasion Mrs. Hayes had her way and the country thanks her for her courage and principle. The Washington Star says: "Mrs. Hayes is being strongly reinforced on the wine question by all who attended the entertainment of Tuesday evening, since the universal comment is that the order preserved in the supper-rooms was in such agreeable contrast to the indecorous behavior at many parties, even small ones at private houses given during this and other seasons, where wine was served. At some small parties it has even become necessary to remove the decanters after they had been on the table. Surely it is better not to offer wine to one's guests than to rebuke them, even tacitly, by withdrawing it before the evening is over. A widely-circulated account of intoxication at a recent handsome entertainment, and gross violation of decorum in the supper-room, is mentioned whenever the events of the season are discussed, and the conclusion of all such conversation is, 'Mrs. Hayes is right, after all, about the matter.'"—Christian Statesman.

Helping Words.

In great religious reforms the simple affirmation of truth is not enough; there must be the corresponding formal negation of error, so that no misconception may be possible. Paul, therefore, laid the ax to the root of the tree which was to fall—to the root of that narrow and impotent legalism which had overspread the church with its deadly shadow.—E. de Pressense.

A fellow was drumming around our streets last Thursday afternoon trying to get up another secret organization. It is to be christened the "Royal Templars of Temperance." Ten years hence it will probably be numbered with the things that were but are not. Still some people will have to try it. The query is, Is it more secret or insurance company? Its titles smack rather strongly of the former. Be sure you are right before you go ahead in joining any new association of which you know little or nothing and which has not been fairly tested. Better insure with some reliable company, is our opinion. But we add not.—Sandy Lake News.

The Central Christian Advocate thinks that since the members of the Oneida Company of Western New York form a secret society, "it will be exceeding difficult if not impossible to convict them before a civil tribunal." Yet the editor admits that the offense of the company is quite as great as that of the Mormons, and that he should be glad to report the success of the movement to indict it before the civil courts. We suppose the editor knows that all secret societies are above the civil courts. If he is a member of a secret society himself he surely knows this alarming fact, and if he is not a member of one he knows it as do all other well-informed outsiders. The only question is, "What are we outsiders going to do about it?"—Religious Telescope.

The United Presbyterian of Pittsburgh, Pa., in a recent issue says: "When the Rev. Dr. Tiffany, pastor of St. Paul's Episcopal church, in New York city, was presiding at a union meeting one day during the Week of Prayer, a 'well-dressed, good-looking man' arose and began to say: 'The greatest enemies of Christ are the Freemasons.' The chairman promptly said: 'My friend, you are out of order. We are here to pray for the church of Christ, not to criticise anybody.' The man disappeared, the meeting went on, and Dr. Tiffany is praised as showing 'real tact in managing a meeting.' Now, suppose the man had begun to speak against Communism, Nihilism, and the 'bigots who use nothing but Psalms' in the worship of God, would he have been dismissed with equal readiness under the excellent management of the President? But it is encouraging to know there was one man resolute enough to rise in such a place and utter even so slight a protest."

—If any business man had proved a defaulter to the extent Archbishop Purcell has defrauded the confiding people of his diocese, it would have been the occasion for vigorous denunciation and thorough and unsparing investigation. The Roman Catholic church appears to very poor advantage in this matter. It has been the occasion for weak declarations of the entire innocence of the prelate, and for maudlin appeals to the sympathy and the charity of his fellow churchmen. The Archbishop himself has just published an elaborate letter appealing for the means to pay his debt of nearly four millions of dollars. The lottery scheme has been quashed by the quick appeal of the Protestant community to the law and the constitution of the State—a fine illustration of the value of constitutional provisions in the interest of morality and religion. The only suggestion which we have seen which is likely to infuse some healthful moral lessons into this whole miserable business is the statement that the United States authorities intend to bring an action against the Archbishop for not listing the great amounts deposited with him for taxation. Many of the depositors who are now loudest in their demand for their money put it in the hands of Father Purcell to avoid the payment of taxes.—Christian Statesman.

—James Auten of Galion, Ohio, writes that he has a large stock of the "Master's Carpet" and is ready to supply those who have given him their subscriptions for same, and all others in the neighborhood of Galion who want the book, at $1.00 per copy.

—A disgraceful suit is now being tried in the circuit court at Princeton, Ill., between a Mr. Holiday and Dover township, Bureau county. This is its third trial, over a hundred witnesses are called, a number of lawyers are engaged, and the expenses are likly to be thousands of dollars. The dispute is over a piece of land worth about $25 required in laying out a road. Either madness siezes contestants at such times or they are too much are under the influence of swindling lawyers to use their reason; otherwise such folly would be unknown.

Our Washington Letter.

Fighting for the Spoils in Congress — The Government Employes— Masonic Office-grabbers and Hard Times—High Officials Screened by the Lodge—How it Works with Congressional Investigations.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 31, 1879.

At this writing Senators and Members of Congress are holding out the idea that they will not entertain any general legislation, but will confine themselves to the objects for which the extra session was called, viz., passing the army, legislative and executive appropriation bills. It is even reported that the House will not have its committees reported until next session. The Senate committees have already been made up and it is now ready for business.

The Republican employes of the Senate are considerably worked up over the prospect of their being "bounced." As now organized the Senate has eight Democratic majority, and it feels as if it was entitled to have its surrounding employes of a like political complexion, while more than one of the aforesaid employes feels that the Senate ought to set a good civil service reform example by retaining them under its rules which prohibit their removal unless sanctioned by the Vice President. As a matter of course the Democrats having the majority will soon set aside this rule and change the employes, and then reenact the rule to try Republicans when they get the Senate again.

All these changes, however, affect neither your readers nor myself, for the simple reason that the employes are to a man oath-bound members of secret societies; if they were not, they never could have obtained the places in the first instance.

Washington is the "Mecca" of Masonry. Indeed it seems as if all the important offices were filled by Masons and more than nine-tenths of the lesser ones. Taking all the various departments of the government into consideration, there are about eight thousand employes of the government holding office in this city. The offices range from $600 per annum to the $50,000 of the President. You can see from this the extraordinary expenses of the government in the way of salaries, and can calculate that if the Masons have nine-tenths of them, which in my opinion is not exaggerated, how much food and provender for the grand feasts the grand lodges get out of the lower members of the order. Indeed, if Masons exclude all other classes of citizens from office all over the country as they do in this city, it is fair and reasonable to presume that the substance of the country goes to support their treasonable and diabolical society. Look at the great mass of poor people out of employment. They, if you will stop them and inquire, are not Masons or other secret society men. All the employment of the country is given to secret society men. Yet these poor non-Masons attribute their want of work and inability to obtain employment to the hard times, as do other casual observers; never once attributing the hard times to the want of confidence in the country caused by secret societies running the courts and legislation in the interests of illegal and corrupt combinations, and to the fact that while the non-Masons in the country are to the Masons as ten to one, the Masons are holding nearly all the offices, in fact being supported by the non-Masons, and then discriminate in favor of their own members, against the very community that supports them.

Since the above was written the Senate has "bounced" the Masonic Republicans in its employ and is busy substituting Masonic Democrats in their places. I have been a Republican, but am now an Independent, because the Republican party has sold its honor in its efforts to screen Masonic scoundrelism in its ranks; and because I discovered that nearly all the offices were filled by Masons, while the great mass of voters were opposed to such concerns.

Look back for the last ten or twelve years at the men who have brought discredit upon the Republicans, and upon scrutinizing them as closely as I have done here in Washington, you will find every one of them to be Masons; in good standing in the lodge I suppose. Yet we are told: "There are no Masons in the penitentiary." When after the election in 1876, Mr. Hayes wrote that celebrated letter of his, concerning the election of Tilden and that, he, Hayes, would not oppose the will of the people, I for one was glad that such a reverse had befallen the party. I thought that four years of Democratic rule, with its consequent chaos and confusion, would relegate that party to where it belonged, and the Republicans having learned from bitter experience that they couldn't carry the load of crafty and dishonest Masonic scoundrelism, would come to the front again rejuvenated in the work of civilization and progress. I am afraid however that the demoralizing events which followed the electoral bill, have not benefitted the Republican or any other party, but have had a tendency to distract and demoralize our whole society.

What do you think of an Assistant Secretary of the United States Treasury slipping out of the palatial rooms of the Treasury Department and walking down to the criminal court here to stand trial and be convicted? To be sure, being a prominent Mason, he was granted a new trial and the "thing set right" by an acquittal. Or of a Secretary of the United States Treasury, a Mason of thirty-three degrees, coming down from his exalted position and barely escaping indictment and prosecution for using his official signature in such a way that it dispensed too freely with Uncle Sam's money.

I have witnessed such things, and the records of these investigating committees of Congress for the last ten years under both Republican and Democratic sway, reveal facts not at all flattering to Masons who think penitentiaries made for people out of their order.

Let me give you a sample. This I know, because I heard fifteen of the witnesses give their testimony and investigated to find out if the members of Congress were Masons and if the parties charged were.

An officeholder here was charged with crime in connection with outsiders in swindling the government and defrauding soldiers of their dues. Although the witnesses testified with the greatest clearness to the facts, nothing was done to convict the criminals. I noticed that two of the members on the sub-committee of three were very slow about getting to work in the committee-room, and that it was almost impossible to get them to attend or say when they would attend (as a matter of course if a majority of the sub-committee did not attend there could be no further inquiry). I happened to speak to one of these members (a Democrat) about the case, and he remarked that was "no use to go on with the investigation; that no matter what was proved they (meaning thereby the President and John Sherman) wouldn't remove the parties." This struck me as very singular, and upon inquiry I found that he was a Mason; that the other member working with him in the delay was also a Mason, and that the alleged criminals were both high in the Masonic order here. Now I frankly asked Mr. Glover of Missouri, the other member, who seemed most anxious to push the criminals to the wall, if he was a Mason, and found that he was not. Now let us look at the result.

1st. These alleged criminals (I speak only of the proceedings before this one sub-committee which I saw) are still holding offices of honor and profit, when the garb of a penetentiary would become them with infinite grace.

2nd. The Masonic Republican papers all over the country gloried in the fact that Glover was bringing down two Democratic (Masonic) rascals while he was catching one (Masonic) Republican, instead of regretting that there should be one Republican to be caught.

3rd. The Democratic Masonic journals all over the country believed what the Masonic Republican papers said, and did all they could to embarrass Glover in bringing down any more Masonic rascals of either party.

4th. The Masons in the House of Representatives of both parties joined together to prevent Glover from getting the floor to make reports from his committee of these Masonic rascalities, and to prevent his obtaining leave to have the evidence printed (if printed you know it would be more accessible and more easily read by the public).

5th. The most eager man I have heard of in the attempt to suppress Glover and prevent the testimony of his committee being printed for the convenience of the public, was this same Masonic Democratic Congressman who told me that it was "no use to go on with the investigation because they wouldn't have these criminals removed, no matter what was proved."

Now these are facts, and if you see fit, publish them. I think it about time that we should hang out the battle-flag that Masons must take a back seat and let honest men rule this country. O. N.

Correspondence.

From Birmingham, Iowa, Again.

Editor Cynosure:—An article appeared in the Birmingham Enterprise of last week entitled "Then and Now," in which the writer endeavored to make it appear that the people of Birmingham were much more happy, prosperous and contented before they had any light on the subject of Masonry than they are now, taking it for granted that "ignorance is bliss."

Three or four years ago, says the Enterprise, Birmingham was almost a paradise, no one even hinting that Masonry was any thing but a noble and charitable institution, but now —ah yes, now light has shone in and there are some that choose light rather than darkness. Now Masonry is in trouble; they have no more secrets to sell, and the vocation of the tyler is gone. To cap the climax of their misery their sacred word is pronounced aloud on the streets, and not always on the five points of fellowship. The Enterprise thinks it a terrible state of affairs because there are those who refuse longer to be led hoodwinked and cable-towed wherever Masonry chooses to lead, and so bitterly are they opposed to men thinking and acting for themselves that a Mason who is a professor of Christianity and a class-leader, turned off one of his employes becaused he refused to vote the Masonic ticket at our late school election; and another, a Royal Arch, and a member of the Methodist church and a doctor, went to the polls with a loaded revolver, insulted a young doctor who is an "anti," said that he intended to insult him, and when our young doctor resented it, drew his revolver on him; but the weapons of the other were not concealed as were those of the Royal Arch, and it took but one blow of his natural setting-maul to bring Hiram to the arms of his friends and brother Masons. No wonder the people are divided, for "how can two walk together except they be agreed," "or what fellowship has light with darkness."

The Enterprise is also characteristic of Masonry in misrepresenting those gentlemen who have lectured here against Masonry. After speaking of Mr. Hinman as being the first to expose the abominations of the lodge, he says, then came one Edmond Ronayne, who pictured out the members of secret societies to be worse than horse thieves, when the facts are that Mr. R. told the people plainly and repeatedly that it was not Masons as individuals that he was contending against but Masonry.

Again, says the Enterprise, "After a short time one Rev. Rathbun was brought here, who went over the same ground as Ronayne, only more indecently." Well, now Masonry is indecent, a very stench in the nostrils of decency, but, then, neither Edmond Ronayne nor D. P. Rathbun made Masonry, and whatever there was of indecency Masonry is responsible for it.

The Enterprise objects to a song sung by Mr. Rathbun, "There are no Masons on the other shore," that is, in heaven where all Christians expect to go, but Masons don't say any thing about going to heaven; they don't even pray to go there; but to the "grand lodge above." Now Christians don't want to go to a grand lodge anywhere, they want to go to heaven where they can be with Christ and meet their mothers, sisters and little ones, who are carefully excluded from all lodges. Oh no! Christians don't want to go to any lodge any where and if Masons go there of course they can't go to heaven.

Items from Oregon.

Wilbur, Oregon, Mar. 10, 1879.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I have been reading the Cynosure for about three years and it seems to me that every number is getting more in earnest for the Christian religion, and the advocates of the reform are growing stronger. My prayer is, may the Lord hasten the time when all Christians will see the necessity of separation from the worldly-minded, "who have the form of godliness but deny the power thereof." St. Paul says, turn away from them.

The death of J. B. Smith, of Oakland, Douglas county, Oregon, has revealed some interesting facts, which were, however, expected by his friends, as he was an honest man. When he came to die he expressed his feeling that Freemasonry would not do to die by; and said to his wife among his last words: "Do not allow any Freemason to come near me, or put his hand on me, or have any hand in my burial," and so it was. His wish was carried out to the letter, although the high priest heard of his death and came to the burial, but had no hand in the services. J. B. Smith was known throughout the State as an honorable man, and his testimony has had serious effect upon the lodge in Southern Oregon.

If all the dark deeds of the lodge were brought to light in Douglas county, methinks there would be another Morgan excitement. If that poor fellow who was thrown from a bridge with a rope around his neck could be raised from his grave some revelations would be made that would awake the sleepers in the lodge to see their danger; and if that mule that ran away with $14,000 in 1856 could have talked a strange story would be told and Hiram Abiff would cry out that it is perjury of the deepest dye.

There is a question to be debated in Roseburg, Douglas county, on the 22d inst., subject:

Resolved, That secrecy is a relic of the past ages and ought to be abolished.

I have had an invitation to participate in the debate by the affirmative side. The debate has grown out of what Rev. J. K N. Bell said in his address before the lodge in Roseburg. Yours for the cause,

F. R. Hill

A Good Sabbath School Topic.

Mansfield, O., Mar. 31, '79.

The United Presbyterian church here recommended the subject of secret societies for the fifth Sabbath of March. Yesterday our Sabbath school of Ontario, Ohio, spent almost two hours, double our usual time for Sabbath school work, on the same subject. Our lay members took active service in short speeches, and in my judgment did well. I pray God that all our churches may work both in prayer and discussion for cleansing our nation of all secret sins.

A brother who took an active part in our Ohio State meeting was at Ontario Sabbath school and gave us the cream of that convention I hope that some of our members who have kept their mouths closed will from this date lead off in working against all sin, especially Masonry with all its feeders.

I suppose the U. P. church has from 8,000 to 10,000 Sabbath schools. Suppose that every quarter one half of the above Sabbath schools should take up the sin of oath-bound secret societies and with God's blessing arouse ten in every school, making five thousand workers in our cause. Yes, we have thousands of workers now that have been working, but five thousand new and zealous workers would be glorious. In our locality we have Covenanters, Wesleyan Methodists and United Presbyterians all working for our cause. We are training our youth so that when their fathers are silent in the grave and their souls are with the angels they may keep on the work; so that if God's time for the overthrow of the secret dens of sin is not in our day it may be in our children's day.

I thank God that we have four pastors who are not ashamed to speak out against all the sins of our nation from their pulpits, all within a compass of seven miles.

The Cynosure is improving with God's blessing upon it, and by the prayers of the friends all together in my opinion the walls of the Mason Jericho must soon fall down.

Uncle John Finney.

They Keep their Pledges.

Very serious charges have been made against the Rev. Jas. Dixon of New Albany, Ill., who has been Methodist, Baptist, then again Methodist, and now just changed to the Disciples or Christians! He is a preacher of great ability, and was once over the church in Chicago now known as the Fourth Baptist. The reverend gentleman is, or, was, a Mason. The Rev. I. C. Tully, also of New Albany, we believe, who alluded in commendatory terms to Masonry in the opening sermon at the 33d St. church in Chicago on its "New Departure" from the 25th St. church lately, speaks in the Christian Standard of Mr. Dixon in the highest terms, and gives a curious illustration of what he regards as "conscientious and upright." He says: "It has been long known to myself that Bro. Dixon was examining our position as a religious people, and was fully persuaded that with the Disciples he ought to be, but my mind was that so long as he was allowed to teach in the Methodist church there he should stay, as his influence in leading them to the unity of the faith was thus increased. But for this he he been with us before."

We have heard of Jesuits disguised as Episcopalians to lead them to Rome, but to find Disciples or other bodies of Christians acting thus is very strange. H.

President Hayes not a Mason.

York, Pa., Mar. 15, 1879.

President R. B. Hayes:—Some of the anti-secret reformers think you are a Freemason, while others believe you are not a member of the fraternity. If you have no particular reason for declining to answer, will you please oblige myself and others by deciding the matter? Are you a Freemason? Very respectfully yours,

Edward J. Chalfant.

REPLY.

Executive Mansion, Washington, Mar. 20, 1879.

Dear Sir:—I am directed by the President to say, in reply to your letter of the 15th instant, that he is not a Freemason. Very truly yours, W. K. Rogers,

Private Sec'y.

Mr. Edw J. Chalfant, York, Pa.

Editor Cynosure:—Above you will find my letter to President Hayes, and also his reply.

Now, as the President may only know Freemasonry from its false outward claims or lying and deceptive pretensions, it becomes the duty of the anti-secret reformers to give him "more light," by showing him the "true inwardness" of the great Masonic ring. I therefore suggest that all anti-secret publishers send him a copy of their publications.

And it would be well for the N. C. A. to present him with a few books, such as "Secret Societies," by Gen. Phelps, President Finney's book, and also Mr. Ronayne's works.

The President is about to have a long and trying struggle with the worst Masonic conclave in the land. The Copperheads of both parties in Congress will no doubt meet on the sly in the Masonic dens in Washington, to perfect their plans, which may even include "murder and treason." They planned and executed the late rebellion; why shall we expect anything good, honest or patriotic them from now? Do we not yet understand what the so-called Democratic party is?

I desire to renew my request that all readers of the Cynosure join me in an effort to plant a few batteries in the city of Washington, where the Masonic foxes have holes without Flint, some of which are in the United States Treasury Department.

Yours truly, E. J. CHALFANT.

DEEDS THAT SHOULD NOT BE FORGOTTEN.

CEDAR HEIGHTS, Wis., March 25, 1879.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Please observe what the Masonic editor of the Dunn Co. (Wis.) News says in the last issue of that paper about the insanity of Will Fowler.

Upwards of a year ago the aged and much loved Anti-masonic friend, Rev. W. W. Ames of the same village where Fowler lives, was living in Mr. Ames' family, and had been for some time; and though from injuries received on his head he had been insane upwards of twelve years, he was and is still loved and respected by all his family and a large circle of relatives and friends, who cherished the memory of his former days of better days.

At the time referred to, the old man had become so violent that as in the case of young Fowler, his friends could no longer keep the knowledge of his affliction from a heartless and unfeeling world. The evidences of his insanity were for weeks as plain to outside observers as in Fowler's case. He had become so excited over the imaginings of his fast failing mind that the family had to watch him in his raving spells, lest he should go to the river or in some other way take his own life. These circumstances attracted attention for much longer time than in Fowler's case.

This editor, Rock J. Flint, with his usual zeal in all matters that were likely to give him opportunity to stab Mr. Ames, entered into gossip about the matter and used his influence to create prejudice against his family as to their treatment of the old man.

When that villainous Dr. Nichols, another of Mr. Ames' secret society enemies, boomed out upon the public ear the insane story of that afflicted old man, the fiendish satisfaction of Flint seemed to lack for perfection only to see Ames arrested for crime and arraigned for trial. Immediately his office, long a rendezvous for Mr. Ames' Masonic enemies, was unusually lively with certain of them, as hungry for the prey they were ensnaring, as was Flint himself.

In a short time Flint was talking as confidently of Mr. Ames' arrest as if the legal measures to that end were then being taken. He spared no time, pains, nor strength in endeavoring to convince the people that Mr. Ames was guilty. "Believe it, of course I do. And now that the old man has exposed him, Mrs. Ames is trying to get her own father into the asylum to cover up their guilt. If we could get the girl away from there we'd fetch her" (or words to that effect). And the girl was "got away," into the house of another Mason, and some of those fellows went in and out of the back way of that house like thieves, and in a few hours Mr. Ames was arrested on the ground of that insane man's story, put in the mouth of the girl.

Mr. Editor, when in a community like Menomonie, Wis., a minister of the Gospel, whose life is as "unspotted from the world" as is the life and character of Rev. W. W. Ames, and who has not an enemy in the world for other cause than his quiet, firm adherence to the principles plainly antagonistic to the Gospel and a free government, is so ruthlessly, so barbarously attacked and treated as he has been, by officials of civil and religious trust, men in regular standing in Congregational, Methodist and Episcopal churches, yet belonging to and shielded by an oath-bound secret institution of impostures, claiming herself "divine," "the handmaid of religion," "yea, the best institution on earth," and dating her origin from the year of light, yet holding high in her membership infidels, drunkards, liquor-dealers, gamblers, perjurers, leaders in treason and rebellion, and boasting that she controls the government,—when such things transpire, it is time for every Christian to awake and put on the whole armor of God for battle for the safety of our children and our country.

We think the people ought to have a full account of the circumstances of Rev. Ames' arrest and trial; also of the persecutions and attempt on Bro. Austin's life a few weeks ago. Keep such things before the people and they will soon come to see that free and Christrian institutions cannot long exist where organized secrecy prevails.

HOW TO MANAGE A CAUCUS.

YATES CITY, Ill., Mar. 18, '79.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A day or two ago my last letter in the Cynosure was read in the grange store in this place, and Mr. Robert Anderson, of Yates City Lodge, No. 448, declared that my statement, that Masons were bound to sustain the lodge right or wrong, was false. I now propose to show by Masonic authority that the statement is true.

I find in a work on Masonic Law by Robt. Morris, Past Grand Master, Masonic author, lecturer, etc., the following among his prefatory remarks:

"But it matters much to the reader earnestly bent on pursuing the science of Masonry according to ancient and universal principles, that he finds discrepancies, sometimes fundamental in their nature, in the usages of the craft around him. It is a little disheartening to the conscientious student of Masonry to discover that his covenant with the Grand Lodge and his covenant with the craft universal are not identical. This has startled, discouraged, disgusted many a young and zealous brother, who but for this had attained to be a bright light in the Masonic society. The first duty of the reader of this synopsis is to obey the edicts of his Grand Lodge. Right or wrong, his very existence as a Mason hangs on his obedience to the powers immediately set above him. Failure in this must infallibly bring down expulsion, which as a Masonic death ends all. The one unpardonable crime in a Mason is contumacy or disobedience."

Now these remarks, made as a preface to a code of Masonic law, ought to settle the question, and so I will proceed immediately to show by what means the fraternity obtain control of nearly all the offices in the country.

In 1865 I announced myself as a candidate for county surveyor of Knox county; but not being known as a surveyor, and not having any of the advantages that Masonry affords, I did not receive a vote in the county convention that I know of. Then in 1867 I again announced myself a candidate and by securing the services of W. H. Eastman, an influential Mason and a No. 1 manipulator of caucuses and conventions, I secured fifteen votes out of eighty-five in the Republican county convention. In 1869 I was not a candidate, being engaged as an engineer on a railroad. That year the county seat fight caused a break in the Republican county convention, and David Wiltse, a man who was not known at all as a surveyor, but who was a Mason, was the candidate of the bolters, and was elected. In 1871 I was a Mason in good standing, and being out of employment I again announced myself a candidate.

I then consulted the Worshipful Master on the subject, and he advised me to go in for the regular Republican nomination, and to keep perfectly quiet about it and let my friends (that is, my brethren) manage the matter for me. Right here I desire to say that no well-posted Mason who is a candidate for any office ever undertakes to manage such matters for himself; but he is considered as under Masonic obligation to ratify any arrangement made by his brethren in his behalf. Bro. John D. Roberts volunteered to do what he could to secure my nomination. Then, when the preliminary caucuses were held, three Masons and two outsiders were chosen to represent Salem township in the Republican county convention. At the time of the meeting of the convention I was confined to my house by sickness. After one or two informal ballots on candidate for surveyor, it was found to be an even thing between Mr. Ralph Voris and myself, with ten delegates from Abingdon holding the balance of power in favor of John B. Carson. Just before the formal ballot was taken Bro. Roberts went over to the Abingdon delegation, and, as I was since informed, promised on the square that, in the event of my election, I should deputize Capt. Carson. I received the nomination and as a matter of course I felt highly flattered until I learned the conditions upon which the Abingdon delegation had voted for me. In a few days I received the following communication from Capt. Carson:

DEAR SIR:—I am informed by our delegates to the Republican county convention of Sept. 7th, that I am favorably mentioned by your friends as deputy surveyor for this part of the county; in the event of your election, of which there can be but little doubt. My friends in this part of the county so understood the matter, but as you were not at the convention yourself, and your pleasure in the matter has not been expressed, an expression of the same is desirable to us.

Hoping to hear from you soon, I am very respectfully,

J. W. CARSON.

But I find that a full account of this matter is likely to cover considerable more ground than I at first anticipated, and as I wish to be thorough, I must postpone the further consideration for another letter. W. H. ROBINSON.

OUR MAIL.

W. S. Fulton, Dresden, O., writes: "Freemasonry is strong here and many Christian people look at it with indifference. They can't or don't want to see its hideous form. I read the Cynosure with delight and rejoice at the good work it is doing."

E. B. Palmer, Batavia, N. Y., writes: "Of the 10,000 subscribers Batavia ought to furnish at least 1,000. * * * When Mr. Ronayne was here about a year ago he pronounced Batavia to be the worst Masonic town he was ever in. It has four lodges of Freemasons, a lodge of Odd-fellows, and an encampment; a lodge of the Ancient Order of Working Men; one of the grange, one of the Good Templars, one of the Templars of Honor, and one of the Hari Gari. They are like the devils that infested the swine, their name is legion. But you know it is always darkest just before day, and every cloud has a silver lining. We will do all we can to advance the Cynosure and the cause it represents."

J. N. Norris & Son, Birmingham, Ia., write: "Rev. D. P. Rathbun is here working the degrees. He worked the first and third degrees at Fairfield a short time ago. We will send you a report of the meetings soon. Mr. Rathbun is a host in himself."

N. P. Eddy, Sheffield, Ill., writes: "I have been an Anti-mason ever since they murdered Morgan, and have worked against the lodge and expect to as long as I live. I am now in my seventy-fifth year. I have belonged to the regular Baptist church almost fifty years. I used to live in New York State and have been acquainted with John G. Stearns and David Bernard. Have heard them both preach and have read their books."

J. W. Hill, Mill Grove, O., writes:

"I think there are not many Freemasons here, but a considerable number of other orders. Most people admit that Masonry is wrong."

A. Sutherland, Belvidere, Ill., writes:

"This town, I think it is safe to say, it is controlled by the lodge. Perhaps if we had an underground postoffice some would dare to take the Cynosure."

William Haverstock, Zanesville, Ind., writes:

"We are still holding the fort, and by the help of God we will continue to hold it. I hope the reform movement will continue until secrecy will be banished from our land; at least till professed Christians will leave the lodges and come out from the world, and be entirely for the Lord."

J. W. Baldridge, Sen., Cherry Fork, Adams Co., O., writes:

"The truth is the people here need to be waked up on the subject of secret societies. I believe if J. P. Stoddard or some other good lecturer, would come among us and spend a week or ten days, and lecture and talk to the people it would have a good effect. I believe there are as many here who are opposed to secret orders as in any other part of the country, if they could only be made to see the importance of action. I hope you will send J. P. Stoddard to Adams county in the spring. I don't think it will be lost labor."

C. Powers, Brookline, Mo., writes:

"I have put my hand to the plow and don't expect to turn back."

G. H. Hesselink, Westfield, N. Y., writes:

"I am anxious to have everybody read my papers. I give them away, and send them by mail to friends, hoping and praying for the success of the cause that the Cynosure is laboring to promote."

W. Sperry, Waupun, Wis., writes:

"I am willing to do anything I can to help on the good cause. I like the Cynosure more and more."

A. B. Lipp, Martinstown, Mo., writes:

"I feel enlisted for the war. No quarter for secretism in the church or state. I now have promises out to lecture in my own county, also in Sullivan, Knox, Adair, Schuyler, Mason, Shelby, Monroe, and Ralls counties. Will not be able to get around until in August or September. To the friends of reform: I expect to be in the war of truth against error, or the worship of God through Jesus Christ against the worship of the devil through secret pagan rites. I aim to answer all the requests as fast as I can get around on horse back, and without expense, except what I eat and feed my horse while among you. If you call so fast and to such distant places that I cannot come on horseback, you will then have to wait, or pay way on the railroad, as I have not the means to meet that expense. I have heard from the mouths of hundreds of secretists open confession, both public and private, during the last eighteen months. Some of my bitterest enemies have come up and confessed like good fellows. Lord Jesus, give more power to thy truth."

R. Faurot, St. Louis, Mich., writes:

"I have been absent for a few weeks trying to revive a church utterly ruined by secret societies, and have succeeded on the ground of 'no fellowship with secretists.' I find a very healthy and vigorous anti-secrecy sentiment growing wherever I labor."

James S. Brown, East Mecca, O., writes:

"Freemasonry and its accomplices are a bane to civilized society, and the good the Cynosure is doing cannot be overestimated."

John K. Glassford, Carthage, Mo., sends for Morgan's Exposure of Masonry, and writes:

"I find this book to be a great help in 'killing Hiram' here. I wish it was in the hands of every young man in America."

John T. Comstock, Rollin, Mich., writes:

"Freemasonry has lost caste in our community most remarkably since the trap door of the lodge was lifted to the public gaze of thousands by Edmond Ronayne, at our late anti-secret State Convention in Michigan."

J. L. Condon, Mt. Pulaski, Ill., writes:

"I have the people in my charge stirred up on this subject of secrecy. They want light. I propose to keep the matter before the people."

James Robinson, Washburn, Ill., writes:

"I am glad to see and read that the work is prospering. I see that the Presbyterians have broken the ice, and I hope they will keep it floating. I will send for some tracts as soon as I can. I have great faith in the tract business. May the Lord hasten the downfall of all secret societies."

Harvey Pease, Scipio, Ind., writes:

"I requested Bro. Scammerhorn, to send for the Cynosure for me, and that was the first number I ever saw. I have been taking it ever since, except when the office was burned. You may judge of my attachment to the paper. I suppose Bro. Blanchard has no knowledge of me, although I have been acquainted with him by report forty years. Indeed I am acquainted with nearly all of the Abolitionists and temperance men in the United States, but I never saw them. I would like to have some of the anti-secrecy lecturers call on me."

Henry Stevens, Lawrence, Kan., writes:

"I have been in Kansas about two years and find that this place is filled with secret societies."

R. D. Nichols writes:

"A Mason recently admitted that the Mohammedans, Mormons, etc., use each their own sacred book as their lodge Bible; so proving that, Masonically, the Koran, etc., are on a level with the Christian Bible, and that Masonry is a polybiblical institution. From this it is easy to conclude that it is also polydeistical. When Christian members of the Masonic lodge do deeds of charity, as Masons, do they ever think that God has not promised to accept only that which is done in the name of his Son, if done to Christians, done to them as such, and not as to Masons?"

James Powers, St. Charles, Ill., writes:

"The craft have hung a white and black crape on my shop door, and they charge me with being crazy and a fanatic and a fool, but none of these things move me, for I know in whom I have believed. Yours for the war until Masonry goes down."

W. K. Morley, Brush Creek, Ia., writes:

"There is a lodge of forty Freemasons here, besides some outsiders who don't attend the lodge. Some of them have taken only one degree, and are evidently ashamed of that, but their mouths are closed. The United Brethren have built a neat brick church during the last season, and I think have good subscriptions not due yet to pay all arrearages. They have gained considerably in numbers since last spring."

J. B. Cressinger, Sullivan, O., writes:

"I am of the impression that if each one friendly to the Anti-masonic cause would feel as much interested as they should, and as the cause demands, there would be but little trouble to raise the subscription list of the Cynosure not only to ten thousand but to fifteen or twenty thousand. I would say to all, Lend a helping hand, the cause is of God, and must and will succeed, though earth and hell oppose. Now, if you wish to share in the victory, enlist now. Our Captain is King Jesus, and he never sustains a defeat."

LESSON XVI.—April 20, 1879.—QUEEN ESTHER.

SCRIPTURE.—Esther 4:10 17.

10. Again Esther spake unto Hatach, and gave him commandment unto Mordecai:

11. All the king's servants, and the people of the king's provinces, do know, that whosoever, whether man or woman, shall come unto the king into the inner court, who is not called, there is one law of his to put him to death, except such to whom the king shall hold out the golden scepter, that he may live: but I have not been called to come in unto the king these thirty days.

12. And they told to Mordecai Esther's words.

13. Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house more than all the Jews.

14. For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed; and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?

15. Then Esther bade them return Mordecai this answer:

16. Go, gather together all the Jews that are present in Shushan, and fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink three days, night or day: I also and my maidens will fast likewise; and so will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law; and if I perish, I perish.

17. So Mordecai went his way, and did according to all that Esther had commanded him.

DAILY HOME READINGS.

Esther 1:1-22; 2:1-23; 3:1-15; 5:1-17; 6:1-14; 7:1-10; 8:1-17.

[From International Quarterly.]

The Book of Esther contains a chapter of the history of the Jews in Persia, and "belongs in the fifty-eight years' interval between the sixth and seventh chapters of Ezra. It was after the dedication of the second temple, B. C. 515, and before Ezra and Nehemiah came to Judea, B. C. 458." The name of the writer is unknown, but as it is evident that he must have lived in Persia, and been an eye-witness of much that transpired, it seems probable that it was Mordecai. The story is told in a plain and instructive manner, that carries with it the evidence of its genuineness and value. It is customary for the Jews to read the book publicly in their synagogues at the feast called Purim, which is held about the first of March, to commemorate their deliverance at this time. It is objected that the word "God" is not in the book, and it has been well answered "that the name of God is not there, but the work of God is;" and the question is asked in reply, "If God is not there where is he? To our view, his glory—the glory of his goodness in caring for, and in shielding from harm his afflicted church—shines through every page."

The time given is B. C. 470. Xerxes which is simply the Greek form of Ahasuerus, reigned over Persia from B. C. 483 to B. C. 465. In his third year he assembled the princes from the 127 provinces of his vast empire to a feast, which lasted 180 days (chap. 1). This gathering was probably called to consult and arrange for the invasion of Greece, where he led an army estimated from 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 of men. At this feast Vashti, the Queen, was deposed (chap. 1:19-22), and on his return from Greece, after his defeat, Esther was made Queen, in the seventh year of his reign (chap. 2:16, 17).

The place, Shushan or Susa, at this time the chief capital of Persia, was 250 miles southeast from Babylon. It has been before us in our studies in Nehemiah. (See Neh. 1:1, and Lesson III).

The persons are Ahasuerus (Xerxes), the great warrior; Esther, the Queen, a Jewish maiden of the tribe of Benjamin, whose Jewish name Hadassah, signifying "the myrtle," was changed to the Persian name Esther, meaning "the star," or the planet Venus. She is described as very beautiful, and her character is one of the most perfect in the Bible. Mordecai, the Jew, the uncle of Esther, is a worthy representative of his race, displaying great reverence and faith with firmness of character, and became the Prime Minister of Persia; ranking with Daniel, Nehemiah and Ezra. Haman, we learn, was an Amalekite, descended from Agag, who was destroyed by Samuel (1 Sam. 15:32, 33), and was, as far as we know, the last of his race.

"The scepter, which is seen frequently (in the sculptures) in the king's hands, was a plain rod, about five feet in length, ornamented with a ball, or apple, at its upper end, and at its lower tapering nearly to a point. The king held it in his right hand, grasping it near, but not at, the thick end, and rested the thin end on the ground in his front. When he walked he planted it upright before him as a spearman would plant his spear. When he sate, he sloped it outwards, still, however, touching the ground with its point."—Rawlinson.

The following description of Persian royalty throws light upon this whole narrative: "The Persian king held the same rank and position in the eyes of his subjects which the great monarch of western Asia, whoever he might be, had always occupied from time immemorial. He was their lord and master, absolute disposer of their lives and property, the sole fountain of law and right, incapable himself of doing wrong, irresponsible, irresistible—a sort of god upon earth; one whose favor was happiness, at whose frown men trembled, before whom all bowed themselves down with the lowest and humblest obeisance."—Rawlinson.

[From the Westminster Teacher.]

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.—1. Concerning the providence of God. He foresees the calamities which in the ordinary course of human action through the evil passions of men will threaten his people. If, in his wise purpose, he suffers them to take place, it is in order to some good end which he contemplates, even when he does not disclose it. Often, however, he allows calamities to threaten, when it is his purpose to prevent them from coming to effect. In such cases, he provides agents and means to avert them, and sometimes before they are imminent. In this case, he brought Esther to the throne just in time to make her influence available for the succor of the Jews.

2. The efforts of the wicked to injure the innocent sometimes recoil upon their own heads.

[From Bible Class Scholar.]

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.—Upon the story of Esther. 1. It shows the absolute power which eastern despots had over the lives and liberties of their subjects. 2. It displays the wanton and reckless use often made of this power. 3. It gives us an inner view of the manner in which favorites were exalted and overthrown. 4. It does not mention the name of God, and thus illustrates that religion does not consist in using the phrases of piety. 5. It shows how the Divine will is operative on human events, even though concealed from view. 6. It exhibits the fact that the good are affected by the prevalent evils of their age. 7. Vashti, so far as appears from the record, did not receive any reward for her virtuous and womanly decision against the king's improprieties. But Providence brought great good out of the issue. Our sacrifice in the way of duty may lead to the good of others whom we have no thought of reaching. 8. Mordecai's permanent elevation, as contrasted with Haman's speedy overthrow, illustrates that the basis of enduring prosperity is rectitude of heart and conduct.

LEADING TRUTH.—God will deliver us from evil. His hand is in all events, and nothing can occur without his permission. And though we seem to be hopelessly entangled in difficulties he can find a way out of them. He may in some cases see that it is best for us to suffer for a time. But such suffering, if it comes upon us in true service, is itself in the way of deliverance.

RELATED TRUTHS.—We are to seek the Lord's help by earnest prayer.

We are to get others to pray with us for a desired object.

We should be brave and encounter risks for God and our fellow men.

We are to use means as well as to pray. Esther took the wisest course to capture the king's heart.

The good need to be sustained in duty by the sympathy of others. Esther knew that she had the most earnest and sympathetic wishes of Mordecai and her people.

Persuasion is often necessary to lead one to a wise and noble resolution. Mordecai's words decided Esther.

The lower motives may come in to aid the higher. Esther's knowledge that she should die if she did not venture, helped her to decide.

A good resolution once made should be carried out.

God's providence waits upon our decisions and actions.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 1879.

SERMONS FOR THE CYNOSURE.—Some have requested a weekly sermon for Sabbath reading in the family and in places where there are none but churches infected by the lodge leprosy. Arrangements are being made to meet this request. Prof. C. A. Blanchard has promised to supply us for a time.

THE CATHOLIC REVIEW, endorsed and commended publicly by the Romish bishops of Brooklyn, Charleston, S. C.; Wheeling, W. Va.; Portland, Me.; Hartford, Conn., and Providence, R. I.; Cardinals Cullen and McCloskey; as also by Jesuits, Dominicans, Lazarists, Redemptionists and Paulists (what a list to lay aside of the New Testament?) comes weekly charged with attacks on Joseph Cook, and whoever else ably represents Protestant Christianity. This may be an ill fact considering the spirit and temper of the work, but it is an excellent sign and will do good; though Papists, like Mormons, as a class, seldom read.

THE LEAVEN WORKS.—I have received files of Sycamore papers containing the following: A respected citizen, Z. B. Mayo, died and was buried by Freemasons. Rev. D. P. Baker, of the Free Methodist, called it a "strange religious burial service," neither atheist, military, Mohammedan, Mormon or heathen, and asked, "What was it?" If "gentile" and heathen are synonymous we think Bro. Baker might have called it heathen. Mr. A. J. Blanchard, Superintendent of Schools in Sycamore, who took a prominent part in the "strange" burial service, comes out boldly in the papers, and Rev. Mr. Baker replies. As Mr. Blanchard is said to be an able disciplinarian and a professed Christian we think the case deserves an extended analysis and explanation which, God willing, we will try and give the citizens of Sycamore next week, though the very able presentation of Mr. Baker leaves nothing to add in the way of argument.

PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE, U. B.

This Conference met in Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, March 5th, last month; fifty-seven members present and seven absent; Bishops Glossbrenner and Dickson presiding. It is now forty-two years ago that I first became acquainted with the United Brethren denomination. This Conference then reported in all some ninety preachers; and the hearts of the Abolitionists of the Eastern and Middle States, were made glad by my reports of this denomination, and the extracts which I gave from their minutes; promptly expelling from their connection some of their preachers in Maryland or Virginia, who had become slaveholders by marriage, giving them six months' grace, in which to "manumit or set free their slaves."

At that time John Rhinehart was editor of the Religious Telescope, then published at Circleville, Ohio, and as I looked through that Telescope down the vista of the future I saw this broad and mighty land without a man-merchant, a human auction block or a slave! What was then vision is now reality; though he who should then have predicted it would have been regarded as an insane enthusiast.

Mr. Noel kept the hotel where I stopped in Chambersburg, a stone building, opposite the court-house, on the town square. I had not spoken in the place, but it was known that I had applied for the Presbyterian church in order to do so. This was enough. A public meeting was called and the court-house was crammed to hear speeches denouncing the Abolitionists, by Archy Finley and others. Hon. John Chambers and Hon. Jas. Dunlap made speeches counselling law and order; but they might as well have sung psalms to a tornado. A mob of some two thousand met in the town square, in front of Mr. Noel's hotel. They were forbidden entrance, and brought a large stick of timber to beat in his door, swearing the walls should not stand unless Mr. Noel gave me up to their will. My chamber was directly over the door. There was no light in it, and I stood by the window and saw that maddened, surging crowd in the clear moonlight on the common before the house. All at once some one on the skirt of the crowd raised the cry, "Here he goes! here he goes!" and the whole multitude ran off toward the skirt of the town, supposing that I was out and making my escape. In the melee the man who raised the false shout to decoy them was lost, and his voice drowned in the hubbub; and the mob, ashamed that they had been fooled, sneaked away to their homes and left me to meditate on the vanity of popular applause. Two or three Abolitionists (secretly, for fear of the mob), came to see me that night; and we talked till a late hour. They said that a constable of the town had received several thousand dollars for the poor fugitive slaves who had reached Chambersburg, whom he had arrested and returned to the tortures of the lash; and that one man, a militia major, had taken a free colored woman and her five children and sold them as pretended fugitives, and bought a splendid uniform with the proceeds of the sale.

Old Dr. Denny was pastor of the Presbyterian church. He said he was opposed to slavery but did not think it would be wise to say any thing about it; and Rev Mr. Hoffman (Lutheran) said he was an abolitionist; that Dr. Schmucker of Gettysburg, was also; and he wished me God-speed, but said that if I wished to see him he would rather I would call after night! I was then a young licentiate, anxious, like others, for worldly popularity and success, and I mused whether I must do as these ministers did to obtain it; and whether God would hold them guiltless, while they lifted up no voice or cry against the terrible outrage and wrong then filling the land. I was then young and now am old; "yet I have not seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread."

But what has all this to do with the Pennsylvania Conference of the United Brethren? Just this. That conference is now treating the organized deism and horrible despotism of the lodge, as Chambersburg Christians forty years ago treated outrage on Christ in the persons of his poor! And God will as surely require it at their hands; as he put Chambersburg, afterward, in the power of the rebel forces of the slave power, for which they gave up Christ in the person of the least of his human brethren, the wretched, hunted and despised slave.

Masonry is worse than slavery. It sends more persons to hell. It excludes Christ; mutilates the Bible; destroys the oath; worships Satan; hides its true nature; is one stupendous mass of lies; counterfeits regeneration; substitutes itself for the atonement; promises heaven while sending men to hell; administers mock baptism; claims perfect sanctification for its dupes, and caricatures Christ and the resurrection of the dead! And while slavery was only local the lodge extends around the globe!

Yet this Pennsylvania Conference at its ninety-ninth session, dropped from its roll the excellent Rev. J. M. Bishop, for no alleged crime, vice or sin, but for disobeying a persecuting, pro-secrecy majority's attempt to silence him; and allowed another of its good ministers, Rev. John Fohl, who has served Christ in that church forty-three years to be assailed and insulted by the following which was read in conference, Chambersburg, March. 1879:

"Whereas, Rev. J. Fohl, in his remarks made this morning, insinuated that three-fourths of the memmers of Chambersburg quarterly conference were members of oath-bound secret societies, therefore, we, the members of said quarterly conference, respectfully submit that such is not correct, and challenge him for the proof. D. W. Proffit, Robt. Thompson, J. A. Lemasters, D. S. Byers, S. R. Ebersole, A. H. Rice, J. Huber, W. R. Shambargen, G. W. Fetterhoff, Wm. Humberger, Philip Lemasters, W. A. Dickson, W. K. Holby, C. R. Bowles, E. Hawbecker, B. F. Zarger, John Fuller, J. F. Croft, Hiram Herman, John Shafer and Peter Forney."

How the good Bishop Dickson must have blushed when that document was read against a good and godly old Brethren minister like Bro. Fohl! Mark, it does not say there are no Masons in that conference. It does not say that two-thirds of the quarterly conference are not members of secret societies of some sort. It does not say they are opposed to Masonry and in favor of their church rule against secret societies. It does not say that brother Fohl said what they impute to him, but only that he "insinuated," etc. And they were permitted to put that attack on an old Brethren minister on the conference records; a paper which he could not contradict, even if they had allowed him the opportunity, because of its vagueness. Under what rule, human or divine, did Bishop Glossbrenner allow the paper to be read and recorded against a minister of Christ whose only alleged fault is that he is loyal to his church and opposed to the lodge! "Doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it? And shall he not render to every man according to his work?"

Beloved brethren of the Pennsylvania Conference, you are compassed about with a great cloud of witnesses. If Abraham could see men in hell, Otterbein and Newcomer, and Boehm, and all the holy dead who who have gone to glory from your conference, are spectators of your proceedings, and if they do not sigh to see "the abomination that maketh desolate standing in the holy place;" to see members and ministers of the United Brethren church brothering the blacklegs of secret lodges againt the example of Christ, who "in secret said nothing," it is only because they are where "sorrow and sighing forever flee away." And you, persecuted brethren, "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which tries you; but rather rejoice that when his glory shall be revealed, ye also may rejoice with exceeding joy." 1 Pet. 4 :12.

DR. SAMSON'S BUREAU OF RELIEF.

The controversy which lately arose in the Baptist ministers' conference of New York, which resulted in the extraordinary vote to expel a member without investigation, and which a majority of only one-third of those present was allowed to carry, has brought one of the members into what must be considered an unmerited notoriety.

Dr. Samson, who during the war was preaching in Washington, and whose indifference on the great questions of that time were the cause of criticism, made remarks of a conciliatory character in respect to the papacy. Dr. J. D. Fulton in reviewing the remarks and the causes for sympathy with Romanism expressed in them, said "despotisms bolster up each other; the servant of one despotism is ever ready to help another. The South sought to bolster up a despotism whose corner-stone should be slavery. The government, at the head of which was Pio Nono, gave the Southern Confederacy its recognition. In spirit and in purpose these governments were in accord. Both sought to build up a central aristocratic power at the expense of the interests and liberties of the common people. Dr. Samson's sympathy for Rome could not be explained save on the supposition that a conservatism which prevented a man occupying a prominent pulpit at the national capital, through all the years of the war, from ever opening his mouth to say one word in favor of liberty, now enables him to read an essay which ignores the teaching and the truth of revelation."

For this speech, intended only to show the unreliability of Dr. Samson and the danger of following his advice on such questions, Dr. Fulton was expelled. The details of this unfortunate affair are given more at length in our religious news. How just and safe was this criticism may be judged from sentiments from the same source in the Standard of this city of the 3d inst. In an article on "Business Ventures in Institutions for Christian Education," Dr. Samson refers to Archbishop Purcell's recent letter as a "touching appeal," the "affecting apologetic address to Protestant as well as Catholic friends, made by a self-sacrificing worker now eighty years of age which moves to sympathy any man that has a heart to feel;" and in the face of the enormous debts crushing the life from churches and colleges in his own Baptist denomination, which to say the least are not supposed to be dishonorably contracted; in the face of the fact that mission enterprises under the shadow of the Vatican are asking for help every year; and that part of the funds used by the Cincinnati prelate were put into his hands to avoid taxation, and the whole was used by him to build up priest-craft in America,—in spite of all this Dr. Samson asks whether it would not be a good investment for a million American Protestants to send Archbishop Purcell a dollar each to relieve those he has despoiled! These are his words:

"Would it not honor Christ, and win our varied people to him and his Gospel, if American Christians, who flooded famishing Ireland with food, should flood the aged Archbishop with the one million of the dollar contributions he asks, not for debts on churches and cathedrals, which are only alluded to in his appeal, nor even for the embarrassed institutions which he makes prominent in his statement as having involved him fatally by the support given them; but suppose it should result that American Christians irrespective of denomination, should, to the number of one million, send their dollars for the poor and unfortunate foreigners who have lost their hard-earned savings in the ebb-tide that had overtaken them."

This sentiment, the Standard, learning wisdom from the fate of Dr. Fulton, prints with a word of indifferent notice; and no one can tell whether it would not passively look on, and see its readers actually following this advice, while Baptist churches and colleges here in Chicago are ready to be sold under the hammer. But the publication of such sentiments is the best vindication of Dr. Fulton before American Christians, who will not soon be persuaded to believe that the scarred trunk of Romanism is a fair tree though whitewashed with abundance of flabby sentiment.

—Bro. Stoddard spent the Sabbath with Bro. M. R. Britten, Vienna, Wis., and spoke in the Baptist church at Spring Prairie. He expected to return by Tuesday of this week.

—Elder J. F. Browne called on us last Thursday. He has engaged to visit Carroll county, Illinois, next month and speak some twenty or thirty times all through the county.

—At the late town meeting at Lostant, Ill., no Freemason was elected--one good result of the goodly number of subscribers to the Cynosure at that point, and the lectures that have been given there in Osgood's Hall.

—Dr. S. L. Cook was in Fountain county, Indiana, last month and spoke on the evenings of the 18th and 19th in Harmony church. Bro. H. G. Owen sends word of the meetings, and speaks very highly of Dr. Cook as a lecturer, believing that he did justice to his subject, and deserves praise for his pointed attacks on the lodge, which were yet tempered with a Christian spirit.

—The notice of the work of Bro. D. B. Turney in Sugar Grove church, Pennsylvania, in our religious columns, should not be overlooked. Friends who are contributing missionary money, where they have a reasonable assurance that it will strengthen churches either openly favorable or at least acquiescent toward the lodge will do well to retain their offerings to aid such work as Bro. Turney is engaged in.

—Friend Hibbs of Mill Grove, Pa., sends a notice of sheriff's sale, at the Susquehanna Hotel in the town of Catawissa, Columbia Co., Pa., on the 27th ult., of certain real estate and buildings, which was "seized, taken into execution and to be sold as the property of the Catawissa Masonic Association." The lodge and chapter worshiping in this hall must be nearly extict to allow themselves to be sold out.

N. C. A. Annual Business Meeting.

The time fixed in the by-laws of the National Christian Association for the annual business meeting of the incorporated body is the third Wednesday in June of each year. The meeting occurs this year on the 18th day of the month and will D. V. be held at 221 West Madison street, Chicago, at the "home and headquarters" of our reform

I wish in this connection to call attention to the approval of the Board of Directors of the action of the Michigan, Ohio and Iowa Associations in sending representatives to attend this annual meeting and more especially of their request that other States should do the same. Harmony of action and mutual confidence between the National Christian Association and all co-operating associations is essential to the most efficient prosecution of our common work; and to this end, if for no other reason, we should cultivate and maintain a more intimate acquaintance.

I know of no better means of promoting this end than by mingling in these annual gatherings.

Where States do not hold a meeting at which to appoint such representatives before June 18th next, it would be proper for the Executive Committee in the several States to act so far as they have authority in the premises.

Shade, O., Mar. 17, 1879.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Mr. Edmond Ronayne has been with us at this place and ably proved himself to be what he professes to be—Past Master of Masons. He proved most clearly that Masonry was heathen or sun-worship, and gave the ministry who have gone into this abominable idolatry a severe rebuke, and made a clear demonstration in working the degrees that men trifle with sincerity, virtue, truth and fair dealing, and that the pure principles of Christianity are corrupted, our laws overborne and our courts made mock trials by the lodge. I hope it will long be remembered in this community for good. I will only add that I pray God to give Mr. Ronayne health, strength and ability to continue his work and fulfill his mission, and give him grace to bear and forbear with his Anti-mason friends in the cause of reform and be careful and not throw cold water on his liquid fire.

Yours in the cause of reform,
H. Witham.

Freemasonry Exposed Lets Loose its Vile Spirits.

Zanesville, Allen Co., Ind.,
March 29, 1879.

Elmond Ronayne visited this place this week and worked the first three degrees of Masonry. The results were something more than usual. The craft became utterly unstrung and made every effort that they thought it safe to make to break up the meetings, going to greater lengths than usual. When they could not do this, they resorted to visiting clandestinely the premises of those interested in the meetings and took vengeance upon the property of such. The excitement reached a hight above anything ever experienced in this place before, and for meanness the recent and numerous cases of grave-robbing in the place bear no comparison.

On the second night of the meeting they procured some drugs and threw them into the windows upon the audience. At first it was thought to be chloroform. It immediately filled the house with a suffocating odor, and came near producing a stampede, which, had it not been for the presence of mind of some would have resulted in the killing and wounding of many, as the house was densely packed. It was soon discovered not to be chloroform, but some other very odious and deleterious drug. A number of persons were seriously injured by it and are still laboring under its effects, but it is hoped that no deaths will occur.

On the last night of the meetings there were large accessions of roughs who were ready for anything their master should suggest. Numerous parties were sent out through the neighborhood to visit vengeance upon the instigators of the meeting. The horse of Rev. P. B. Williams, United Brethren preacher of the place, was shaven mane and tail, and his buggy mutilated. Other stables of the vicinity were visited with the same results. The work was done complete enough to satisfy the most fastidious. Numerous cases of theft occurred, and other malicious work that I need not mention. These are some of the Masonic arguments of Zanesville, Ind.

A correspondent writes to the American Wesleyan: "Some time ago the Spring Creek Literary Society, had up for discussion the following:

Resolved, That secret societies are opposed to Republicanism.

Our good brother, Uncle Merritt Sabin, living near Durand, Wisconsin, was challenged to take the affirmative, and choose an assistant. The writer was requested to speak for him. For judges, three of the best men in Buffalo county were chosen, who all decided in favor of the affirmative. The secretists not satisfied with the ending, changed the form of the question, thus:

Resolved, That secret societies are beneficial to a free government and an aid to religion.

The affirmants of the former question were challenged to take the negative of this, which they did; the judges at this debate were all of them members of secret societies, yet two out of three decided for the negative. We do not need to set forth the arguments used in this discussion, but we will just say that we brought them from the Word of God, and the published teachings and principles of secretism.

Thus the battle goes on, and the light is extended by conquest."

A Prayer.

I ask not wealth, but power to take
And use the things I have aright;
Not years, but wisdom that shall make
My life a profit and delight.

I ask not that for me the plan
Of good and ill be set aside,
But that the common lot of man
Be nobly borne and glorified.

I know I may not always keep
My steps in places green and sweet,
Nor find the pathway of the deep
A path of safety for my feet.

But pray, that, when the tempest's breath
Shall fiercely sweep my way about,
I make not shipwreck of my faith
In the unbottomed sea of doubt.

And that, though it be mine to know
How hard the stonIest pillow seems,
Good angels still may come and go
On the bright ladder of my dreams.

I do not ask for love below—
That friends shall never be estranged;
But for the power of loving, so
My heart may keep its youth unchanged.

Youth, joy, wealth—Fate, I give thee these;
Leave faith and hope till life is passed;
And leave my heart's best impulses
Fresh and unfailing to the last.

For this I count, of all sweet things,
The sweetest out of heaven above;
And loving others surely brings
The fullest recompense of love!

Anecdotes of an old Puritan Minister.

Rev. Mr. Moody flourished at an early day in New England, having been ordained in 1700. A number of well-authenticated anecdotes illustrative of his character and manners have lately been published. Our readers will find some wholesome instruction as well as amusement in the following:

A couple of strangers called on Father Moody one day, early in the forenoon. Their horses were put out, and he took them into the sitting-room and engaged in conversation with them. His wife a opened a door from another room and beckoned him to come to her. He went, and she said to him in a low tone, "Dear Mr. Moody, what shall we do? We have nothing to set before these men for dinner." "Never mind; set the table, and I do not doubt that the Lord will send us something by dinner time." One of his church-members, who lived in sight, and saw the men call at the parsonage, said to her daughters, "There are a couple of strangers gone to Mr. Moody's and I guess it is pretty short times with them; let us prepare a dinner and send it in." They did so, and thus the set table was furnished in season.

One morning late in the fall, after snow had begun to come, he rose early, before his wife, and while he was making a fire in his kitchen, there came in a poor woman and asked if Madam Moody had not a pair of old shoes that were better than hers, that would keep her feet from the snow and cold ground. Mr. Moody took his wife's shoes and gave them to her, and she went off delighted. By and by Mrs. Moody arose and could find nothing of her shoes. Mr. Moody, hearing her inquire for them, said, "I gave them away to such a poor woman this morning." "Why, Mr. Moody, how could you do so when you knew they were all the shoes I had in the world?" "Never mind; the Lord will send in another pair before night, I don't doubt." And the prediction was verified; in the course of the day a new pair of shoes was actually sent to her.

One time Father Moody was some distance from home, and called on a brother in the ministry, thinking to pass the Sabbath with him, if agreeable. The brother appeared glad to see him, and said: "I should be very glad to have you preach for me to-morrow, but am almost ashamed to ask you." "Why, what is the matter?" "Our people are in such a habit of leaving before the meeting is closed, that it seems to be an imposition on a stranger." "If that is all, I must and will stop to preach for you." When the Sabbath day came, and he had named his text, he said: "My friends, I am going to preach to two sorts of folks to-day, saints and sinners. Sinners, I am going to give you your portion first, and I would have you give good attention." He went on and preached to them as long as he thought proper, and then paused and said: "There, sinners, I am done with you now; you may take your hats and go out of the meeting-house as soon you please." Of course no one availed himself of the permission.

Rev. Mr. Emerson, a relative of Mr. Moody's, occasionally spent a Sabbath with him, on which occasions he would read one of his well-written sermons, and numbers of Father Moody's hearers were very much taken with Mr. Emerson's well-studied discourses. "Oh! what instructive sermons—we can learn something from them," they were wont to say. Father Moody found it out, and thought within himself, "If I should once in a while write out a sermon in full, perhaps I might benefit those people who do not so well relish my random fires." So he concluded to put the matter to trial, and wrote a sermon with this object in view. After opening the meeting as usual, he began to read his manuscript, and kept on reading till he got tired, and then stopped and looked around upon the people and said, "Emerson must be Emerson and Moody must be Moody. I feel as if I had my head in a bag. You call Moody a rambling preacher, and it is true enough; but his preaching will do to catch up rambling sinners—you are all runaways from the Lord." And so he went on in his old way; he would not submit to be trammeled at that rate.—Ex.

The Western Cliff-Dwellers.

Of late, blown over the plains, come stories of strange, newly discovered cities of the far southwest; picturesque piles of masonry, of an age unknown to tradition. These ruins mark an era among antiquarians. The mysterious mound-builders fade into comparative insignificance before the grander and more ancient cliff-dwellers, whose castles lift their towers amid the sands of Arizona, and crown the terraced slopes of the Rio Mancos and the Hovenweep.

A ruin, accidentally discovered by A. D. Wilson, of the Hayden Survey, several years ago, while he was pursuing his labors as chief of the topographical corps in Southern Colorado, is described to me by Mr. Wilson as a stone building, about the size of the Patent Office. It stood upon the bank of the Animas, in the San Juan country, and contained perhaps five hundred rooms. The roof and portions of the walls had fallen, but the parts standing indicated a height of four stories. A number of rooms were fairly preserved, had small loop-hole windows but no outer doors. The building had doubtless been entered originally by means of ladders resting on niches, and drawn in after the occupants. The floors were of cedar, each log as large around as a man's head, the spaces filled neatly by smaller poles and twigs, covered by a carpet of cedar bark. The ends of the timbers were bruised and frayed, as if severed by a dull instrument; in the vicinity were stone hatchets, and saws made of sandstone slivers, about two feet long, worn to a smooth edge. A few hundred yards from the mammoth building was a second large house in ruins, and between the two strongholds rows of small dwellings built of cobble-stones laid in adobe, and arranged along streets, after the style of the village to-day. The smaller houses were in a more advanced state of ruin, on account of the round stones being more readily disintegrated by the elements than heavy masonry. The streets and houses of this deserted town are overgrown by juniper and pinon—the latter a dwarf, wide-spreading pine which beneath the scales of its cones delicious and nutritious nuts. From the size of the dead, as well as of the living trees, and from their position on the heaps of crumbling stone, Mr. Wilson concludes that a great period of time has elapsed since the buildings fell. How many hundred years they stood after desertion before yielding to the inroads of time cannot certainly be known.

The presence of sound wood in the houses does not set aside their antiquity. In the dry pure air of southern Colorado, wood fairly protected will last for centuries. In Asia cedar-wood has been kept a thousand years, and in Egypt cedar is known to have been in perfect preservation two thousand years after it left the forest. The cedars throughout the territories of the Southwest do not rot, even in the groves. They die and stand erect, solid and sapless. The winds and whirling sands carve the dead trees into forms of fantastic beauty, drill holes through the trunks, and play at hide-and-go-seek in the perforated limbs until, after ages of resistance, they literally blow away in atoms of fine, clean dust.

On the Rio San Juan, about twenty-five miles distant from the city of Animas, Mr. Wilson discovered the following evening a similar pile, looming solemnly in the twilight near their camping place. The scene as described was weird in the extreme. As the moon arose, the shadows of the phantom buildings were thrown darkly across the silvery plain. The blaze of camp-fires, the tiny tents, the negro cook, the men in buckskin hunting garb, and the picketed mules, made a strange picture of the summer's night, with background of moonlit desert and crumbling ruins, on whose ramparts towered dead, gaunt cedars, lifting their bleached skeletons like sheeted ghosts within the silent watch-towers of the murky past.—Scribner's Monthly.

A Lie Awfully Verified.

It is recorded of the saintly Archbishop Leighton, that traveling on one occasion from Glasgow to Dunblaine, he was overtaken by a tremendous storm of thunder and lightning. As the storm came on, he was seen, while still at a considerable distance by two men of bad character. Not having the courage openly to rob him, but wishing to hit upon some method of extorting money from him, one of them said, "I will lie down here by the wayside, as if I were dead; and you must tell the archbishop that I have been killed by the lightning, and beg money to bury me." When Dr. Leighton arrived at the spot, the wicked fellow told him this fabricated tale. The archbishop condoled with him and gave him money, and then proceeded on his way. But when the man returned to his companion, elated at his success, he found him really lifeless! Immediately he cried aloud, "Oh, sir, he is dead! oh, sir, he is dead!" On which the archbishop perceiving the fraud, left the man with this serious admonition: "See, it is a dangerous thing to trifle with the judgments of God!"—Christian Herald.

Jesting upon Scripture.

The evils arising from this practice are greater than appear at first. It leads, in general, to irreverence for Scripture. No man would jest with the dying words of his father or his mother; yet the words of God are quite as solemn. When we have heard a comic or vulgar tale connected with a text of Scripture, such is the power of association, that we never hear the text afterward without thinking of the jest. The effect of this is obvious. He who is much engaged in this kind of false wit, will come at length to have a large portion of Holy Scripture spotted over by this unholy fancy.

I'll Put it Off.

Some little folks are apt to say,
When asked their task to touch,
"I'll put it off at least to-day;
It cannot matter much."

Time is always on the wing—
You cannot stop its flight;
Then do at once your little tasks,
You'll happier be at night.

But little duties still put off
Will end in "Never done;"
And "By-and-by is time enough,"
Has ruined many a one.

Long Words.

"Rob," said Tom, "which is the most dangerous word in all the English language to pronounce?"

"Don't know," said Rob, "unless it is a swearing word."

"Pooh!" said Tom, "it is stumble, because you are sure to get a tumble between the first and last letters."

"Ha, ha!" said Tom, "now I've one for you. I found it one day in reading the paper. Which is the longest word in all the English language?"

"Valetudinarianism," replied Tom promptly.

"No, sir, its smiles, because there's a whole mile between the first and last letters."

"Ho, ho!" cried Tom, "that's nothing; I know a word that has over three miles between its beginning and ending!"

"Now what's that?" asked Rob faintly.

"Beleagnered," exclaimed Tom triumphantly.—Methodist.

Children Doing Good.

I am sure you will find out ways of showing kindness if you look for them. One strong lad I saw the other day carrying a heavy basket up a hill for a little tired girl. Another dear lad I met leading a blind man who had lost his faithful dog.

An old lady sitting in her arm-chair by the fire once said: "My grand-daughter there, is hands, feet and eyes to me."

"How so?"

"Why she runs about so nimbly to do the work of the house; she brings me so willingly whatever I want; and when she has done she sits down, and reads to me so nicely a chapter in the Bible."

One day a little girl came home from school quite happy to think that she had been useful. For there was a school-fellow there in great trouble about the death of a baby brother.

"And I put my cheek against hers," said her companion, "and I cried, too, because I was sorry for her, and after a little while she left off crying, and said I had done her good."

The Fisherman's Daughters.

CHAPTER VI.

Seeing no one else I determined to go myself to the Hall. Along the lonely roads, through fields and woods, over hills, down lanes, across commons, and sometimes bogs, I sped on; but haste as I would, not more than half the way was done, when night came on. It seemed to come faster than usual, on account of a thunder storm, which was coming faster still. The warm close day had brought it, and now there it was, grumbling quite near, and covering the whole sky with its black, fearful-looking clouds. Had I not known the road so well, from having often walked it with Sam and Tom, I should certainly have lost my way; but happily I was able, keeping one remembered object and another in view, to go steadily on.

Well, the storm came steadily on too—dreadful flashes of lightning, roars of thunder, and pouring rain. On I ran, and ran, often tumbling down, through striking my foot against stones, or roots of trees, in the darkness, but jumping up again not much hurt, and praying all the way to God, to bring me safe to my journey's end. Yet sometimes, I am sorry to say, I cried bitterly; but he did bring me to the end safely; and I reached the large gates, beside one of the lodges into the park. They were, of course, shut, and I could neither open them, nor make any one hear me on account of the wind and rain; so what did I do, but—high though they were—I climbed over them, and then ran on again. I was now sheltered by a great avenue of trees, through which the lightning shone in every direction, seeming, I thought, to be looking for my little wet figure with piercing, fiery eyes. At last I stood before a monstrous door. I feared to go to the back of the house on account of the dogs, so I managed on my toes, to ring the great bell—a very little ring, for it was so hard to pull. However, they heard it, and a big man-servant, I knew by sight, though he didn't know me, opened the door and stared down at me.

"Please, sir, I want to see Lady Barlow!"* I panted out.

"Lady Barlow?" he said, roughly, "what do you want with Lady Barlow?"

Elsie had told me to tell nobody but Lady Barlow, or one of the Miss Barlows, so I said again, "Oh, sir, please, I'll tell her when I see her!"

"No doubt you would, you little beggar! And do you think my lady is coming here to speak to such as you are, and at this time of night?"

"Please, sir," I persisted humbly, "I can go and speak to her."

"Get along with you," he said angrily; "or I will set the dog upon you!" And he was going to shut the door, but I cried out in an agony, "Oh! please don't shut the door! If I don't see Lady Barlow to-night you will be all killed; indeed, sir, you will."

"What does the girl mean?" he said, savagely, "Well, give me your message at once—if you have one, that is—for I can't stand here in the cold any longer."

Just then a nice sweet voice called out, "Who is it, Edwards? who is there this dreadful night?"

"Oh, only some little beggar, ma'am," he said, in a very different voice from that in which he had spoken to me, "who declares she must see Lady Barlow!"

"She?" answered the same voice, "is it a woman then?"

"Yes, ma'am, a child!"

"Oh, let her come in out of the storm, whoever she is, poor, wretched little thing!" said the lady; and Mr. Edwards opening the door wider and standing back, I came in at once.

How grand it all looked! and how light the great hall was! Standing near a door was such a beautiful young lady, dressed very elegantly, I thought; and she stared at me so surprised, and yet so kindly, and said,

"What a little creature to be out such a night!" and she came near to me and said, "What do you want with mamma, little girl? I will give your message."

"Please, ma'am," I began; and then I went on and told her, as well as I could, all I had heard in the dungeon, and that Elsie sent me to tell Mrs Jones, and that I came, as there was no one else to do it. Before I finished she caught me by the hand and said eagerly,

"You dear, good, brave little girl! to think of you coming all this distance by yourself on such a night; and if you had not what would have become of us? Come and tell mamma yourself;" And she led me into a great bright room, with ever so many lights shining at the same time; and where there was another young lady beautiful as herself, and an old lady, who was dressed differently, but very grandly, and did not look so pleasantly as the young ladies

This was Lady Barlow, they told me, and I repeated again to her what I had said to Miss Barlow; and as I spoke they all became very white, and lifted up their hands, and said, "What a providential escape!" But whether it was mine or theirs they meant, I did not know; but I suppose it was mine, for they all looked so kindly on me; and then they rang the bell and told the big servant—whose face was now as white as the young ladies, for he had heard all I had said in the hall, and while I spoke had uttered several low groans of horror to himself—to send Mrs. Parsons, who they said to me was the housekeeper. Soon after, a great, fine looking old lady dressed all in black silk, came and stood in at the door, and Lady Barlow told her to take me, and have my clothes dried, and give me something nice to eat, as I seemed hungry; "for," said she, "Mrs. Parsons, the little girl has perhaps saved all our lives, to say nothing of our property; and send Edwards again to me at once.

Mrs. Parsons knew me very well and always spoke gently to us whenever she saw us come with the fish. And now she took me by the hand to her nice comfortable bedroom, and got me into her bed and rang the bell and sent down my clothes to be dried. She was so pleased to see how clean all my things were, and how clean I was myself; she said no lady could be cleaner, and she did not mind a bit letting me into her bed, or any other bed in the house. Then she brought me a cup of nice hot tea and plenty of cream in it, and afterward such nice things as I had never eaten before in my life, and I wished, oh, how much I wished, I could have carried them all to poor Elsie, instead of eating them myself. I told Mrs Parsons that she looked so good-natured, I was not afraid of her as of Lady Barlow, and talked all the time and told her all about the dreadful robbers; and she kept lifting up her hands, like Lady Barlow, and saying, "Dear, dear, how awful—how awful! What will wicked people do next?" as of the robbing of Sir Henry Barlow was the last and most wicked thing done in the world.

While my clothes were drying, I fell asleep, I was so very tired with my long walking and running. When I woke, Mrs. Parsons told me it was then twelve o'clock; that the house, down stairs, was full of police who on one of the servants had been sent to bring, and that a lad had been also sent to tell my mother I was safe, and should come home in the morning. Oh, I was so glad to hear that!—mother and Elsie knowing I was safe, I mean. And now I remembered I had not done as Elsie bade me, I had not yet knelt down to thank my heavenly Father for all the mercy he had shown me; so I asked Mrs Parsons if I might kneel on the bed and say my prayers? and she said, "To be sure! I was a dear, good little girl to think of it, and God would be sure to bless me;" but if I had told her I had not said my prayers properly, though the Lord had taken so much care of me, I am afraid she would not have thought me such a very dear, good little girl; however, I did not like to say so.

She had said I was not to get up again, and so she left me while I was saying my prayers. I lay down again when I had finished, and despite my wish to stay awake, I fell so fast asleep I did not open my eyes any more till it was broad daylight, and a little clock standing on the mantel-shelf was striking six. Then I saw that Mrs. Parsons had come into bed with me, and yet even that had not woke me.

"How I must have slept," I thought, greatly getting up. I knelt down as Elsie had taught me always to do directly I woke and said my prayers. Then I crept out of bed and washed my face and hands and dressed myself, for all my clothes were nicely placed on a chair quite by my side. After that I sat down by the window, smoothing my hair with my hands, for I did not like to touch Mrs. Parsons' brushes or combs, though several were lying on the table, which had such a big looking glass on it, as tall as I was, if not taller. On another table were some books, and one was a Bible. I was so glad, and took it and sat down again and read a chapter, as Elsie always liked me to do, and just as I had finished, and was thinking I would creep gently out of the room, and run home (I did so long to see mother again), Mrs. Parsons woke and looked up and saw me.

"Who's that?" she said. Oh dear me! yes to be sure! I forgot," and she rubbed her eyes; "my brains are all in a maze like," she went on, sitting up and pushing the stray hairs off her forehead. "Dear me, what a night we had of it!"

"O, please, ma'am, will you tell me?" I cried eagerly, and going to the side of the bed.

"O, dear!" said Mrs. Parsons, laying her head back on the pillow "how did it all happen?—let me see;" and she shut her eyes while I waited to hear what she was going to say, but, to my surprise and disappointment, she fell asleep again. So I went back to my chair, and amused myself watching the gardener sorting the flowers, for the windows of this room looked into such a beautiful garden

Another hour passed away, and a servant came in with a jug of hot water, and told Mrs. Parsons it was seven o'clock. Seeing me still sitting there, she told Mary (as she called her) to take me down stairs to her room and give me some breakfast, for I had been up she didn't know how long. So I followed the servant to the housekeeper's room, as she said it was, where she told me to wait quite still till she came again; and away she went, for what seemed to me a very long while. I did so dislike doing nothing but staring out of the window that I felt almost determined to get through—for it wasn't high from the ground—into the road leading to the park, and run home. I think I should have certainly done so, had not Mary come in with my breakfast; nice tea, and cream, and cake, and bread and butter, and some beautiful kind of preserve.

"Please, ma'am," I said, as I sat down before the tray, "will you tell me if the robbers were caught last night?"

"Don't you know?" she said. And then she told me how the police, four of them, and the butler and footman, and I don't know how many more, were hidden in the house waiting for the robbers. She told me all about their coming, and their being seized after much resistance. "When the police had them safe, we all saw them with their hands and arms tied behind them, and their feet fastened; there were six altogether, such awful, black, dreadful-looking fellows! —all save one, with fair hair; who looked better than the rest. He had a very sorrowful face. And the tears kept coming into his eyes, and I could see his hands trembling dreadful, though they was tied, poor lad! I should like to have let him go; I don't think he would ever have done such a thing again; he was so young and looked as if he loathed himself and the others for what they had done; but he had nothing left now but to take his share with the rest." Then she told me how Mr. Edwards stood by the door, not helping a bit to catch them, and only peeping in; and when they were safe, then in he came, and made believe to be very busy, and to have had a deal to in knocking them down, and so on.

"But, dear me child, you aren't eating your breakfast, and you must be so hungry! get along, do, there's a good lass. After breakfast we all intend getting up a 'scription amongst us for you; you are such a good, brave little thing—but for you we should have all had our throats cut in bed, for didn't every one of 'em come provided with big knives on purpose? 'Twas Mr. Edwards first proposed our doing so."

SUGAR GROVE CHURCH, WARREN COUNTY, PA.

How wonderful are the ways of Divine Providence in bringing to pass that which shall redound to the glory of God and the happiness of his people. So now, after enduring for many years a ministry inspired by the lodge, we have the prospect of hearing a pure Gospel preached in our midst.

Sugar Grove church is a large and beautiful church building, erected and owned by no particular denomination, about six and a half miles from Cameron, and on the Pennsylvania side of the State line. A few years ago the Winebrennarians and the Episcopal Methodists each organized congregations here, but the M. E.'s died out altogether, and the Winebrennarians seem to be following.

Lately a few of us who are decidedly opposed to the lodge, chiefly Presbyterian in denominational connection and bias, weary and disgusted with a ministry that was dumb concerning the principal curse of the church of the present day, extended an invitation to Rev. D. B. Turney, a Methodist Protestant minister, to labor amongst us. We were interested in Mr. Turney as being a man who has borne no little persecution on account of his faithfulness in rebuking the popular sin of lodgery.

The Anti-masonic portion of our community (those willing to do anything) are not numerous, and if any friend of our cause, and especially if any friends of our pastor, Mr. Turney, who is not unknown to the readers of the Cynosure, on reading this should feel it to be both a pleasure and a duty to contribute something to his support, they can do so by sending it to me at Cameron, Marshall county, W. Va., in order that we may carry on the good work with unflagging energy and unabated power.

WESLEYAN.

—Rev. M. R. Baldridge of Wasioja, Minnesota, is planning to do missionary work in that and adjoining States with a preaching tent during the present season.

—There are eight meeting houses and forty appointments on the North Carolina mission. In connection are fifteen Sabbath schools with an aggregate attendance of 600.

—The spring conferences begin April 2nd and continue until the middle of May. These six conferences represent the territory of New York State, northern Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio and are six in number. The connectional agent D. F. Kinney will visit them all, God willing.

—Above forty conversions are the result of a revival in Waterville, Ohio, twenty-three joining themselves to God's people on a recent Sabbath.

—A Wisconsin correspondent of the Wesleyan writes thus of some of Elder J L. Barlow's neighbors:

"Two weeks ago, Father Adey held quarterly meeting on his Fall City circuit. The meeting was held in the large school-house, except on Saturday evening, when the Good Templars occupied the room. As this was not the first time that the lodge had claimed priority and pre-eminence over our class there on such occasions, the better part of the community censured the lodge, and the Dunn County News gave space for a sharp reproof from one of their own number. The preaching at this meeting was by Rev. S. A. Gilley, formerly of the Illinois Conference of the Free Methodist church, who having united with the Wesleyan church on trial and served out his probation, was admitted into full connection and duly licensed as a local preacher, by the quarterly conference. Trusting in self, apart from Christ, he fell before the tempter; but now forgiven and restored, if he trusts in Jesus alone, he will be of service to God and the church. By request of the people, he is to supply the Wesleyan society in the 'big woods,' above Menomonie, Dunn county, as pastor, till next conference."

FREE METHODIST.

To all Lovers of Earnest Christianity and Reform: — A camp-meeting is to be held near Palmyra village, Jeff. Co., Wis., commencing June 4th, 1879, and holding one week.

This place is a stronghold of secretism and little impression has as yet been made upon it. Bro. Hinman has lectured here; he had rather poor congregations as there seemed to be but little effort on the part of any to advertise the meetings. Secretism largely controls or influences all the churches of the place. We have been able, under much opposition and deep-seated prejudice, to obtain a foothold here with two classes formed. We held a grove meeting here ten months ago, and although it was quite rainy during much of the meeting, we had good congregations and some measure of good was accomplished and souls saved.

We now propose holding a camp-meeting and wish the united efforts of all lovers of reformatory truth in pushing on the battle. There will be hay, poles, etc., for all coming with tents, and those not able to tent who would like to come, by writing me beforehand, arrangements can be made for board at reasonable rates.

We invite correspondence. We should like to join with W. C. Stevens and others for a series of expositions by Ronayne this next summer, engaging him for four or six weeks to deliver lectures five or six evenings a week or from twenty to forty lectures in the time in Rock, Walworth and Jefferson counties.

BAPTIST.

—Bro. H. C. Leland, of Eau Claire, Wis., who is now completing his theological course in the Seminary near this city, has been unanimously called to the church in Grinnell, Ia. Bro. Leland has had much experience in evangelistic work, having spent one or two seasons assisting Rev. A. P. Graves in successful revival meetings.

—Mr. Graves is himself now in Nebraska. He began meetings in Lincoln, the State capital, about April 1st. On the 17th he is expected to begin a series of meetings in Omaha.

—Dr. Ives of this city has been preaching in Oak Park, a suburban town, since last winter. His labors have been blessed to the church.

—Several notices have appeared in our columns respecting the exclusion from his conference of Rev. Justin D. Fulton, D.D., of the Centennial church, Brooklyn. Reference is made to the case in the editorial columns this week. The action of the conference was on this wise. The committee appointed on the case reported by Dr. Reid, who said he had always had and always will have the warmest feeling of friendship toward Brother Fulton, that if the conference really knew his warm and generous disposition and only understood him sufficiently to realize how much rashness he keeps back and how little he lets out, there would not be as much feeling against him as at present exists among them, but by his action in refusing to withdraw what he had said against Dr. Samson, the members of the committee felt bound to report in favor of his suspension until he did withdraw the offensive utterances.

Dr. Reid then reported that the committee had held a meeting and had sent a letter to Dr. Fulton kindly suggesting his substitution of a more ample apology than the one he had written. They received a reply from him respectfully declining to do so, and under those circumstances it was recommended by the committee that he be suspended from his privileges as a member of the conference until he consented to and did withdraw his offensive statements against brother Samson. The report was received and adopted after a short debate, and the committee discharged with thanks.

The question was however brought up again in a few minutes, and a heated discussion ensued, during which a motion was made by a Rev. Moore to expel Dr. Fulton, which extraordinary business was voted without trial or examination! To their credit be it said that two-thirds of the conference did not vote, yet their permitting such scandalous action is certainly reprehensible.

The meeting was concluded with prayer by Dr. Parmelee, who prayed God to forgive the conference for their action, and invoked more of that spirit that dwelleth in Jesus Christ.

A Brooklyn paper publishes the following interview with Dr. Fulton:

A reporter found Dr. Fulton at the Centennial Baptist church on Clinton avenue last night, when the following conversation ensued.

"What do you think of the action of the conference?"

"I know not whether to congratulate myself or to pity them. I complied last week with the vote of the conference, and had a right to have gone there to-day and claimed my seat, and could have held it against all comers."

"Did their action surprise you?"

"A week ago it did. Then they lost their opportunity to do a magnanimous thing. To-day, smarting under the condemnation of the public, they have acted in the heat of partisan feeling, and have expelled me because they were unable to answer argument by argument, or meet my facts with a refutation."

"What, in your opinion, will be the result of it?"

"The country will take the same just view of it as it did before, when it regarded the action of the conference as hasty, and my words as timely and truthful. Now it goes forth that I have been expelled without a hearing, and not because I did not comply with the vote of the conference, but because of what was written in the newspapers by myself and others, despite the protest of some of the most eminent men in that body."

"What do you intend to do about it?"

"Serve the Baptist denomination with more devotion than before, believing that the Lord, in the future as in the past, will make the wrath of his enemies to praise him. Already it has done good. In nearly all portions of the land attention has been called to the fact that the aristocratic sentiments of the South are in danger of allying themselves to the Papistic purposes of Rome, in the hope of controlling the negro vote in the South, as the Irish vote is controlled in the North to bolster up despotism and widen the sway of superstition. It has done me good. It has called attention to the position which I have held for twenty-five years, and the anti-Papal league of to-day invited me to deliver a lecture in the Academy of Music in Brooklyn, and Cooper Institute, New York, on witnessing for the truth the overthrow of the Papacy. It has done the conference harm. It has revealed the fact that the men who fail to speak for freedom during the war have sided against liberty and in favor of a despotism that threatens the future of America. Whatever may be true of New York the people are for liberty, and with Mazzini in the past, I am glad to make God and the people my watchword, and go forward."

LUTHERAN.

The following interesting notices appear in the Lutheran Standard, Columbus, O., and show that this great body of Christians are not indifferent to the questions which will ere long be prominent in every organization which stands for Christ against the world:

"The Concordia Conference will meet, God willing, on Wednesday, April 16, 1879, at 9 o'clock A. M., in St. Stephen's church, Shenandoah Co., Va. Subjects for consideration: Theses on Secret Fraternities, by Rev. Snecker; Theses and Essay on Missions, by Rev. Hahn; Theses on Church Government, by Rev. Sibert.

G. W. LOSE, Sec'y."

"In accordance with the wish and request of the joint vestry of the Ev. Lutheran Thornville charge a Conference will be held, in said charge, for the discussion of Theses on Secret Fraternities. This Conference will be held on Wednesday, April 30, and Thursday, May 1, in the Ev. Luth. Grace church in Thornville, Perry Co., O. There will be services on Wednesday evening, and the Conference will hold its first session on Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock in the church. The discussion will be carried on in the English language, and the brethren of the surrounding charges are hereby most cordially invited to come and participate in the consideration of the following Theses:

1. Secret societies are religious.
2. Their religion is anti Christian.
3. Therefore a Christian has no right to belong to such and to fellowship with them.

The brethren will please to notify the undersigned in time of their intention to come.

S. BÆCHLER, Pastor.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—Rev. W. O. Dinius has lately removed to Ridgeville Corners, Henry county, Ohio, occupying the new parsonage.

—Bishop Castle writes to the Pacific Telescope that there were forty accessions to the church at Philomath, Oregon.

—The Telescope says ex-Bishop Henry Kumler, of Dayton, Ohio, is in feeble health, and is now eighty years old. He has long been a zealous and true-hearted laborer in the U. B. church, and waits "to depart and be with Christ."

—The following is not the only instance by far of the influence of the anti-lodge discussion in strengthening those churches which maintain a godly discipline against the idolatry of the age. A brother, William H. Taylor, writes:

"I have severed my connection with the M. E. church and cast my lot with the United Brethren in Christ. Several others of our class have done the same thing; not because there were no Christians in the M. E. church, but because it has become the Masonic Episcopal church. The handwriting is plainly seen on the wall; the church is cursed with a curse, and if the foundation be destroyed what can the righteous do but go elsewhere?"

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. C. O. Brown of Rochester, Michigan, has for months been the object of a secret and villainious attack by means of anonymous letters, at length found one letter purporting to be written by himself and filled with the vilest imprecations. An investigation showed that the author of these letters was one Armstrong, the Methodist minister of the place. The aim of this vilifier was to drive away the Congregational pastor and break up his church.

—A brother in Oberlin informs us that by some blunder the printer omitted the rule of the First Church of Oberlin against secret societies, from 100 copies of the manual and possibly one of the imperfect copies was sent to the Advance office; so there may be good reason for the omission in its notice which we criticized lately. The rule of the church which is rigidly maintained, is contained in the following "Position of the Church on Public Questions:"

1. The church does not admit to membership persons who are in active connection with any Masonic organization.
2. Persons in the habitual use of intoxicating beverages are likewise excluded.
3. The use of tobacco, its sale or manufacture, is to be discouraged in every proper way.
4. The working of cheese factories or the supplying of milk to them on the Sabbath, is regarded as a disciplinable offense.

—In the Thursday evening prayer meeting last week with the College church, Wheaton, Bro. H. H. Hinman spoke of the old Central church in Plymouth, Conn. This church adopted a rule against the lodge in 1831. When the Litchfield South Association met with this church the subject of Freemasonry was thoroughly investigated, several Freemasons being examined under oath. The Association condemned the lodge and the church disfellowshiped it. Bro. Hinman was cordially received here. He found also an earnest spirit of missions in this church showing itself in abundant work for the salvation of the nations sitting in darkness.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Rev. Lyman Whiting, D.D., whose refusal some years ago to allow a Masonic funeral parade in his church at Janesville, Wis., was installed over the Kanawha Presbyterian church at Charleston, West Va., March 23. A hopeful work is going forward with the youth of this congregation, and unwonted prosperity is felt in all its interests.

News of the Week.

—The volume of West-bound travel through Council Bluffs is unprecedentedly large for this time of the year. Last Thursday the Union Pacific took out twenty full cars of passengers, including nine of emigrants, and this number is not greatly in excess of the general average. A large proportion of the persons going West are destined for Colorado and the Territories.

—In the suit of John H. Burke against J. C. Flood et. al., to recover $26,000,000, which defendants are alleged to have unlawfully appropriated from the funds of the Consolidated Virginia Mining Company, the San Francisco court ordered the defendants to answer in thirty days.

—The Commercial Bulletin of New York, closes a review of wheat prospects in the Northwest as follows: "It is very evident that, while there is nothing yet to cause uneasiness in grain circles, the opening conditions of seeding for the season of 1879 are far behind those of 1878. These conditions are, a late spring, an average acreage, and a disposition to decrease the amount of wheat sown."

—The case of Fitz-John Porter, whose conduct at the second battle of Bull Run, gave him a court-martial, secured a re-investigation of his case when the Democratic party returned to power in Congress. The decision reverses the former condemnation. Should Porter be restored to the army, with back pay, as recommended, he will be entitled to $134,000, if it is reckoned on his rank as Major General of Volunteers, and $72,000 if reckoned on his rank in the regular army as Colonel of Infantry. Army officers in Washington criticise the report very severely, and a mock petition has been in circulation there, asking Congress to reopen the case of Benedict Arnold.

—A special telegram from Washishton has the following: "It is believed here among well-informed parties from the South that an effort will be made in this Congress to remove the disabilities of Jeff Davis, and he will then be elected Senator from Mississippi. A Southern editor here states that this is Davis' ambition."

—Daniel McIver, one of the proprietors of the Cunard line and a member of Parliament, writes that he does not know any nation whose trade prospects are so gloomy as Great Britain. British exports to the United States are comparatively nothing in the volume of value. The balance of trade is so overwhelmingly against Great Britain that he sees nothing except ruin for home industries, whether manufacturing or agricultural, if the present state of things is allowed to continue.

—Austria, England, Russia, Turkey, and Italy have consented to take part in the mixed occupation of Eastern Roumelia. Italy, however, has made some reservations. There will be no commander-in-chief. Each nationality will have its own commander. The sole object of the occupation will be to prevent any conflict between the Turks and Bulgarians.

—The Egyptian officers sent to break up the slave depots at Bahr El Gazel, in Kordofan, Central Africa, reports an engagement with Suleiman, the chief slave trader, and owner of twenty-five depots, in which the women alone waiting transportation into Egypt numbered 10,000. The Egyptian forces numbered 3,000, part armed with improved rifles, and were intrenched. Suleiman, with 11,000 Arabs, made several assaults, but they were completely defeated, and fled in disorder, leaving 1,087 dead. The Egyptians lost 20 men.

—The report of the Englishman sent by Rivers Wilson to inquire into the famine in Upper Egypt, shows by statistics that 10,000 persons died by starvation alone in Girgeh, Kena, and Esna. The famine, which was really a money famine, caused by overtaxation, has now terminated, but has left disastrous consequences. If similar taxation continues, another partial failure in the rise of the Nile will cause a famine worse than the last.

—Miragoane, in Hayti, was destroyed by fire on the night of the 16th of March. The Haytien government is sending relief. Five or six thousand persons rendered homeless. Property destroyed included 50,000 bags coffee, 1,800,000 pounds logwood, of which 800,000 pounds were to be shipped to France and the balance to New York. The loss is about $1,000,000.

—A Shanghai letter of Feb. 21st says: "A joint stock company of Chinese merchants is being formed for the manufacture of cotton cloths, and a very large mill will be built at Shanghai. It is also proposed that another woolen factory be started at Tientsin.

"The selection of a northwest frontier town for a woolen mill is accounted for by the fact that in that region Tartar sheep are very numerous, and wool can be got for the gathering, and their fleeces hitherto have not been properly utilized. The establishment of a cotton mill at Shanghai is done with the intention and determination to extinguish the trade of the foreigner. A prominent personage in the movement is one Peng, a Taboui, who has written strong appeals to Chinese Governor Generals urging home manufactures of cotton and woolen goods."

—A severe tornado passed over Brown Summit, N. C., last Thursday. Several houses were blown down, scattering furniture broadcast. One boy was killed, and many seriously injured by falling timbers. Trees and fences were prostrated and the wheat damaged some

Home and Farm.

THE HEALTHFULNESS OF LEMONS.—When people feel the need of an acid, if they would use lemons or apples they would feel well and wish it. When lemons are cheap in the market, a person should purchase a half dozen at once, and prepare them for use in the warm weak days of the spring and summer, when acids, especially citric and malic, or the fruit of lemons, are so grateful and useful. Press your hand on the lemon and roll it back and forth on the table to make it express more easily; then press the juice into a bowl or tumbler—never into tin; strain out all the seeds, as they give a bad taste. Remove all the pulp from the peels, and boil in water—a pint for a dozen peels, to extract the acid. A few minutes' boiling is enough; then strain the water with the juice of the lemons; put a pound of white sugar to a pint of the juice; boil ten minutes, bottle it and your lemonade is ready. Put a tablespoonful or two of this lemon syrup in a glass of water and have a cooling, healthful drink.

GREEN OR ROTTED MANURE.

Josiah Shull, in an address before the Central New York Farmers' Club, related the following experiment in the application of green and rotted manure: "I have used excrement matter in the spring of the year, spread and plowed under, and cultivated, and well incorporated with the soil, and planted the land with potatoes. The potatoes did finely, were well formed and very fine for the table. At the same time, and on the same piece of land, plowed under well rotted manure, with the same cultivation, and the potatoes were over-grown, ill-shaped and soggy, not fit for the market or the table. My theory of the difference in the quality of the crop was, that the manure being well composted, the action on the plants was so vigorous as to cause the tubers to form very rapidly; consequently they were soggy and not fit for the table. Whereas, on the part planted with raw material, the decomposition was rapid enough to feed the plant just enough and at the right time.

A SHRUB FOR EVERYONE.

The Great Panicled Hydrangea—Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora—is one of the best hardy shrubs we have had for years, and is fast gaining the popularity it deserves. It seems to succeed in all situations and in every variety of soil. The flowers appear in August and are a wonder to those who have never seen them. They grow in immense pyramidal-shaped panicles, measuring from eight to ten inches at the base—pure white at first, but changing to rose-color as they fade. What makes the plant particularly desirable is that the flowers remain in perfection over two months.

The Hydrangea is propagated very easily by means of cuttings. If these are planted in the autumn and kept growing in a warm greenhouse through the winter, they will bloom the following summer. The lateral shoots strike quickly in the hot-bed and these, with a generous culture and not pinched back, will usually bear one enormous corymb of flowers. The plant does not often grow rapidly the first season after transplanting, but when once fairly established it quickly increases in size. Liberal watering and good drainage will ensure larger cluster of flowers. As the branches are weak and the flower heads very large and heavy, it is better to stake the plant or support the braches by a hoop of wood or iron.—American Garden.

THE VALUE OF SUNFLOWERS.

We would call the attention of farmers at this time to the value of sunflowers as a crop, and enumerate some of their values and uses. In the first place the flowers abound in honey, and furnish food for bees. The seeds contain oleaginous matter and yield oil at the rate of one gallon to the barrel, which is but little inferior to olive oil. One acre will produce fifty bushels of seeds. It is also valuable for food for horses and poultry; it has been used for bread by the American Indians, and also in Portugal. The leaves are excellent fodder for cattle. The stock while growing may be utilized as bean poles where they are scarce or difficult to be obtained, and when dry may be used as a roofing, or set up against a fence to form a windbreak. They contain a large amount of potash and are excellent for firekindling. The seed has also been recommended for fuel. The reputation of the growing sunflower to absorb miasmatic vapors, and preventing fever and ague, is well known.—Buckeye Farmer.

NEW PLAN OF SELECTING POTATO SEED.—Mr. John Owen of Fairmount, Mo., writing to the Elmira Farmers' Club, presents the following which is worthy of a trial: Select from medium sized potatoes, cut them in two pieces, crosswise in the middle, between the stem end the blossom end, (I think this a better designation than seed end and root end,) and plant the stem end, and if potatoes are scarce and you plant the blossom end, be sure and plant them separate, and always save your seed from the stem end. By this course your potatoes will come very quick, be of even size, quite large and well flavored, and in about three years, by continuing the process, you will bring the species, whatever kind it may be, back to its pristine purity. The yield will not be quite so great, but the quality very superior, with but very few small ones.

WHAT FIVE SHEEP WILL DO.—Five sheep will enrich one acre of old worn-out mowing land in three years, so that it will produce one and one half tons of hay per year for several years by a slight sprinkle of seed each year sown in early spring. Five sheep will produce manure in winter to the value of $10, by giving them suitable bedding. Five sheep will get their living through the summer on one acre of ground; the pasturing of the same would be $3. Five sheep will raise five lambs worth $15. Five sheep will shear twenty-five pounds of wool, worth $6.—Maine Farmer.

—The following table of periods which some of the most common seed require in germinating is given in the Michigan Farmer: Wheat, one day; millet 1; Hungarian grass, 1; barley, 7; spinach, 3; beans, 3; mustard 3; lettuce, 3; ainseed, 4; melon, 5; cress, 5; cucumber, 5; beet, 6; purslane, 9; cabbage, 10; parsley, 40 to 50; hyssop, 30; almond, 1 year; chestnut, 1; peach, 1; rose, 2; filbert, 2, and hawthorn, 2.

Notices.

TO THE PEOPLE OF NEBRASKA.

The time has come that the friends of light and truth in this State should organize to oppose secret lodges. The cause of every man, woman and child in this State is suffering from their influence. Let us rally at YORK, York County, Nebraska, on Wednesday, April 30th and May 1st, 1879, and set up our banners in the name of the Lord. Rev. J. P. Stoddard, Secretary of the National Association opposed to secret societies, will be present, and other distinguished speakers and lecturers are expected. Let there be a general attendance of all.

W. S. STONER,
J. M. SNYDER,
Kearney, Neb. Committee.

Topics of the Time.

Political legislation is still the chief business of the extra session of Congress which has now been sitting nearly a month without settling the questions for which it was called. Secretary Sherman gives his opinion that this extra session has greatly impaired the prospects of the Democratic party and will lose them a million votes. The Republicans of the Senate have decided to take notice of the negro exodus from the South and Senator Windom of Minnesota, is preparing a resolution declaring it the opinion of the Senate that the exodus is caused by political persecution of the colored race, by failure to pay them decent wages and by the practice of compelling them to accept unfair and unable terms in the farming of plantations, and will ask that a special committee be appointed to investigate these causes, and also to take into consideration the propriety of providing means to enable the colored people of the South to colonize in the Western States and Territories, where they can have full political liberty and enjoy their constitutional rights.

This colored emigration promises to be one of the important events of the time. The impulsive nature of the negro, the years of abuse and oppression he has endured while nominally a free citizen in a free land, the promises and flattering prospects that tempt the ignorant, and the determination which animates the better informed—all these reasons are acting powerfully, and while the movement is fostered at the North will tempt multitudes to venture on a long journey and face untried privations. The exodus has spread from Mississippi until we hear of companies coming from Virginia. The St. Louis authorities have vainly proclaimed against the emigration pouring through that city, it does not stop short of a Free State, and Wyandot, Kansas, is the first point. Thousands are now congregated there, homeless, penniless, but not friendless. Kansas pastors are appealing not in vain to the churches and the philanthropic of the North, and a "National Emigration Society" has been established in Washington with Senator Windom President; Edward McPherson, the biogapher of Thad. Stevens, treasurer; and Prof. Greener, of Harvard University, a colored man, for secretary. Aid for the emigrants will be forwarded by this Society or by any responsible city paper. The South looks on helplessly while its best laboring element is leaving. Offers of money are as little regarded as the pictured rigors of emigration; and possible loss of the cotton crop has led the planters to send for Chinese to California. Avarice may yet be a better protection for this suffering people than the bayonets of their friends.

The United States Supreme Court has decided three cases of considerable public interest. The first is that of the Northwestern University of Evanston, Illinois, which resisted the payment of taxes on its property and was unsuccessful in the Supreme Court of the State. The charter of the institution allows it to hold real estate to the amount of 2 000 acres of land and receive gifts and devises above that amount which must be sold within ten years. Under this charter large amounts of city and suburban real estate are held. The new constitution of the State, however, provides that property actually used for educational purposes can only be held by such institutions free from taxation. The decision of the United States Court exempts from taxation all property legally held under the charter, which was made under the old constitution of 1848.

Another decision of the Supreme Court reverses the decision of the U. S. district court of this city respecting the first company of whisky ringsters arrested here in Chicago. Judge Blodgett discharged these Masonic swindlers because as much had been promised them by their brother Mason, the U. S. District Attorney, as a reward for confessing their crime. The Supreme Court maintains that the immunity to which a criminal is entitled for testimony against accomplices is not a legal defense of their crime, but only ground for the interposition of the pardoning power. Unless therefore the President interferes, the case against the swindlers may be called any day by the prosecuting attorney; but no one who has watched the prosecution of liquor frauds in this city can reasonably expect any movement on his part so long as the least hope of executive clemency remains.

The Hebrews observed the tenth day of their seventh month, our September, as a day of atonement when the High Priest confessed the sins of all the people upon the head of the scape-goat, and all were commanded to "afflict their souls and do no work at all." It was probably in imitation of this important occasion that the annual fast day was first established in New England, on the principle that "the thing remains so long as the reason remains;" and no one will deny that, all things considered, we have as great reason to repent of and confess national and individual sins as did the people just freed from the four hundred years slavery of Egypt. It is painful, therefore, to read of the neglect into which this annual observance has fallen. We are reminded of King James II. and his "Book of Sports" for the Lord's day, when we read that the Annual Fast is likely to become "the great Massachusetts and New England holiday." On its last occurrence in March a legislative excursion was taken to Plymouth, at Boston there were boat races, base ball, rifle and pedestrian matches and extra performances at the theatres, beside which the observances of religion held a sadly subordinate part.

The Kedive of Egypt has just added to the complications of European affairs. For years his ambition for civilization has produced the greatest extravagance. The immense sums borrowed of French and English capitalists were lavished on improvements which, like many of our own railroads, have not yet begun to remunerate their owners. He also kept an army in European style and a harem as large as King Solomon's. His European creditors lost patience and looked also for a loss of their loans, but by government intervention English and French financiers were made members of the Kedive's cabinet. Their reforms abolished harem and army, and promised to make the internal improvements profitable. But the unfortunate ruler found his people unready for reform and full of insurrection. So he kept his people by sending off his imported ministers. France and England were provoked, but are in doubt whether to appeal to the Turkish Sultan, who has yet some jurisdiction in Egypt, or not. The Kedive is arming meantime and raising funds for war. An ill-advised step may renew the struggle over the remains of Turkey. The Berlin treaty is not a self-enacting document. Now that the Russian troops are about to withdraw from Bulgaria and Roumelia new complications have arisen which old General Todleben believes will make more fighting necessary before peace can be permanent.

Hon. Thaddeus Stevens on Freemasonry.

On December 10th, 1834, Hon. Thaddeus Stevens presented to the Legislature of Pennsylvania an indictment of Freemasonry, of which the following is a part:

"Whereas, it is alleged and believed by a large and respectable portion of the citizens of this commonwealth, that the Masonic institution is injurious to the rights and dangerous to the liberties of the people; that it imposes on its members oaths and obligations unauthorized by and inconsistent with the laws of the country; that it binds its members to give preference to each other in all things; to apprise each other of all approaching danger, whether such danger arises from the legal prosecution of their own crimes and misdemeanors or otherwise. It secures an undue because an unmerited advantage to members of the fraternity over the uninitiated farmer, mechanic and laborer in all the ordinary transactions of life. It prefers a corrupt brother to honest citizens in appointments to office. It prevents the wholesome enactment and due administration of laws. It enters and corrupts our legislative halls, our executive offices and our courts of justice. The trial by jury, instead of being the paladium of our rights, it converts into an engine of favoritism and Masonic fraud. Its whole tendency is to cherish a hatred to democracy and a love of aristocratic and regal forms of power. The truth of these things has been repeatedly proclaimed under the signatures of thousands of honest men by authentic documents procured from the lodges themselves, and by the testimony under oath of numerous adhering Masons of good character, and it has never yet been contradicted by the sworn testimony of a single witness.

"Therefore, Resolved, That the committee on the judiciary be instructed to bring in a bill effectually to suppress and prohibit the administration and reception of Masonic, Odd-fellows, and all other secret extra-judicial oaths, obligations and promises of the nature of oaths."

This resolution, with slight amendment, was adopted by the House of Representatives by a vote of 85 to 7.

The act of the Legislature which became a law reads as follows:

"If any person hereafter initiated or admitted into the society of the order of Free and Accepted Masons, lodges, chapters, encampments, or other association or society; or passed or advanced therein from one grade to another; or elected an officer thereof, shall be required to take, repeat or subscribe to any oath or obligation of the nature of an oath not authorised by law, the person or persons who shall administer or who shall aid or assist in administering, or shall voluntarily take, repeat or subscribe any such oath, affirmation or obligation in the nature of an oath," shall, on conviction, be fined from twenty to one hundred dollars.

Science and Masonry.

We often hear diatribes of science against religion, the Christian religion; but Masonry seeks to shelter itself against science by adopting science as a part of itself; just as it seeks to shelter itself against ridicule by deliberately making the ridiculous a part of itself. Masonry is very cunning; but it is far more ridiculous than it is scientific or religious.

In 1876 a German of Syracuse, New York, by the name of Otto Schmidt, went to the Centennial at Philadelphia, where he contracted the typhoid fever. Returning home he died. Afterward, a rain fell, which is usually regarded as one of Heaven's choicest blessings, and some of the poisonous excretions from the deceased were carried by it into a well. Seven households used water from this well, and out of them all there occurred seventeen cases of typhoid fever. All these cases occurred within the narrow space of one hundred sixty-five feet by five hundred; and there seems to be no reason to doubt that they were all contracted from fever-germs that had dripped or percolated into the well from the case of Otto Schmidt.

Now in Philadelphia, where this disease originated, and which Heaven's blessings themselves became the means of propagating among so many persons, there is a great source of moral disease infinitely worse than the typhoid fever. We allude to the great Masonic temple which so overshadows all the churches of the city of brotherly love. Let us suppose that an honest man from the country had been lured into that temple during the Centennial; had been shown all its wonders, its beautiful stones, its splendid rooms, its magnificent carpets and curtains, etc., and had gone home sick with the belief that "Freemasonry is better than the Christian religion." He is an honest, unsuspecting deacon of a church, it may be, and he carries this moral infection into the church with him, so that even the Christian religion, like the blessed rain from heaven, is made the means of polluting and poisoning the wells of truth—let us suppose this to be the case, I say.

Reader, we have here a very apt illustration of the great evil that may be inflicted upon society by one single germ from that rank moral poison, Freemasonry. One single man of the lowest possible qualities of character, may carry the infection into a whole neighborhood. Little did the neat and tidy neighbors of the honest and unfortunate Otto Schmidt dream when hearing from him the wonders of the Centennial, that he bore secret germs of disease with him that would hurry off many of them to the grave. So when an honest, though ignorant fellow, has been initiated into the mysteries of Freemasonry in some city, and goes home to spread the wonders of the new religion among honest, unsuspecting men of the country village, little do the Christian people there dream of the odious poison with which he is infecting their religion and destroying their spiritual life.

This is the way that that moral disease, Freemasonry, has been borne all over the United States. Boston and Philadelphia have received the infection pretty directly from European infidels and atheists, and it is now poisoning all the wells of truth in the country. Its secret germs have dripped and percolated into the churches, until few remain which are not infected with mortal disease.

American.

The Unholy Alliance.

BY D. B. TURNEY.

There is, in this bright and beautiful world, a church which seems to have formed an unholy league with the lodge. It not only tolerates, but even defends Freemasonry. It allows both members and ministers, without rebuke, to hold connection with the cable-towed craft —nay, more and worse, upholds and supports the abominable institution.

This church has sanctioned oath-bound secretism, and at the last general conference refused to condemn the evil thing, knowing it to be such. It has instructed the trustees of the the Methodist churches to close the pulpit against anti-secret ministers; and has refused to entertain, in various annual conferences, resolutions expressive of the wickedness of the lodge power—motions for the appointment of committees on Freemasonry—motions for the adoption of reports against countenancing the evil, etc.

This church has declined, through her bishops and general dignitaries, to hear the appeals of scores and hundreds of the members against Freemasonry, in some of the annual conferences; and has refused to print in the official organs of the denomination, articles which were opposed to the lodge, while admitting into the same papers communications which spoke in favorable terms of "the Ancient and Honorable Order of Free and Accepted Masons." It has arraigned and condemned, without even the form of a fair trial, ministers of the Gospel, of unblemished lives and conduct, for simply attending and taking part in anti-secret meetings, and has exhorted ministers and members in the ecclesiastical "perview of the body," as one of the bishops has callod it, wholly to refrain from taking any part in agitating the question.

This church has declared, in substance, through her general conference, that Freemasonry is not a moral evil—while she has repeatedly refused, through her bishops, to let annual conferences express an opposite opinion, and in some cases has tried to hinder her ministers and members from patronizing the Christian Cynosure and other anti-secret papers. She has refused to take into some of her annual conferences pious and talented young men, called of God to preach the Gospel, for the simple reason that they were opposed in heart and soul to the corrupt and degrading idolatry of the lodge; and has removed able and efficient presiding elders from their districts for their Anti-masonry. She has refused in her general conference capacity, to exhibit any opposition to Freemasonry, though requested to do this by some thousands of her ministers and members, but has given all the weight of her influence to the haltered and hoodwinked Hiramism of the foul fraternity. The reading world knows these facts.

The church which has done all this need not be specifically mentioned as every person knows it to be the one which styles itself "the Methodist Episcopal Church." But is my denomination, the Methodist Protestant, much better? Not much. To be sure it has not officially defended the order, through general conference legislation, as the M. E. church has done; but I am very much afraid it will at its next opportunity. Hence, as a minister of the M. P. church, I beseech my brethren to be warned in time, that they may help me to save our denomination from following the bad example of the M. E. church. I write these words in sorrow, but for the sake of the high and holy cause of Christ, feeling that duty requires much plain speaking. I have spoken the truth in love, and if any persons are angry, my skirts are clear at least.

Who are the Blessed—The Truly Happy? III.

BY REV. WARREN TAYLOR.

It is a full month, reader, since our last walk together; but I think we were becoming acquainted—were we not? Let us go again into the gardens of flowers, into the orchards of rich and mellow fruit, into the green valley and beside the river with its crystal waters ever and forever flowing. The Owner of the orchards says we may eat of the fruit. The Lord of the manor says we may drink to the full of the crystal waters.

There be those who have felt their need of these apples of true knowledge and forgiveness, and of the water of life. And they received a benediction frm the Holoiest, for their state of mind was at least an encouraging one. And there be those who have seen and been deeply conscious of the badness of a heart alienated from God, and of a life spent in sin; and they have sorrowed over it and wished that it had not been so. They were sick of sin and longed to be free from it; and in the deep silence of their souls were praying and hoping that God would be merciful to them. And then came another benediction, "Blessed are they that mourn." And feeling their own unworthiness and helplessness they began to have compassion on their fellow men, who were "ignorant and out of the way," and not only to bear, but to forgive and even forget the injuries they had received from others. They had little thought about demanding rights, whilst themselves were suing for mercy. And then come another benediction. "Blessed are the meek."

The foundations of a pure and holy character are now laid. For where there is one right desire, one right feeling of the heart, there is some holiness. The difference between the natural and the converted man is not that the one is entirely sinful and the other entirely holy. But that the latter has some holiness—whilst the former has not. And the foundations being laid, the holy character is rising into something like comely proportions, when we hear again from the lips of the Holiest—"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." The benediction is not to those who have the thing, but to those who hunger and thirst for it. Yet none but the Christian hungers and thirsts after righteousness. Others hunger for happiness, and for those things which they vainly imagine will make them happy. But those who desire and intensely long for righteousness, do love God. They are in sympathy with him. They have been born again.

To us, there are two kinds of righteousness. The one, that which has been wrought for us by our Lord Jesus Christ; that "robe" of his own merit, which he freely puts upon sinners who come to him and humbly trust in him, for pardon and justification and eternal life. It is in this alone that we can stand accepted before the throne of the Father's glory. This is to be desired and sought and accepted as a free gift to all who simply believe. But those who have obtained this, though oppressed with great ignorance and with passions unsubdued and wrong habits unrectified, and though evil thoughts and evil feelings and evil desires are ever springing up in them, and though they find no way as yet to escape from these hateful things; yet they desire to escape, and to be free from them all. They desire and seek with more or less of ardor and constancy that the holy principle of rectitude implanted in them by the Holy Ghost may pervade the whole soul and give character to the entire life; and that every thought and feeling and act may be brought into the captivity of obedience to the law of Christ. They have been converted. They are new creatures in Christ and on the way to heaven. The warmest and strongest of their longings go out toward an unseen God and unseen Savior. But sin still lives in their members. It lives in many an old habit. It is aroused by many an assault of the adversary and many an allurement of an evil world. And then, as to many a divine command and many a feature of Christ's image or example to be copied and many a promise that might help or encourage, a great cloud of ignorance hangs over the mind. The Christian is far, very far from being perfectly holy, or perfectly enlightened. The righteousness of Christ he has, not because he has kept the law, but because he has believed. And that inner righteousness he has something of; and he longs to have it in perfection. For this he labors; for this he prays; for this he studies and fights his battles, and for this he hopes. The benediction and promise, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled," cheer and animate him. The words of the beloved and inspired disciple, "We know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is," cheer and animate him. Burdened with the remains of his old and corrupt nature, but with his heart on the unseen world and panting for God, he exclaimes with the Psalmist, "I shall behold thy face in righteousness. I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." It is for this he hungers and thirsts and hopes.

"O glorious hour, O blest abode,
I shall be near and like my God,
And every power find sweet employ
In that eternal world of joy"

Reader, have we seen who are the blessed—the truly happy? If not, I think we have at least seen who are to become such.

Is there any thing in the pomp of of circumstances; any thing amongst 'toys and empires' to compare with the blessedness of those who hunger and thirst after righteousness? Escially when we associate the longing and the foretaste with the promise "for they shall be filled!"

O brother, let us study, and dwell on, and feed on these beatitudes of the Saviour, and find in them sweet instruction and sweet comfort. And then if persecutions should arise for the truth's sake, we will take it gladly, whilst we rejoice in the hope that after we "have suffered awhile," through the exceeding riches of his grace, "we shall see him and be like him." Amen.

New Birmingham, O., Mar., 1879.

We cannot cure infidels and skeptics by calling them hard names. No more can we by mere invective reform those who we think have gone astray in the churches and who are preaching a Gospel less pure than that of Paul. As for the most of men who are either altogether wrong, or who are tinged with evil, the way to drive them to total destruction or unrestrained fury, is to goad them with bitter epithets and set them aside under the ban of a vulgar curse. If a tree bears crab fruit, we will not reform it by denouncing it, throwing sticks at it and placarding its trunk with defaming notices. After all we may thus passionately do, it will go on producing astringent apples, and probably in greater quantity than before. But if we can graft it and infuse into it a better life, its foliage and fruit will immediately exhibit the power of a transformation, and instead of being useless and a pest as before, it will succeed to the condition of beneficence and profit. Many a man has been driven away from the church with cudgels which were wielded, professedly, at least, in the interest of his reformation.—United Presbyterian.

Nihilism.

The Russian Nihilists derive their name from the Latin Nihil (nothing). They would reduce all government to nothing, and are the political destructionists of the age. They would abolish all taxes and all propriety rights. At the Congress of Basle, held in 1869, Bahoumine (a Russia Nihilist), thus defined their theories: "By social liquidation I mean the expropriation of all existing proprieties, by the abolition of the political and legal state, which is the sanction and only guarantee of propriety as now existing, and of all that is called legal right, and their appropriation, in fact everywhere, and as much and as quickly as possible, by the force of events and circumstances."

At one of the state trials of the Nihilists a paper was produced, which was found in possession of one of the conspirators, containing a statement of their opinions. One article reads thus: "The Revolutionist despises all doctrines and has renounced all science of this world. * * He knows but one science, that of destruction."

Nihilism is really French infidel Socialism transplanted to Russia, and affected by some of her servants, because they think (as do some in other countries) that scepticism is a proof of mental ability and progress. However, in 1869, Nihilism began to assert its influences in organizing secret political societies. The chief agent of this was one Netchaief by name. He converted to his opinions many young men of the educated portion of Russian society, who became zealous propagandists of these doctrines among nobles and peasants, and even among the soldiers.

A "Circle" was formed consisting of five members; a certain number of these, when grouped, formed a "Section." The central direction was in Moscow, with its ramifications mostly through the southern provinces. Judicial functions were assigned to the central committee, even to executing capital punishment on those who betrayed their secrets; indeed, secrecy was one of the main features of this society. All communications were in secret cipher; each Circle was isolated, the governing members being known only to each other. Divisions, however, soon arose in their councils respecting the measures of accomplishing their aims. One party wanted to wait for a gradual propagation of their ideas; the other wanted to use physical force, and precipitate a revolution. The latter triumphed, but the plot being discovered, the leaders were arrested, tried and punished. This caused a lull in Nihilism, but in 1874 incitements to revolt appeared in Russia, in the shape of pamphlets, appeals, etc.

The Nihilists now joined hands with the most advanced Socialists, aiming at an annihilation of property, state, church, marriage; also at the murder of the Czar. Those spirits of evil which had in 1871 left Paris a wreck, seemed to have winged their flight to Russia. Investigations were begun by the government which implicated not only peasants and artisans, but many persons of superior education and rank, among them being Prof. Dakhovsky, of the Larvslar College of Law, and Khavanko, President of the General Sessions of the Magistrates of Tchernigoff. As a result of these investigations, thirty-seven provinces were found to be infested with Nihilism, yet so secretly had they worked that the police of St. Petersburg did not discover its presence until long after its establishment in that city. Silenced for a time at home, the Nihilists printed a journal in London called the Vpered (Onward), and provided for its introduction and circulation in Russia.

The late trial of Vera Sassalitch developed the amount of this insurrectionary spirit still prevailing. This woman attempted to assassinate in St. Petersburg, the Chief of Police, Gen. Trepoff; yet on her trial before a jury, composed largely of officials, she was acquitted, and treated virtually as a heroine.

Late tidings come from Russia that the insurrectionary spirit has broken out afresh in her universities. As these have always been the hotbeds of Nihilistic theories no wonder that the Russian government is disposed to deal severely with the offending students.—Presbyterian.

—The chief danger from any secret temperance society lies in the secret alliance of its leaders with other dark orders, in its influence as a training school for the rest, and its drawing by their love for the temperance cause, thousands of good men and women into the bewildering maelstrom of the secret worships which are excluding Christ from religion, and putting in his place his rival and antagonist "the god of this world."—Sandy Lake, Pa., News.

A Wisconsin Association Opens the Lodge Publicly and Successfully.

Springvale, Wis.

There is in this town an anti-secret organization which holds its meetings in a school house two miles and a half from the village of Rio. The organization has existed for several years. The past winter several members have been preparing to present the three first degrees of Masonry according to good authority; and having seen the degrees worked at our State meetings, they feel prepared to make the trial. The first part of February last there was a call from a few of the friends of the cause in Rio to meet and try to organize there, and an invitation was extended to this society to meet with and assist. The meeting was to be held in the hall over the Baptist church (formerly built for a store with a hall above, but since purchased by the Baptist society for church purposes). Accordingly a number from Springvale were on hand, but the key was nowhere to be found, although the hall had been used the night before. After some inquiry it was said to have been given to a young man who had left town that day, but we have been led to believe since that it was there all the time.

The meeting was therefore dropped for the time being. The church is mostly under secret society influence, although there are some anti-secretist members and it was from them the call was made.

After a few weeks they met again and organized successfully and then sent a request to the Springvale friends to work the degrees. So on Saturday evening, March 15th, this society was on hand to work the first degree; when lo! the lamp chimneys were gone and the stove taken down and top carried off.

Soon, however, another hall was procured and the degree worked, there being quite a number present to witness it. The Masons seem to be quite stirred up about it, at least they have indulged in language more forcible than elegant in regard to the Springvale people. Nevertheless, on March 20th, another hall was obtained and the third degree worked, killing Hiram and raising him on the five points of fellowship to the amusement of quite an audience. A. C. Jennings.

From the General Agent.

Warren, Ill., April 10 1879.

I am enjoying the hospitality of Bro. and sister Williams, whose knowledge of the secret orders and zeal in the defence of the truth make them a terror to evil doers, and a serious annoyance to the craft in their deceptive work in the church and community here. I accompanied Bro. W. to the prayer-meeting last evening in the Freewill Baptist church. Only a few were present, mostly women, but the meeting was a precious one. The absence of the pastor, H. G. Woodworth, was, I am told, not an unusual occurrence, although he lives less than a block away. It probably added to, rather than detracted from the spirituality of the occasion, as he defends and joins the pagan worship of the devil's church behind the door and beyond the "hole in the wall," and comes out from these midnight orgies to insult Christ and his "bride," the church, by wearing the symbols of Freemasonry conspicuously upon his garment when he enters the pulpit and prayer-meeting. This zealous member of the craft is considered so essential to the well-being of the lodge that his loving brothers carried him up in to their hall to attend an installation when he was too feeble to make the dizzy ascent himself, and presented him with a Masonic hat. This he wore to church, and I am told placed conspicuously upon the table beside the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of the Redeemer, whom he had rejected in lodge services only the night before he administered the communion on Sabbath morning.

I have great sympathy for those unfortunate men who have been deceived and snared into Satan's net and who would escape if they could see their way, but for a man who dotes upon his heroism and intellectual supremary, I can find no scriptural ground for excuse. The blinding influence of this system is terrible.

I have been waiting here for the rain to cease and the clouds to break away so that I could prudently attend to matters of business that brought me to this place; and indications are that I must continue to wait.

At Spring Prairie, Wisconsin, I had a good Sabbath with the Baptist church and lectured in the same place on Monday evening. The attendance was more them was anticipated under the circumstances, and most present gave earnest heed to the things spoken. The grange in Walworth county died soon after Prof. C. A. Blanchard was there. It was buried without a funeral and now rests in an unknown grave without a monument, and no mourners go about the streets to bewail its departure as untimely.

Bros. Britten, Whitmore and others have been rewarded for their efforts by witnessing a great change in the sentiment of their town and in fact the whole county in the last three years. They have the sympathy and active co-operation of their families, and on that account have less to contend with than some others who are less favored in this respect. The church there is in especial need of a pastor at this time whose gifts, education, principles and devout piety would render him acceptable and useful in gathering up and feeding the sheep and lambs of the flock. A Christian Minister Decides for Baal.

Upper Lake, Cal., Mar. 21, 1879.

Dear Cynosure:—Some months since a man claiming high social position, and by profession a school teacher, came to our town. He was a member of the order of "Good Templars," but as is always the case, he brayed more loudly and kicked and fought more desperately for his old mother Masonry than he did for himself and members of his own order. Hence a few days ago he challenged J. Black to debate the following question, viz: "Resolved, that oath bound secret societies, in their nature and tendency are opposed to the Christian religion." Black affirmed and the school-master, Mr. Mikesell, denied. The judges to set on the case were hard to find. Mr. Black granted him the privilege of selecting all the judges. At length, however, a missionary Baptist minister, pastor of the church at this place, agreed to act as moderator, and also one of the judges. Two brethren of the Southern Methodist church were obtained for the other two judges, and the debate opened lively and in earnest. The old handmaid and her daughters were kept on trial under charge of opposing the religion of Christ for four nights before full houses of eager listeners. The various lodges were well represented; and to the credit of Masons particularly I never saw men act more civilly, while jacks would occasionally drop their monstrous ear back and show signs of madness and dismay.

The opening speech forced the negative to admit that secret societies were religious institutions, and was in fact a saving religion and not the Christian religion, yet, said Mr. Mikesell, "it does not oppose the religion of Christ. It stands neutral." The affirmative then went to the bottom of the thing, and clearly showed that Masonry was identical with the ancient mysteries, that all oath-bound secret societies had their origin in the darkest heathenism, and that modern secretism, by whatever name, is in nature and principle Freemasonry; and that the ancient mysteries and pagan idolatry or devil-worship is Masonry the world over; that Baal worship had always opposed the true God. The above was proved by Masonic authority and the Bible. The credibility of the books proving Masonry was plainly proven and its horrible corruption shown up most clearly.

Now for the decision. But remember, if Mr. Mikesell proved one point for the negative, or answered to one already proved on the affirmative, I could not nor did not see it. The Baptist divine now finds himself in a dilemma, for the reason he had years ago committed himself against the lodge and was, as I am credibly informed, left by his church to preach to vacant seats and naked walls. I know myself that his congregation or church are lodge members or deep sympathizers, and how he is their pastor again, perhaps under promise to keep his tongue still on that question. You may imagine his trouble when compelled to decide between the two altars, Baal's and that of the true God, with many of Baal's worshipers and some, too, of his prophets, all of his own church, facing him with a defiant look. They tell him, "decide against us if you dare!" And he dare not, though he tried to get away without making a choice of Baal publicly, but could not. So it is, our Saviour hears the same old voice, "Away with him; crucify him." Give us Baal for our god and release unto us Barabbas.

Anti Secret Meetings at New Concord, Ohio.

New Concord O., Apr. 5, 1879.

Public initiations in the three degrees of Blue Lodge Masonry were conducted at this place on the evenings of March 31st and April 1st and 2d by Edmond Ronayne. The exercises on each evening occupied from four to five hours. The ceremonies of initiation were preceded and accompanied by numerous quotations from standard Masonic authorities, explaining their true force and signification. Taking the position that Freemasonry is what these authorities represent it to be, and examining it in the light of Bible history, precept and prophecy, Past Master Ronayne showed conclusively that Freemasonry is a religious system; that it rejects the God of the Bible and teaches salvation by works without Christ; that its pretended use of the Bible is a sham and the garbled and mutilated extracts from it are a cheat; also that the vision recorded in the 8th chapter of Ezekiel is literally fulfilled in Freemasonry, and that the Tammuz there spoken of is identical with the Osiris of the Egyptians, the Baal of the Phœnicians, the Apollo of the Greeks, the Jupiter of the Romans, and the Hiram Abiff of Freemasonry; that the rites of Freemasonry are intended to conform to the mysteries or secret worship of these heathen gods, all of whom are the same and personate the same. Such being the testimony of Masonry itself as to its character the conclusions were drawn that a worshiper of the natural sun cannot adore the Son of Righteousness, or, in short, cannot be a Christian; that this is an idolatrous nation, and that God's judgments will be visited upon us as such if we do not repent; that professed ministers of the Gospel who engage in Masonic worship are priests of Baal, and the opinion was expressed that as Elijah the prophet had never died he would some day be sent back to earth to complete the work commenced at Carmel (a question for the pre and post-millenarian controversialists).

During the initiations attention was called to the obligations making the candidate no longer a free man; especially was it shown that a minister of the Gospel subjecting himself to the dictates of the Grand Master, who may be a rumseller, or similar character, must thereby become, in Scripture language, "A dumb dog that cannot bark" for Jesus, the Divine Master, against the rumseller, his Worshipful Master. The power of thwarting the administration of justice in courts of law was made apparent to all. While it seems almost incredible, and every charitable mind is loth to believe that Past Master Ronayne's view of the whole matter is correct, yet we believe that its correctness was impressed on every intelligent unbiassed man, woman and child who heard him. Cavil was silenced. Past Master Ronayne possesses the rare acquirement of being learned in both Biblical and Masonic literature. He reasons with great clearness, and an evident desire to be understood, evincing that there is no necessity for taking extreme ground on the subject and manifesting a spirit of good will toward the fraternity which it would be well for all engaged in like work to imitate.

From the Capital of Minnesota.

St. Paul, Minn., April 5, 1879.

Dear Brother Kellogg:—I have lectured three times in this city, twice in the German Baptist church and once in the colored Baptist church. There are some Masons in the colored Baptist church, but none in the other. The German Baptists would not for one moment give place to a secretist at their communion-table, but the English Baptist church glories in her secretists and commends them from the pulpit. And it may be said of all the English speaking Protestant churches, so far as I know, that they run greedily after Baal Peor. The pastor of the German church has reported my lectures for the German papers. I cannot tell what effect my lectures have had. The audiences were interested and the attendance was good. The pastor of the colored church was caught by the Masons, but he tells me it is no place for a Christian and he has nothing to do with them. But he breaks bread for them at the Lord's table.

Yours truly,
W. Fenton.

Silver Lake Ind., Apr. 3, '79.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I write to inform you, and the many readers of the Cynosure, that for standing for the constitution and law of the United Brethren church and for God's way of saving souls, I was expelled from the class on the 30th of March, 1879, under the following charges:

"November the 30, 1873. We the the committee of the Fair View class, have met at the residence of B. Uish at the above date, and asked two questions, namely, that said Uish attend church and pay his assessment." (This is an exact copy of the specifications and charges.)

This committee was instructed by the presiding elder, J. Sickafoose, and by him these specifications and charges were prepared. Now my reasons for not paying the preachers and for not attending church, I plainly gave to the above committee as follows: The U. B preachers so bitterly opposing me for opposing secret societies. As, Rev. J. Surran called the Christian Cynosure "a sin for sure and a devilish sheet," and first positively denying and afterward confessing that he was a Freemason, and through his deception four of the U. B. churches, viz, Fair View, Silver Lake, Manchester and Keesey's were closed against our General Agent and Lecturer, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and God was denied the power or authority (by a Mason) of having his message delivered by his servant in the Fair View church.

Rev. J. Pickerd called the Christian Cynosure a posionous sheet, but endorsed the U. B. Tribune (or Observer, or whatever it is), published by the twenty-six Freemasons who called Bishops Edwards, Dickson and Glossbrenner "children of the devil," for standing for the constitution and the law of the U. B. church, and who labored hard for two days to set aside the law of the church; yet Pickerd endorsed that paper and preferred it to the Religious Telescope.

Rev. S. Wells discarded the law, saying, "I care not for man-made rule; I care not for any man's preconceived opinion; I care not for your restrictive clause;" and then as a confession of his guilt for throwing away the legislative, the judiciary and the executive power of the church, numbering at that time about 135,000 members, said, "Put me out if you dare," repeating it, and then received a Freemason and an Odd-fellow and a granger as members. By his actions he thus reared an altar for the worship of Baal, which in the estimation of secretists is superior to the altar erected to the worship of the living and true God; while the Discipline (or law) says (page 80), "No person shall be permitted to join our church while holding membership in any secret society," and the Constitution (page 16, article 2, sec. 7) says, "There shall be no connection with secret combinations."

Rev. E. Leithman refused to inform himself, and in a bold and defiant manner read the Discipline and gave us to understand that he cared not for the constitution or the law, and boasting of his ignorance of secret societies, he then published me to the class and congregation and the world as dishonest for not paying him for his wilful ignorance: while the law (Sec. 3:6, p. 81) says: "It shall be the duty of the pastor to instruct our people upon the evils of secret societies, and to endeavor to prevent them from being ensnared in such evils, and, so far as possible, to reclaim all who may have joined any secret order."

Rev. J. Good also failed to enforce the law of the church, and did not read the Discipline, knowing he would have to read the above law. (Please see Discipline, Sec. 11:4, page 63) "To read the....four sections ....every six months....namely, the confession of faith, reception and duties of members, ardent spirits and secret societies." And because I did not pay him for discarding the law I had to again be published to the class and congregation and the world as being a dishonest and immoral man. Even after he told our State Agent and myself (turning his hand) said, "it was with him on secret societies, just——"

Twice I spoke to presiding elder M. Commons, in regard to the constitution and law of the church, saying that this work should be done, etc. Said he "I know it, Bro. Uish, but we must leave that for the General Conference;" adding, "when I embraced religion, and especially when I went into the ministry, I thought ministers could speak freely on secret societies, and when I left the order and joined the church, or rather joined the church and then left the order, I spoke to an aged minister on this subject and he said, 'Shut your mouth, be still, don't say anything.'" Now whose servant is he and all that follow this rule? To me this aged minister was a slave to lodge power, and is not every one who obeys him in so far also a slave to lodge power? The Discipline, page 78, Sec. 2, says: "All slavery, in every sense of the word, is totally prohibited; and shall in no way be tolerated in the church."

God, through Isaiah (58:1), says: "Cry aloud, and spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins." Please compare this with, "Shut your mouth; be still; don't say anything against secret societies." Then please see what God says (Isaiah 56: 10, 11): "His watchmen are blind; they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, they are greedy dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand; they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter." But does not Jesus say, "And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." (Mat. 15:14) And Paul warns us to "Beware of dogs." (Phil. 3:2) And John tells us where he sees the dogs. (See Rev. 22:15) "For without are dogs," etc. Now must I pay these "dogs" for misleading the flock?

"My sheep wandered through all the mountains and upon every high hill; yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them." You cannot find a lodge of any note in the United States but what some of the flock are led in. The preachers generally are taken in free, so the flock will follow.

Jesus says, "I am the way and the truth and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." Now please see Discipline page 12 and question 3, section 3, page 46. But Freemasonry through good works and by the common gavel pretends to save its dupes, by personifying Hiram Abiff (name not found in the Bible) their chief corner stone.

Now just how the lodge can reject Christ, and the power of the Holy Ghost and still retain God is more than I can understand. Hence I would urgently say, O brethren, let us introduce Jesus to a dying world, then Jesus will introduce us to the heavenly host. Heaven is a large place, and we will need a Friend to introduce us. Jesus says in Mat. 10: 32-33: "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men him will I also confess before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men him will I also deny before my Father."

But I am expelled and for the same cause that the Baptist church in Perry, N. Y., expelled eight of its old members, because they refused to sustain and fellowship Freemasonry in the church. And five of the best ministers in the Indiana eldership (Church of God) were expelled, because they refused to sustain and fellowship Freemasonry in the church. Yet I am asked, Can you not come and hear and help support our present preacher, Rev. J. Todd? How can I, when he is a Royal Arch Mason? It is true he publicly said on the 30th of March, that he had not attended lodge for four and one-half years, but did not say he did not attend chapter in this time. Jesus says: "Blessed are ye when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company," etc. I do praise the good Lord for a present, free and full salvation; not through the lodges, but through Jesus our present and only and all-sufficient Saviour. May the good Lord enlighten them, and forgive them, for they know not what they do.

Yours for the Bible way of saving souls.

Benj. Uish.

Throwing Bombs into the Enemy's Camp.

Editor Cynosure:—As I have seen different plans suggested by the friends of this great reform to educate the world against secret societies, I will set forth mine. As we know that there are many denominations in the United States, and as far as I know all hold an annual ecclesiastical meeting, classes, synods, conferences or presbyteries. Now each of those different bodies report in the minutes of their proceedings the number of the ministers and their addresses, the number of congregations or preaching stations, the number of members, etc. Now to circulate our reform literature by way of the church, let some brother take upon himself, or raise a club to buy Cynosure tracts enough to send each member belonging to one of these before-mentioned ecclesiastical bodies one tract. As there are many ecclesiastical bodies as I am not prepared to know much in respect to them outside of my own church; but the Evangelical Lutheran church have, in the United States fifty-three District synods. Have we not men of means enough so that one out of each of these bodies can give each member in the association he belongs to a tract, or one tract to every two or three? Now if this plan meets the sanction of the readers of the Cynosure I shall be glad. I am no sectarian, and I make use of the Lutheran church as an example. If every denomination do likewise, as soon as enough have reported their names to comply with the above, then let us go to work and get the best and most appropriate tracts and carefully envelope them and direct as follows: "To the full council of —— congregation for distribution, in care of Rev. ——." I say full council since there might be a Judas in the council and he cut the fuse of the bomb, and then it would not explode. Philip Kribs.

"Is there no Help for the Widow's Son?"

Mr. Editor:—I would call the attention of your readers to the fact that two of the greatest Masons of the country, and at the same time the two most covetous and mercenary politicians of the whole world, ex-General Butler, and ex-Senator Cameron, have at last turned to bay against that "widow." They have been cultivating the widow (the Masonic, speculative widow) all their lives, and now the widow comes in for her share of the profits. They have fought her vigorously, and destroyed her house, not by the aid of long Masonic prayers exactly, but by the aid of a court of justice, which, as Masons, they are aiding to corrupt.

The good Lincoln was one of the laxest governors in the world, but both ex-General Butler and ex-Senator Cameron were too much for him. One he sent to the rear, to Lowell, and the other he ablegated to Russia; but not till they had inflicted infinitely more mischief upon the country than the widow Oliver has done upon them.

It was the assassination of President Lincoln that let Gen. Butler loose from his confinement in Lowell; and it was the Masonry of Pennsylvania and the corrupt administration of Gen. Grant that white-washed ex-Senator Cameron, and restored him to favor with a Masonic party.

But at last, these distinguished members of the lodge are beginning to be haunted by their own widows.

So mote it be.

Persistent Effort to Disguise the Wolf.

Schaghticoke, N. Y.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—Indignation compels me to state some facts in regard to the persistent effort made in this place to have the abominable works of darkness clothed with the apparent sanction of religion.

Some few years ago we found notices posted that on a certain day of the next week there would be an installation of officers of the Masonic lodge, which would be held in our church, accompanied by a lecture by a member of the order. On ascertaining the fact, we drew up a remonstrance against such sacrilegious use of our house of worship, which we presented (signed by some ten or twelve of the members of the church) to the board of trustees, who held a meeting the day before the proposed installation. The next morning I received a note from the president of the board, who was a prominent Mason, stating that they had duly considerad our request, but as the arrangements had already been made and the notices given they could not very well countermand them. He also gave me a pressing invitation to come down and hear the lecture, which I respectfully declined.

A few days after a glowing description of the installation and lecture appeared in one of our county weeklies (whose editor is a Mason), congratulating Christians in that they were doing away with their prejudices against the order. Since then we have had no occasion for complaint until now. We have had one or two funerals of Masons held in our church by request of friends, but the services were always conducted by the pastor in ordinary form, and the Masonic ritual observed at the grave where it belongs.

Two weeks ago a prominent Mason of our place died. Notice was given Sabbath evening that the funeral services, by request of the famly, would be held in our church on the following Tuesday, one of the daughters being a member of our church. At the appointed hour a number of Masons formed their prescribed procession at the residence of the deceased, and marched to the church as usual. The services were opened by a chant by the choir, selected passages of Scripture were read, and appropriate remarks and exhortations were made by the pastor, when he was told they would dispense with his closing prayer as they had a form for the occasion.

To my surprise the Masonic chaplain then arose and gave the exhortation laid down in their ritual for the services at the grave, which was very inappropriate, as you know, at the church, and some of it very objectionable to sinners redeemed by the precious blood of Christ. The brethren were exhorted to prepare for the solemn hour of death by a strengthened resolution of amendment, as the happy reflections of a well-spent life afforded the only consolation at a dying hour. I thought to myself, what consolation then can we have who have not spent all our lives well? Jesus must have been very much mistaken when he consoled the dying thief with the promise that he would be with him in Paradise. The Master's ceremony was then given, explaining the emblems of the lamb-skin and the evergreen, which were then deposited in the grave (the church) and the craft followed suit. The rest of the services I cannot describe, for I could not endure any more and left. And now we will again beg of our trustees to prevent a repetition of such sacrilege in our house of worship, because being silent might be construed as sanctioning such performances. Jacob Ackart.

Birmingham, Iowa.

"By thy words shalt thou be justified, and by thy words shalt thou be condemned." A Mason speaking of Elder Rathbun, who lectured here a short time since, said that what Rathbun told of Masonry was all lies; that if Mr. R. had told the secrets of Masonry as he (the Mason) knew them, he would not have got out of town alive. Thus unwittingly admitting Masonry to be the same murderous institution that Mr. R. and others say it is.

I am satisfied that any intelligent person with a desire for truth and a willingness to receive it, need not wait for a lecturer to come and tell us of these things. We can see them for ourselves in almost every community. We read of these things in the Cynosure; we are told of the idolatrous worship of the lodge, of their blasphemous oaths and their horrid death penalties, of the murderous teachings, of the lying and the intrigue, of the deception and hypocrisy of Masons and we are constrained to believe these things are so; but then we think it cannot be that our neighwould do these things. We know Masonry to be an evil but the citizens of our town are so moral and religious that if they are Masons we have nothing to fear; thus sitting down at our ease and forgetting that the teachings and principles of Masonry are the same the world over. Its oaths are as blasphemous, its death penalties as barbarous and shocking right here in our community as anywhere else. No matter if it is our near neighbor, no matter if it is our beloved preacher, they have, if Masons, taken these same horrid oaths, bound themselves by these same unrighteous obligations, and will go as far to defend a brother Mason, whether he be "right or wrong," here as anywhere else.

Hear how they talk of those that oppose them: "He ought to be killed." "I'd rather see him dead than any man I know." "He's a black-hearted villian and ought to suffer the penalty of his broken obligation," and for no other cause but that of having no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reproving them. These are facts known to all but the wilfully blind, and it is time that all lovers of Christ, all friends of reform, were fully awake to these things. We ought to pray more earnestly, to labor more faithfully, and encourage and sustain those men who have taken their lives in their hands, or rather have put their lives in the hands of God and gone forth to battle with this Goliah of iniquity.

Mrs. E. B. Harbaugh.

Our Mail.

L. B. Lathrop, Hollister, Cal., writes:

"I am preparing to lecture one week from next Sunday, March 9th, at the morning meeting house. My text will be 2 Cor. 4:3, 4. I intend to divide my time after this and give a part of each day to work and a part to study for lecturing. I hold no fellowship with any church here. I have paid my last dollar to any worshiper of Baal."

Mr. Lathrop encloses a letter to himself from Henry Campion, San Francisco, California, from which we take the following extract:

"I am astonished that Satan has bound so many men together, and so cunningly, and yet I am told that Freemasonry is a good, moral and benevolent institution. What an outrage against society, and what a degraded system it is. I want to be free, and to be free indeed, and to call no man master. I think secretism is one of Satan's masterpieces to delude people with. I love to recite the text, 'In secret have I said nothing.' God is love, and he is a rewarder of him that seeketh him."

G. P. Loomis, Birmingham, Ia., writes:

"Bro. Rathbun has been doing a good work among us, and has made many warm friends. He worked the first and third degrees in Birmingham and Fairfield, and gave a lecture in Birmingham on the religion of Masonry, and Masonic charity as experienced by himself."

D. H. Newman, Spencer, N. Y., writes:

"I pray that God may teach the preachers of our land as he did Ezekiel in the 8th chapter; take them by the top of the head and lift them up out of the slums and fog, so they may see the abominations that are committed. But it is to be feared that some of them have gone so far in the hole in the wall they never will get out again."

R. S. Ball, Huron, O., writes:

"I am very hopeful for the cause, although I am surrounded with discouragements, because 'He that is for us is more than they that be against us.'"

Rev. A. A. Wolf, Duncan, Ill., writes:

"My sympathy is for the Cynosure and I am opposed to secrecy, and it is too late in the day to compromise with secrecy, the handmaid of Satan."

O. Breed, Avery, Ill., writes:

"I am holding the fort in this place against great odds. We want a Ronayne or a Rathbun here to make an advance on the works of the enemy."

E. Mathews, Hudson, Mich., writes:

"I still hold myself free to respond to calls for work in overthrowing secretism."

Miss M. A. Macauley, Pittsfield, Ill., writes:

"I send six renewals and one new subscription. We like your paper very much. Have been reading it about seven years, I think. We do all we can for it and will continue to do so. The reform is gaining slowly here. A number of men have said that they will not vote for a man who belongs to a secret society. None of our ministers belong to a secret order that I know of, except the Methodist Episcopal minister, who belongs to the Odd-fellows."

Mr. A. W. Hall, Elgin, Ia., writes:

"Masonry here is dead. A Master Mason here, claiming to be an infidel, was approached, after Bro. Rathbun's exposition, by some of the brethren, and urged to deny the truthfulness of the expositions. His reply was this: 'You Methodists can lie all you have a mind to about it, but I won't.' There are several Masons here who declare the expositions were correct."

Albert Hepburn, Salem, Oregon, writes:

"We have had a very mild winter here, more so than usual. It has rained scarcely any since the fair last October. Times are very dull at present, but not more than might be expected, as there are so many Chinese who are on the lookout for all the labor, which white laborers would do if they were not underworked by the Celestials. And there are a great many of the craft that are combined together and block out those who do not belong to them. I would like to see Ronayne or Hinman out here to stir the people up and let them see the right side."

J. B. Wells, De Ruyter, N. Y. writes:

"The Masonic folly is exceedingly popular here."

John T. Carson, Springdale, Ia., writes:

"I am always interested in every paper I receive. I believe you are doing a good work. God be praised for it."

Elder A. F. Dempsey, Lisbon Center, N. Y., writes:

"I have been afflicted in body, some of the time very sorely, now for near six weeks. Thank God, my afflictions have been made a great blessing to my full salvation."

P. P. Perry, Fort Scott, Kan., writes:

"I think I can see some signs of our cause prospering in our vicinity. It is a hard task when we have to fight the church. If we only had the world to fight we would soon conquer. Our country must be in a deplorable condition. Swindle and monopoly appear to be the whole theme. I hope the Cynosure will be able to ferret out the swindle more and more. The Fort Scott ring have had a short respite from the Short Creek swindle, where a few men made what money was made, and hundreds of men were made poor; some of them so poor they had to beg their way home. Now another scheme is being tried in this county. Another railroad monopoly in which they want the county to vote bonds to the amount of $120,000, and it is said they are expecting to make $30,000 themselves. How can men be so brazen or so bare-faced! I mention these facts that people may be on their guard. I tell our people if they have a home to stick to it, and if not try and get one and let all speculators go. If we can make an honest living we had better be satisfied, and not run in debt a single dollar, for it is a fearful thing to be in debt now."

Mrs. E. J. Rockhold, Bethany, O., writes:

"I am greatly interested in your publications exposing secret orders, which I verily believe one of the greatest evils of the present day."

Mrs. Lancaster, Cambridge, Me., writes:

"We live in a lodge community, only one hundred rods from the Masonic temple. We are the only family that manifest any opposition to this anti-Christian worship. We are trying to do what we can. We have several of Ronayne's Hand Books, also Finney on Masonry, which we lend wherever and whenever we can. I am sure we have kept some from the lodge."

E. Weyman, Apohaqui, N. B., writes:

"I have been convinced that Freemasonry with all other sworn secret societies were wrong ever since I read Morgan's disclosure of Masonry. After that time Masonry was quite unpopular, but within a few years it has been revived in our province, so that our ministers are joining the lodges. A number of years ago I presented a resolution in a yearly conference of Free Baptists to protest against all associations of men sworn to secrecy, but it was rejected. I have become fully satisfied that all such associations are injurious to church and state. I am an old man, in my 79th year, but if I was a young man I would not take any stand with any body of Christians that would not stand clear from those works of darkness."

Albert Benefiel, Upper Lake, Cal., writes:

"I think secrecy is on the decline. There is to be a debate in town to-night, on the secrecy question, by Messrs. Black and Maxwell. It is becoming a little too still. The devil says, Don't disturb the peace. I say, Bro. Black, wake us up. I know a few sensible men who have belonged to the lodge who are ashamed of the cess-pool into they have fallen. May God, through his instrumentalities, bring secrecy into disrepute everywhere."

S. L. Cook writes from Attica, Ind.:

"I have just finished a course of lectures in Carroll county; expect to put in this week in this (Fountain) county. Hence to Gibson county if I can reach it. Thence still on the war path."

R. R. Atkins, Flint, Mich., writes:

"Permit me to say that we regard the Cynosure as a true and devout Christian reform journal without a parallel in the history of the world. You can consider us as subscribers right along, heart and hand with you in this glorious reform, and our prayer is that God in his infinite wisdom and goodness will assist you, and all true Christians in forever obliterating this gigantic evil, Speculative Freemasonry, from our land."

LESSON XVII.—April 27, 1879.—THE COMING SAVIOUR.

SCRIPTURE.—Isaiah 42:1-10.

1 Behold my servant, whom I uphold;
Mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth;
I have put my Spirit upon him:
He shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.
2 He shall not cry, nor lift up,
Nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.
3 A bruised reed shall he not break,
And the smoking flax shall he not quench:
He shall bring forth judgment unto truth.
4 He shall not fail nor be discouraged,
Till he have set judgment in the earth:
And the isles shall wait for his law.
5 Thus saith God the Lord,
He that created the heavens, and stretched them out;
He that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it;
He that giveth breath unto the people upon it,
And spirit to them that walk therein:
6 I the Lord have called thee in righteousness,
And will hold thine hand,
And will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people,
For a light of the Gentiles;
7 To open the blind eyes,
To bring out the prisoners from the prison,
And them that sit in darkness out of the prison house.
8 I am the Lord: that is my name:
And my glory will I not give to another,
Neither my praise to graven images.
9 Behold the former things are come to pass,
And new things do I declare:
Before they spring forth I tell you of them.
10 Sing unto the Lord a new song,
And his praise from the end of the earth,
Ye that go down to the sea, and all that is therein;
The isles, and the inhabitants thereof.

NOTES.

The Book of Isaiah contains chiefly prophecies, with some history. It was probably written and arranged by Isaiah himself. The first portion of the book relates mainly to the Jewish people and their foes, with prophecies about Assyria, Moab, Egypt, Syria, Edom, Tyre, and some historical facts of the reign of Hezekiah. The second portion is chiefly a prophecy about the Messiah: Isaiah has been called the "Gospel Prophet." Of sixty-six chapters, forty-four are quoted or referred to in the New Testament, and Isaiah is named as the author of the prophecy twenty-one times. He is said by tradition to have been sawn asunder when ninety years of age, and during Manasseh's reign.

"Smoking Flax," or dimly burning wick of the Eastern lamp, which was often made of flax or other similar material, laid in a narrow urn-shaped vessel, used as a lamp.

KNOWLEDGE OF CHRIST.—John Flavel compares our progress in the knowledge of Christ to that gained by those settling in a newly-discovered continent. At first they sit down by the sea side, and upon the borders of the land; gradually they search further into the heart of the continent. The best are only on the borders of this vast continent of knowledge.

SUGGESTIONS AND QUESTIONS FOR SCHOLARS.

"Isaiah, the Man, and the Book." The prophet Isaiah lived in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah, kings of Judah (chap. 1:1). "The ordinary chronology gives B. C. 758 as the beginning of Jotham's reign, and B. C. 698 as the year of Hezekiah's death." He may have been twenty years old when he began to prophesy, and tradition says he lived until the reign of Manesseh, by whose order he was sawn asunder. Of his personal life, we only know the name of his father (chap. 1:1), who, tradition says, was the brother of King Amaziah; and the fact that his wife is called "the prophetess," and the names of his sons bear witness to his prophetic announcements. Looking at him as a witness for God, his character appears almost unrivaled. The nation of Israel was carried away captive during his ministry; and that of Judah was morally very corrupt, and hastening to its fall. The succession of four kings and the reformation under Hezekiah, gives special importance to the prophecies uttered by this wonderful man. For sixty years he comforted the people, expounded the Word of God, reproved them for their sins, warned them of their doom, and entreated them to return to Jehovah, maintaining a holy dignity in his many offices, united with the deepest resignation and unfaltering faith toward God. But he is especially known and endeared to us as the "Evangelical prophet," and his descriptions of the coming Messiah; his sufferings and rejection by Israel, and their sufferings and rejection in consequence of their rejection of him, together with his return, and their subsequent restoration and blessing, make this book of prophetic testimony one of the most precious and profitable in the sacred Scriptures. The book has been divided into two parts, viz., chapters 1-39, pertaining to the nation under the old dispensation, and chapters 40-46, reaching to the end of the church dispensation and beyond. It has also been divided into several parts, giving the distinct views of the prophecies. But we may confine our studies to following the footsteps of Jesus in Isaiah, and especially in comparing the chapters and subjects selected for our home reading lessons.

"Isaiah." In Hebrew, Ye-sha-ya-hu, i. e., help or salvation of Jehovah. In Greek Esaias, Mat. 3:3. The name of his father was Amoz. He is to be distinguished from the prophet Amos. "The family and tribe to which Isaiah belonged are now entirely unknown." He mentions his wife and two sons, 7:3; 8:3, 4. According to his own statement his ministry extended over a period within the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah. Many of the best authorities, taking the first five chapters of the book of his prophecies as a general introduction to the whole, find in chap. 6:1 a note of time marking the commencement of his ministry. "If we reckon from the last year of Uzziah to the fourteenth of Hezekiah, the last in which we find any certain historical traces of Isaiah, we obtain as the minimum of his prophetic ministry a period of forty-seven years, and this, supposing that he entered on it even at the age of thirty, would leave him at his death less than eighty years old. And even if it be assured that he survived Hezekiah, and continued some years under his successor, the length of his life will after all be far less than that of Jehoida the high-priest, who died in the reign of Joash at the age of 130 years.—Alexander.

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

1. The purpose of God in his works of creation and providence, and in the conduct of his moral government centers upon the Messiah and the establishment and progress of his kingdom.

2. This kingdom is to be extended until it comprises all nations.

3. To the extension of this kingdom God is pledged by prediction and promise.

4. By means of it he will make known his perfections and exhibit his glory.

5. It is the duty of every man to bow to the authority of the Son of God, the king in this kingdom, to obey his commands and to be loyal to his person and service.

6. This kingdom spreads its conquests by means of the truth and by the gracious operation of the Holy Spirit on the mind, heart and conscience of mankind.

7. The progress of this kingdom is a matter of joy and gratitude to all the subjects of it.

CONTEMPORANEOUS HISTORY.

During the period of Isaiah's labors there was a very strong current setting in toward confirmed idol worship. The northern kingdom had become hopelessly corrupt. And some years before our present lesson was written it had wholly disappeared from the list of nations, never more to be restored. And in the kingdom of Judah the state and government were in contest between two rival parties, the one favoring the worship of Jehovah, and the other given up to idolatry. It required the utmost efforts of piety and patriotism to save the nation from following at once in the track of the northern kingdom. The long and earnest labors of Isaiah must have contributed largely toward the preservation of "godly seed" in Israel.

At the date of our lesson the city of Rome has been founded about fifty years.

STRIKING STATEMENTS.—"A bruised reed shall he not break." The gentleness of Christ.

"The Isles shall wait for His law." The most distant nations are agonizing and unconsciously longing for the law, the just authority, as well as the merciful deliverance of Christ.

"I * * will * * give thee * * to open the blind eyes." It has been said that among all the miracles of the Old and New Testaments no one opened the eyes of the blind but Jesus. He is the "Light of the world."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 1879.

A NEW BOOK—Ezra A. Cook & Co., will soon issue a book intended to be a sequel to all the works written in the discussion of secret orders, of which Jesuitism is chief and lodgery its image. It will give: 1st. An authenticated exposure of the Masonic ritual, certified to as correct by living Masons of known standing and character; 2d. A skeleton exposure, in the shape of notes from standard lodge writers, which notes confirm and illustrate the ritual throughout; and 3d, explanations and analyses of the whole lodge system by the senior editor of this paper. Dr. Bacon said of Weld's "Testimony of a Thousand Witnesses" to the cruelties of slavery, that it was "A Tremendous Book." It is hoped that this compilation will be no less. It will throw more light on the relations of the Beast and his image, Popery and Lodgery, than any work yet published. From extracts to be hereafter published our readers will be able to judge of its merits.

GRANT AND THE COLORED VOTERS.—Bro. B. J. Turner for a number of years a colored teacher, now at Antioch, eleven miles from Columbus, Miss., writes the subjoined interesting letter. The Military Chapel church has a membership of 63, and is "Northern Methodist." On the 23d ult. Bro. Eli Tapley visited the church and gave a brief address on secret orders, at the close of which the church, which is warmly opposed to secretism, voted to place its name with the Associated Churches of Christ. The allusion to General Grant in the letter is significant:

"It affords me great pleasure to write to you that the circulating of the paper and tracts by Mr. E. Tapley are doing great good. The Methodist church which I belong to, the Military chapel, numbering 63; the pastor in charge, Bro. Thos. Brownlee. We are bitterly opposed to all secret societies whatever, also hoping that all other colored churches will do the same; wishing that they had speakers all through the South to waken them up to a sense of their duty. The Lord only knows how we suffer; the justice of the peace being a Mason he gives judgment in favor of the Masons and against us. May the Lord bless your paper and give you ten thousand subscribers. We love General U. S. Grant because he sent his army and caught the ku-klux clan. I wonder does he love us, and will he do the same for Masonry and the grange, if we should elect him the next President? The grange has said in the lodge that our wages shall be 40 and 50 cents and we can't get any more. Please send me a copy of you paper. Pray for us. B. J. TURNER.

—A school-house exposition was given near Rio, Wis., on the Saturday evening following the meetings reported in our "Reform News."

BISHOP WEAVER.

In last week's Telescope this brother devotes above a column to the editor of the Cynosure. He thinks I have misrepresented him. But I do not see that I have. A paper was started in Harrisburg, Pa., called the United Brethren Tribune. I first saw a copy of it in Phœnixville, Pa. The pastor of the United Brethren church in that place was circulating and obtaining subscribers for it. He told me that he was a member of a secret lodge, and refused his consent for an anti-secret lecture in his church.

Another paper was afterward started in Harrisburg called the Observer, which was openly and strongly opposed to the United Brethren rule against secret societies.

A third paper, the Itinerant, is now published in Harrisburg, edited by Rev. Mr. Rigor of the Brethren church, to which so far as I know or can learn Freemasons make no objection, and which is also opposed to the church rule.

A year ago (May, 1878) a convention of preachers from United Brethren conferences met in Dayton (not by conference appointment) and held a revolutionary convention. We have not the minutes in full before us; but Masonic papers hailed the convention and freely published its proceedings. That revolutionary body: 1. Condemned their church rule against secret societies, proposing none in its place. And 2. They resolved that "its enforcement is wrong." That is, not that it should be repealed, but not enforced, set aside by preachers and churches; "nullified" in short.

In that nullification convention the proposition was made to remove the Harrisburg paper to Dayton, and puplish it beside the Telescope. I do not recollect how the vote stood, but the proposition met with favor and was voted. Rev. I. S. Buchwalter, a devoted United Brethren minister, wrote concerning it: "See their audacity in proposing to remove their printing establishment to Dayton, Ohio." Their "printing establishment" was that at Harrisburg. It was for writing an encouraging letter to the Itinerant, and bidding the "printing establishment" God speed, that the Cynosure censured Bishop Weaver. "For he that biddeth him God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds" (2 John 11). The "evil deeds" of the Harrisburg paper was that it was the "printing establishment" of that wicked nullification convention; and we rebuked Bishop Weaver for fraternizing with men who were running a rival and opposition paper to the Telescope, and proposing to move it to Dayton and set it up under the eaves of the Brethren printing house.

Now if we have done injustice to Bishop Weaver, he has only to point to his record and say, "The Cynosure is mistaken. I opposed that nullification convention and its Harrisburg organ. All my brethren know this." But if he should say this, they would ask him this plain question: "Why, then, did you write that Harrisburg letter?"

This is all we intend to say on this subject. If Bishop Weaver has done his duty as a faithful bishop and guardian of his church, he is far above and beyond our censure; for "not he who commendeth himself is justified, but whom the Lord commendeth." But if he has failed as Peter did when Paul rebuked him, I hope he will repent like Peter, and yet speak of me as his "Beloved brother" Blanchard, as Peter afterward spoke of Paul.

"THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST."

Brother P. P. Perry of Fort Scott, Kansas, writes under date March 17th:

"We have been agitating the subject of organizing an anti-secrecy, anti-tobacco church. Some hold that we must organize under the head of some denomination or else we will start a new denomination. Others take the ground that we can organize under any name we please and after awhile offer ourselves to any conference or presbytery we may choose. For instance we could call ourselves the Tabernacle church or Bethel church, without specifying any denomination. Please give us your views in respect to this matter."

ANSWER.

The last opinion is Scriptural and sound only put the name of Christ into your church name, as Tabernacle Church of Christ. All existing church denominations were at first organized in this way, and were blest until they began to put their denomination above Christ, or practice worships not given of God. The Associated Churches of Christ were not intended as a new denomination but to renew all denominations corrupted by the lodge or lodgery. They are already so widely dispersed that they can never meet together and do business as a new denomination, and the dispersion will continue.

Meantime, as the New Testament churches sprung up as "little independent republics," each transacting its own business, so it may be now; and by sending its name to be enrolled among the Associated Churches it will secure the following desirable ends and objects:

1. It will give its testimony against the anti Christs, corruptions and idolatries which have "crept in unawares" within the walls of Zion.

2. It will be strengthened by union of heart and strengthen others.

3. Whenever there is a presbytery, association, conference or convention in its vicinity, "seeking first the kingdom of God," and whose ways please God, it can give to and receive the right hand of fellowship from that body.

THE LODGE IN SYCAMORE, ILLINOIS.

The citizens of Sycamore, Illinois, a pleasant inland city, have been stirred up thoroughly by the secret society discussion: by lectures years since given by Prof. C. A. Blanchard, by the Arnold brothers, by the the Free Methodist, and now lately by a discussion in two of the Sycamore papers, briefly noticed last week. Perhaps the good people of Sycamore have had argument and facts enough, but they are perplexed by the division of intelligent and good men. How can the lodge be so vile as the Cynosure makes it, while leading minds, church members who pass for good men still adhere to it, and ministers who are not Masons yet adhere to their members who are? We wish to relieve their perplexity, and as Mr. A. J. Blanchard, the teacher and guide of their children, is now prominently before them as the champion of the lodge, and the bitter contemner of its opponents, we cannot do better than to explain the case of the lodge by his own case; observing, by the way, that we think much better of Mr. Blanchard, who comes out boldly for his lodge, than we do of a minister of the Gospel who pretends to be an Anti-mason, as Rev. Mr. Grassie has assured us he is, while doing everything in his power to protect the lodge and injure those who oppose it, thus giving the lie to his professions by his practice.

But why, you ask, should intelligent and capable men like Mr. Blanchard, adhere to Masonry if it is "the abomination" which it is represented to be by those who renounce it?

We answer, in the first place, Mr. Blanchard is ignorant of the nature of Masonry as many Papists and Mormons are of their systems. The proof is this: He (Mr. B.) lately told you in his printed articles that he had never seen Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, a book which stands related to the lodge as the Digest of the Statutes of Illinois is related to the State. This book had reached its twelfth edition two years ago, showing how universally it is read and relied on by the order. The presumption is that Mr. Blanchard has joined the lodge, as thousands of ambitious young men have done, and remains ignorant of its nature. Another proof of his ignorance is that he told you in his late printed articles that "The Blazing Star was an emblem of the star which led the wise men to Christ." Formerly it was so. But Mackey (Lex. p. 62) says: "As this allusion interferes with the universal character of Masonry, it is now generally omitted." After English Masonry was adopted by the Jews and by French atheists, all such allusions to Christ were cast out as unmasonic, out of place in a "universal religion." Mr. Blanchard might as properly profess to superintend your schools while ignorant of the school law and Webster's dictionary as to champion Masonry while ignorant of its laws and lexicon. "The Blazing Star" has not only ceased long since to represent the star which led the wise men to Christ, but "The Star of the five points" has been adopted as a symbol of "the five points of fellowship;" which are what you see in the pictured resurrection of Hiram Abiff by the lodge master, viz, "Foot to foot, knee to knee, breast to breast, hand to back, and cheek to cheek."

And this disgusting embrace of a pretended corpse fourteen days dead and decayed accordingly, is not only symbolized by the "star of five points;" but the same star is the chosen symbol of the adoptive lodge for women, which men are permitted to join! Whether the infamous suggestions of such a symbol are intended to corrupt and debauch the imaginations of women meeting in a night lodge away from their homes and husbands or not, the system of which it is part is twin with that of Baal Peor. (See Num. 35: 1-3)

Then there is something in the rites of a false religion which blinds the worshipers. "In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not" is not a figure but a fact. When the Holy Ghost came on Saul, "There fell from his eyes, as it had been scales; which was but an outward and material type of what happened to his mind. Indeed the folly and stupidity of all false religions are such that the natural sense and reason of mankind would reject them but for this blinding process by which Satan, "the god of this world," dims and darkens the mind of his worshipers. And the mission of Christ has principal reference to the removal of this soul-blindness which the false worships of earth superinduce in men.

"If from thick films can cleanse the visual ray,
And on the slightless eyeball pour the day"

Whether he gives efficacy to truth or receptivity to the mind, the result is, he who was blind sees.

If these ideas be Scriptural and true, nothing but divorcing the two kinds of worship will ever restore its power to the Gospel which has been lost by confounding and mingling them. For whatever the citizens of Sycamore may think of this reasoning and analysis, one thing is obvious, viz, that the ideas of Messrs. brethren West, Dow, Henry Wood and others are just as opposite from Masonic ideas as light is from darkness, and they never will or can be reconciled but by the destruction of one set or the other. Which will it be?

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold of Sycamore, Ill., has sold out his interest in the printing house of Arnold Bros. and will hereafter, God willing, give his whole time to the lecture work. All who have heard Bro. Arnold will be pleased to learn of this determination. The fine views with which he illustrates his lectures draw full houses. Last Friday evening he gave an illustrated lecture on views in Europe in the Wesleyan church, Sycamore, to a crowded house. Friday evening of this week he has an appointment in the Baptist church of DeKalb, Ill. Arrangements are being made to have DuPage county thoroughly canvassed by Bro. A., visiting every town and giving his lecture on Mythology and Masonry.

—Friend Woodford of Waverly, Iowa, has engaged in the business of canvassing for the Cynosure with a heartiness that is good to see. He has a paid notice in his local paper offering the Cynosure for 50 cents to all citizens of Bremer county to the number of one hundred. He has forwarded twenty-three names already, paying the difference in cost himself. He now wishes to extend his offer to twenty five brethren ordained to preach the Gospel and residing in the State of Iowa. Address him, with 50 cts. enclosed, at Waverly, Bremer county, Iowa.

—A brother in Worcester writing of a friend whose intention to join the lodge was entirely changed by reading the Cynosure, shows how effectual was the work of the last national convention there, since then he resolved not to support Freemasonry in the pulpit; he can not therefore attend his own church. The Worcester friends sustain an interesting and working local society. This letter gives us a hint of their zeal in this extract:

"We hold our meetings once in two weeks and discuss and talk the matter over and I am sure that we gain strength from week to week although many good men are yet too weak to stand alone or too timid to meet with us and I fear some fear the face of man more than God, but on the whole I think the work is progressing gloriously considering how few are willing to labor in the Master's vineyard. Tuesday evening we had a lengthy article read by a Worcester gentleman. The meeting chose a committee of five to meet yesterday to consider in regard to having it published."

THE ILLINOIS ASSOCIATION received to its treasury during March the following sums:

Hiel Lewis, Amboy; Geo. Avery, Galesburg; Mrs. J. C. Tyson, Chicago; $2 00 each: Mrs. Charles Webb, Chicago, and "A Friend," by A. Wright, Wilton Center, $1 00 each: John Lazenby, Jacksonville, $1 40. Total $9 40 Let the friends freely send in the $30 00 that will be needed by May 1st without delay. It will save the necessity of asking for it more directly.

—A baptism of the Holy Ghost is the one great qualification of every worker in Christian reform. Let every one read prayerfully John 14 and 16, and Acts 2, 3 and 4.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Postmaster Edmunds and his Clerk Compromise their Difficulties in the Lodge—A Startling Report about the Assassin J. Wilkes Booth.

"With whom did Postmaster Edmunds condone the crime of the late theft of $10 000? That is a question which interests every citizen of Washington. The crime did not concern Mr. Edmunds exclusively, but was committed against the peace, dignity and well being of the city. The thief, if known, and certainly is known to Mr. Edmunds, should be exposed and punished. There is but little sense and no justice in sending a negro boy to the workhouse for stealing a loaf of bread or pair of boots if a $10,000 thief can go scot free."

This slip was cut from the Post of this city and the facts therein referred to are about as follows: About Christmas the confidential clerk of Mr. Edmunds, the city postmaster, was given a warrant for eight or ten thousand dollars to take to the Treasury and get cashed, the same being for pay of post-office employees. He did not return in the usual time he was accustomed to make the trip to the Treasury, and in fact did not come to the post-office again during office hours that day. This created great alarm, real or pretended, with the post-master, and detectives were put on the track of the employee, who was soon caught, and pretended he had lost the money. Then he pretended that on the road to the Treasury he had taken a drink or two, and after getting the money the whisky began to take effect on him and he laid the money down somewhere and forgot all about it, and some other stories not necessary to mention here. The detectives meant business, however, and after being in their hands some hours the post master received a note saying that if "no questions" were asked the money would be returned. This has been done so far as the public are able to learn. As this is the inference to be drawn from a little article that appeared in the papers to that effect.

1st. Now a thief agrees to return stolen money if no questions are asked and no punishment inflicted.

2nd. He agrees to do this after he is caught, and the money would probably be unearthed in a day or two any way (a very reasonable thief).

3d. Here we see one of the most important post-masters in the country compounding the felony of another post-office official.

4th. We see the public hoodwinked, used as a machine or a tool for the purpose of furthering the schemes of whom? Masons. For both the post-master and his confidential clerical thief belong to that secret society, the souls of whose members are supposed to reflect such a refulgence of light and morality.

I have waited anxiously and noted the papers to see if the confidential clerk, was discharged, and up to this time I have neither seen nor heard of his discharge from his onerous and burdensome duties.

It has been usual for Masons to brag that "there were no Masons in the penitentiaries." In the light of this case, and hundreds of others occurring daily all over the country, is it any wonder? When they close the gates to keep Masons, however criminal, out, and then throw out a drag net to bring others, not Masons, in.

It is pretty generally conceded now by candid men of ordinary intelligence, that Masonry is a fraud and exceedingly hurtful to our institutions of government, and that it would have fallen into general disrepute long ago but for the facts that it is a well known stepping-stone to success in politics, and that a well known Mason can commit almost any crime and escape punishment through its control of the courts and the pardoning power.

While writing on this branch of the subject let me give a little gossip about a matter that I never until recently heard was attributed to Masonry, namely, that John Wilkes Booth, the murderer of our beloved President Lincoln, was a Mason of high degree, and that he was shot instead of captured, because if captured it would have put the lodge to too great a strain to have screened him according to their oaths. In an important trial, such as his would have been if captured, the whole country would have been spectators and it would have been impossible for his brother Masons, with the eyes of a nation upon them, to have gone through with the usual jugglery by which they use the courts to screen criminals. Hence he was shot by a brother Mason to keep the lodge or Masonry from being brought into disrepute. This crime is not charged to the whole Masonic body but to the individual act of Booth! But when once committed by a Mason it became the oath bound duty of all his brethren to aid him, right or wrong, and as it was not convenient to drag him into a lodge room and apply the cable tow, the carbine was substituted, lest the infamy of his act should attach to their diabolical order.

On page 73 of An as tar ta, a book after the manner of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, except that the characters are giants in infamy instead of stature, you will see the killing of our Lord and Saviour is attributed to the Masons of that day; that is, the Jews and Romans actually did the killing, but they were worried into it and worked up to that point by Satan and his imps in carrying out their system of distracting and demoralizing the world in order that they might increase the devil's percentages.

The Daisy

[The following poem by John Mason Good, is considered by Rev. Dr. Granville Moody one of the finest gems in the English language. It was repeated by the late W. C. Bryant, in his dinner speech at Williams College two years ago.]

Not worlds on worlds in phalanx deep
Need we to prove that God is here;
The daisy fresh from winter's sleep
Tells of his hand in lines as clear.

For who but he who arched the skies,
And pours the dayspring's living flood,
Wondrous alike in all he tries,
Could rear the daisy's purple bud?

Mold its green cup, its wiry stem,
Its fringed border nicely spin,
And cut the gold embossed gem
That, set in silver, gleams within?

And fling it unrestrained and free,
O'er hill and dale and desert sod,
That man where'er he walks may see
In every step the stamp of God?

The Holy Spirit and Answered Prayer.

Doubtless the majority of people in this country intend at some time to become Christians. The statement is frequently made, both in public and in private that every man intends to do so. But there are enough instances of a contrary sort to call for a decided justification of such statements. The writer recently heard from the lips of the man himself, the details of an experience which illustrates both this point and the caption of this article.

The man was a deist—had been all his life; did not believe the Bible and had never read it. Never gave a thought to the future further than this: God is responsible for my being in this world, and in the next he can do what he pleases with me.

At various times death stared him in the face. In early life a fever laid him low and all hope of recovery was given up. During the war he was shot through the body and expected to die in a few minutes. After that, an injury to the wound brought, as it were, the very chill of death upon him, but never did he for a moment think of any preparation for death or dread to meet it. During all these experiences he had never felt the strivings of the Holy Spirit and did not believe in his existence; yet always said to himself: "If there is a Holy Spirit, and he ever comes to me, I will not be such a fool as to resist him."

Time passed. A loving wife was converted and united with the —— Baptist church. On the evening of her baptism, her husband attended her. A group of friends observing him, agreed to make him the subject of special prayer at a given hour. Within a few days, suddenly and without any previous meditation on his part, the Holy Spirit met him. When his mind was preoccupied with business, at once, like the flash of an electric current, the Holy Spirit overpowered him. Immediately tears rolled in torrents down his face —tears of remorse for his ingratitude to God. He said to himself, "This is the Holy Spirit," and falling upon his knees, endeavored to pray. Three times he attempted to speak, but dared not utter a word lest it should not be right before God. Then his burdened soul found utterance in the words: "God, help! help! help!" And just as suddenly as the first overpowing presence of the Divine Spirit, the answer came and the desired blessing.

Thus, in a few minutes did the Holy Spirit change that man from a stout-hearted, indifferent deist, to a most humble, reverential believer. The strong man was bowed as a little child. He humbled himself under the mighty hand of God, and was raised to great spiritual exaltation. Within two weeks of the baptism of his wife, he too followed his Lord in that beautiful ordinance, and has remained steadfast in the performance of Christian duty. He is a living illustration of the power of the Gospel in "Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." And truly, with such illustrations before them, Christians may be encouraged to send up such a volume of prayer as shall make the glory of God through the work of the Holy Spirit, as the lightning which "cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west."—Baptist Weekly.

Remember the Cork.

When Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, was unwell, King James II. sent an Irish priest to convert him to Popery. The Duke, apprised of the visit and its object, very courteously received the priest and expressed great willingness to be instructed. But before they entered on a religious discussion, it was agreed that they should drink a glass of wine together. After they had drank a while, the Duke took the cork out of the bottle, and shaking it with great gravity, asked the priest:

"How do you like this horse?" The priest was confounded and silent. The Duke continued all the while to stroke the cork and praise his beautiful horse.

"Your grace," at length said the priest, "has chosen an unseasonable time to be merry."

"Merry," cried the Duke, "Merry! I was never more serious in my life. Does not your reverence see that this is a beautiful horse?"

"Your grace," replied the priest, "should compose yourself and consider."

"Consider," answered the Duke, smartly, "what must I consider? Don't you see how fine a horse it is?"

"Oh," said the priest, "don't be foolish, it is surely a poor joke to call a cork a horse."

"What! would you persuade me that such a fine courser is nothing but a cork?"

"Nothing but a cork," says the priest.

"Well," replied the Duke, calmly, as if recovering from a dream, "I will not be too positive, my illness may have discomposed my mind; but how do you prove that it is not a horse?" He looked as if very insane.

"My dear Lord Duke, you must see the thing is nonsense. You took what you call your horse out of that bottle a few minutes ago; and if you are not out of your senses you must know that it is simply a cork."

"Oh, well, well," said the Duke, "your reverence may be right. I am subject to whims; let us talk no more of the cork, but proceed to the holy business that brought you here."

The priest then entered on points controverted between Papists and Protestants and continued until the Duke said:

"If your reverence can prove to me the doctrine of transubstantiation, I can easily believe all the rest."

This the priest commenced to do in the best way he could, concluding by asking the Duke if he did not think the transubstantiation believed in the Romish church, both possible and true. The Duke listened very attentively to all he had to say, and answered the question thus:

"You thought me foolish, perhaps suspected me getting insane when I spoke of a cork as a horse—your assertion of bread and wine being the actual body and blood of Christ is every whit as absurd and a little more profane. Out of your own mouth are you condemned. You take a piece of bread out of a box, pronounce a few words over it, and declare it changed into flesh and blood. You must see that the thing is nonsense, if not worse. If you are not out of your senses it can not but be evident that it is bread still, and nothing else. Remember the cork, father! Remember the cork!" —Selected.

The Bible as Logic.

One of the secondary benefits resulting from Bible study is that it promotes intellectual strength. Close Bible students seldom fail of becoming deep and vigorous thinkers. One reason why this is so, is that the Scriptures direct men's thoughts to things that are vast and solemn and momentous; and such things, if often presented and often pondered, tend to enlarge the mind's capacity and strength. And there are parts of the Bible which demand close application in order to comprehend their full meaning, and the reader's mind is invigorated by the exercise it has to submit to. There are argumentative processes in some of Paul's Epistles which no reader can master without study and labor; and some other portions of Scripture must be read with close attention to be fully understood. Readers who are averse to mental exertion may deem this a fault, but it should be regarded as an excellence. Large parts of the Bible are easy of comprehension, and the way of salvation is made plain that a child need not mistake it; and yet, as a whole, the Bible is a book that demands application and careful study. Is this a blemish? Let those answer who, on searching the Scriptures with frequency and care, have wondered, perhaps, at finding what strong thinkers they were fast becoming. A well-studied Bible will, it is believed, as effectually sharpen the intellect as Euclid's Elements or Butler's Analogy.—Canada Presbyterian.

Man, Bear, Monkey.

The Christian Intelligencer, of New York, gives the following item:

In his lecture last Thursday evening, Mr. Waterhouse Hawkins, one of the highest authorities on comparative anatomy, said that the structure of a bear resembles that of a man more closely than does that of the monkey. If the origin of the human form is to be sought among animals, in his opinion it is to be looked for in the line of the bear. He said that the arms and legs of the bear, when denuded of the skin so as to show the muscular arrangement, would hardly be distinguished by an ordinary observer from the same parts of the human form, while any one would readily detect the difference between the limbs of a monkey and those of a man. He said also that the monkey really is not able to walk erect, while the bear is; and here he found another agreement. Mr. Hawkins does not believe that bears are or have been the progenitors of men. He made these statements only to refute the claims of some skeptical scientists. Mr. Hawkins has no great regard for the theories of the evolutionists, and openly declares his disbelief of Darwinism.

Preachers should never fail to point sinners to Christ. Every sermon should tell men what they must do to be saved. The importance of this will appear from the following incident, related in the "Preacher's Cabinet:" "Spurgeon tells of a jail chaplain who preached on sin, and divided the discussion into two sermons: one Sunday the disease, and the second its cure. Between the two Sundays several of the prisoners were hanged. They had heard only what they already knew, but failed in hearing what they specially needed."

If by revenge you would overcome your enemy, the victory would be unhappy and inglorious, for in gaining it you would be overcome by your own corruption; but by exercising a meek and forgiving temper, you will always come off with onor and success.

The Fisherman's Daughtees.

"What were you saying about Mr. Edwards?" asked that great man, just then opening the door and marching in—for he always seemed to march like some soldiers I once saw in the town—with his head up in the air, and his feet turned out, and looking as if he thought anybody so poor and little as I was scarce worth living in the world, and was in fact only in the way: he did not remember that God often chooses the foolish things and the weak things of the world to work his will.

Mary turned very red all over her face at seeing him, and said hurriedly, "I wasn't saying nothing 'spectful against you, sir. I was only telling the child it was you proposed making a 'scription for her after breakfast."

"Certainly I did—and, what's more, I mean to put it into practice too," replied Mr. Edwards, in a very grand tone, coming up to me, and standing with his two thumbs in his waistcoat pockets, staring down at me. Now I was not a bit afraid of, him for Elsie had taught me that when I did what was right, I need not fear any one—that is, what God thought right. "You are a very good little girl," he presently went on, "and Mr. James Percival Edwards is not too proud to shake hands with you;" and here he held out his large fat hand in a grand way, and I put my small brown one into it, and he kept it while he said, "no—nor is he too proud to say he is sorry—yes, little girl," he repeated, as if he thought that perhaps I might not believe it possible he could be so humble, "he is sorry he spoke so roughly to you at the door last night; but he did not know, you see, you had come all that distance purposely to save his valuable life. You are a good little thing;" and he shook my hand, and then to my comfort he let it go; and so I went on with my breakfast, merely saying, very gently, "Thank you, sir."

That seemed to please him yet more, for he patted me on the head, and said again, "Very good little girl."

Another person came in finely dressed, and she smiled upon me and said, "I was a pretty little girl, I had such nice rosy cheeks and curly hair." I thought she was laughing at me—and perhaps she was; but she was kind for all that, and as I had finished my breakfast, she took me into a grand fine garden, and told me to run about and amuse myself, but on no account to touch anything—she need not have said so, but of course she could not tell that.

I don't know how long I was in the garden, but I felt very weary, and wished sadly to be at home with Elsie and mother.

CHAPTER VII.

At last Mary came and called me; I was so glad and ran to her, and we went into the house, she telling me that Lady Barlow and the young ladies wanted to see me before I was sent home. Mr. Edwards took me by the hand to a large room, where they were sitting eating their breakfast. He told me to stand inside the door, but the same kind, beautiful young lady who had first spoken to me run up, and catching hold of my hand, led me to the table, and made me sit down on a fine chair near them—but I only sat on the edge—and then the other young lady said:

"What's your name, little girl?" And I told her, "Gatty, please ma'am."

"Well, Gatty," she went on; "you have done us a greater kindness than you are at present old enough to understand; and now think well on what I am going to say to you. We wish to repay you for your kindness. What shall we do for you? What have you been most wishing for lately? Tell us honestly, without any reserve or hesitation."

I didn't hesitate a moment. I said at once, "Oh, ma'am; please that Elsie may be made quite well!"

Upon that they all laughed so much that they could not speak again for a long while. And then Lady Barlow said: "My dear little girl, our power is limited to earthly things; God alone can make people well, if they are sick."

"Oh yes, ma'am, please; I know that. But God gives us clever doctors, and sometimes blesses what they do for others, and perhaps he may bless the means used for poor Elsie."

"You are a strange little girl," she said; "then all you want for your kindness to us is a clever doctor for—who did you say?"

"Elsie, ma'am, please; my sister."

And now they all asked many question about Elsie, and father, and mother; and oh, great—great joy! they promised to send for a doctor from London, who was very clever, they said, in that very illness poor Elsie was smitten with. And one of the young ladies said: "If money and skill can cure poor good sister Elsie, she shall soon be well; for next to you, it seems, we have to be grateful to her, that we were saved last night."

Oh! I felt so happy; too happy to speak just then, and thank them, but they were not angry; they looked kindly at me, and said I was a dear good-hearted little thing, and would always make everybody love me; and I said with great effort, "Please, ma'am, Elsie made me what I am."

"And how did she do that, my child?" asked Lady Barlow.

"She taught me to love God, ma'am; and do all that I could to please him."

"Well, you are certain to please your fellow-creatures, if you please God," she said; "at least all whom it concerns you to please. And look here, my little girl, here are five pounds for you; but they will have nothing to do with the coming of doctor," she added very quickly, on seeing I did not put out my hand to take the shining money, and I looked, I suppose, greatly sorry and perplexed, thinking she had changed her mind about Elsie.

Then I took it very unwillingly; it was such an sum immense to me.

"And here is another sovereign from me," cried the young lady I had just seen; "and another from me," said her sister, "and you are a good child for loving your nice sister so much."

I didn't understand what she meant about loving my sister. However, I took the sovereigns and stood with them in my open hand staring at them, and thinking how pretty they looked. Oh, wouldn't mother, and father, and all, be delighted!

"Please, ma'am," I said suddenly, bethinking me I had not thanked them at all—then I stopped.

"Well, dear?" asked one of the young ladies.

"I don't know what to say—please ma'am, it's so very kind of you."

They all smiled and said a great many things which are not worth repeating, of my kind little heart, and bright soft grateful little eyes, that expressed every thing for me which I was unable to say for myself, and so on—and which only vexed me the more that I could not speak what I felt struggling and burning in me to escape.

"Please, ma'am," (a bright and happy idea suddenly flashing into my mind,) "I am too poor and too little to do anything for you. I'll pray night and morning for you, and so will Elsie, and father, and all of them—that we will!" And now I was quite contented, for I thought how stupid, even wicked, I was not to have remembered the great God before.

They all smiled again very kindly and thanked me, and one of them said if my prayer made the Almighty their friend, I should then indeed be doing that for them which would far exceed anything this world could give. And then after much more talking they asked me if I would like to go home.

I tried hard not to look glad, fearing they might think me rude and ungrateful; but said, "Yes, please, ma'am," very quietly. So one of them rang the bell, and told William, who answered it, to order the carriage to be got ready quickly.

Meanwhile they and Mrs. Parsons filled a big basket with all sorts of nice things for Elsie, and such grand fruit! And they sent a large warm shawl, and two good thick flannel petticoats, for mother, who they said, must be an excellent, painstaking, industrious woman, to have brought me up so well, and taught me manners that wouldn't disgrace a drawing-room. I didn't understand what that meant, but kenew it was something very kind of mother, and I felt so happy. But one thing made me greatly ashamed—yet pleased and proud too—which was, that when the two young ladies shook my hand to wish me good-bye they also kissed my cheek, and they said again, as they had already said so often, I was a dear good little girl and they should not forget their promise about Elsie; and Lady Barlow shook my hand too, in her quiet way.

So I followed Mrs. Parsons down stairs, with my money, which they had put into a nice purse, tightly grasped in my hand. Mrs. Parsons took me first into her room, where were a great many servants standing and sitting about it; and the y all gathered round me, and Mr. Edwards said, in his big, slow voice:

"Now, little girl, look here, we have all subscribed together to make you up a nice sum of money. Each has given according to his or her will, or means, as might be—or perhaps, according to the value they attaches to their lives—but that's their look out, not mine. For my part, I value things according their value. Now, as nothing is of value without life, so it's clear life is the most valuable thing of all, just as sight is a deal more valuable than eyes—the eyes being of no use without the sight; and money a deal more valuable than the purse, a purse being of no use without the money, and so on. Upon that consideration, therefore, I have subscribed two pounds towards the collection; and Mrs. Parsons, who takes the same liberal view of things that I do, subscribes two pounds also—and now here are seven pounds altogether; quite a little fortune for such a poor little body as you are! What can you put it into to keep it safe? hey?"

"Please sir—thank you, sir—into this purse," I said holding it out, while my heart beat wildly with delight, at the thought of having so much wealth to carry home to those I loved.

"Ah! here's money already there! let me see;" and Mr. Edwards counted the sovereigns,—"one, two, three, four, five, six, seven—seven! really! why, you are rich, little one! This is a present from the ladies, I calculate?"

"Yes, please, sir."

"Ah!—very good; it's clear then they value life at as high a price as I and Mrs. Parsons do. Well, there's seven more to add to it; so you are rich, and no mistake!" And droping the money into the purse, he gave it me back again; then he shook hands with me, and the pretty servant who took me into the garden kissed me, and said I was a dear little thing. And Mrs. Parsons kissed me and said so kindly, we should meet again soon.

And now I was to go: so running up to Mrs. Parsons, who was sitting down, I surprised her, I am sure, by throwing my arms around her neck and kissing her warmly two or three times; and I begged her to thank them all for me, then ran out of the room and jumped in at the carriage door, which a man was holding open; and the next instant I was driven away to the dear old house.

For the first mile or two I thought it very pleasant being in fine carriage; but afterwards not pleasant at all; it was so close, like being shut up in a box, and I felt fearful it would every minute tumble over, it was so high from the ground.

Very glad was I when at last it stopped before our door, and I was out and in mother's arms, kissing her.

She thanked the coachman with one of her sweet, kind smiles, for bringing back her little darling, she said; and he seemed at once to like mother, and told her he was very glad indeed to do that for the child, or anything else; she was a good lassie, and every body at Barlow Court had liked her, and would always be grateful to her. Then he asked mother if so be she would do him the favor to show him the dungeon where the little maid had heard the robbers laying their plans? and mother said she would gladly; and led the way to the side of the house where it was.

Meanwhile, I flew up to Elsie, being full of joy-news and presents—but oh! above all, the promise!

—The Rebekah lodges (Odd-fellow) number 48 in Illinois with 2 100 members, which their organs think is not very encouraging.

—Schuyler Colfax is still working for his favorite order. On the 26th inst. he speaks in Decatur, Illinois, for the Odd-fellows.

—The Masonic Grand Lodge report for Massachusetts gives the number of Masons in that State as 23,218 in 150 lodges. Number admitted last year, 803; died, suspended, etc.; 642 Paid for relief including funeral advertisements, $32,700; total receipts $86 000.

—The Inter ocean has the following note showing how the services of Masonic devoteeism are carried on: "Holy week has been well and faithfully observed by the worthy brethren of the A. A. S. Rite. The ceremonies in observance of Maunday Thursday in Gourgas Chapter of Rose Croix, 18°, on the evening of the 10th, were of a very interesting character. In addition to the usual partaking of the bread and wine, and the Lamb Feast, there were responses to appropriate sentiments by M. W. Bro. T. T. Gurney, Grand Master of Masons in Illinois; Vincent L. Hurlbut, 33°, Grand Master of Knights Templar of the U. S. A., Ill.; Princes E W. Chamberlain. 32°; Judge J. B Bradwell, 32°; John D. M. Carr, M. D, Past Commander-in-chief; and Sov.·. Gr.·. Ins.· Gen.·. Hosmer A. Johnson M D, 33°. These were followed by solemn and knightly ceremonies in the Egyptian Hall, conducted by the M.·. W.·. and P.·. M.·. James E Church, 32°. In immediate connection with this part of the programme, that venerable and distinguished Mason and writer, Bro. John Sheville, 33°, delivered one of his most interesting and brilliant addresses. The entertainment was closed with the crowning event of evening, which was a learned and most eloquent treatise upon the beauties of the great principles upon which Rose Croix Masonry is founded, from the pen of that genial, beloved and distinguished brother, Dr. J. Adams Allen, 32°, Past Grand Master of Masons in Michigan. About 150 of the members of the A. A. S. Rite participated, and there was a universal expression of approval and of enjoyment."

—Prof. C. A. Blanchard preached in the Independent church, Streator, Illinois, last Sabbath. Dr. J. B. Walker and Dr. A. H. Hiatt preached in the College chapel, Wheaton, on the same day.

—Mr. Pentecost's meetings in the Moody church in this city are increasing to such a size that it is almost impossible to find room for them. One evening last week he preached to the children and an audience of about 3,000 were out.

WESLEYAN.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley, the holiness evangelist, removed his family to Wheaton last week, from Iowa; Mrs. H. having recovered sufficiently for the journey.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman is preaching part of the time for the Wesleyan church in Wheaton during his vacation of a month.

—The church at Varick, N. Y., has secured a pastor, Rev. L. N. Stratton of the Wesleyan, not being able to supply them longer. Rev. R E Salsbury has accepted their call and will soon remove there.

—Rev. J T. Kiggins, of Topeka, Kans., is sick with scarlet fever. His father, brother and two children were also down with the same malady, while his wife is prostrated with lung fever. Our readers will sympathize with the brother in his affliction and pray that healing may be given by the Great Physician.

—Rev H. H. Barnes of Boylston, N. Y., died very suddenly in the depot at Auburn, N Y., on his way to the conference at Groton. Rev. B. D. Snyder was with him at the time. Mr. Barnes has been connected with the denomination for thirty years and last spring took a superannuated relation. He was about seventy years of age at the time of his death.

—Rev. J. P. Richards of Ft. Scott, Kans., writes to the Wesleyan that there were some 40 conversions in the revival meetings last winter. One lodge of Good Templars, which held its peculiar worship in a room adjoining the hall occupied by the church has given up its charter, to the great joy of the brethren, as it was a great annoyance. Bro. R. says: "We are poor, and a strong enemy to contest every step, and our church to finish this spring. Oh, my dear brethern, how we need your prayers, your help! O, Lord, send us help from the sanctuary, help to establish this work and finish the church, and deliver us from our enemies! Any earnest, consecrated minister, east or west, who desires a good field of labor for next year, do not forget Fort Scott, Kans."

—Bro. E. I. Grinnell of Blairsburg, Iowa, is anxious to build a new church. The Wesleyan church is the largest of the three in the place, all of which appear to worship in the school house. Bro. G. says that since elder Rathbun's lectures in the place the Pilates and Herods are united against the Wesleyans. But they will hold their ground by God's help.

BAPTIST.

—Dr. W. W. Everts, late of this city is to be installed over the Baptist church of Bergen Heights, N. J., the first Sabbath in May.

—Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, who has accepted the call of the First church of this city (Dr. Everts) will soon remove West. His dispatch announcing his acceptance of the Chicago call was, "According to your faith be it unto you." He has a smaller salary here than in Boston where he was a leading preacher. Tremont Temple, where his work has been, is the largest church in that city, and was the scene of Dr. Nathaniel Colver's labors for some time. There he gave a memorable course of lectures against the secret orders years ago which so aroused the wrath of the lodge that the mayor had to send a large force to put down the mob and protect the speaker. The indomitable Colver, whose courage always rose as danger increased resolved to carry through his plan in spite of all opposition, and did so grandly.

—An exchange says that the difficulties respecting the version of the Bible is now settled. Long since the common version of the American Bible Society was a source of dissatisfaction and forty years ago a Baptist Bible society was established. Soon a controversy sprang up in the new organization about a revision of the English Bible, and a new society was the result in 1850. The Baptists have become disgusted with both, and neither of them finds much encouragement. Recently a number of prominent men held a meeting in New York and came "to the unanimous conviction that there is now no obstacle in the way of the co operation of Baptists with the American Bible Society in its work at home and abroad."

—Elder Austin of Spring Creek church, Burlington, Iowa, writes that he yet experiences much trouble from the blow on his side given by the lodge minions weeks ago. As soon as his health permits and the roads improve he expects to rally the friends in southeastern Iowa for the Cynosure and Elder Rathbun's expositions.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—The walls of the new building for the Union Biblical Seminary are now raised and the building will probably be ready for occupancy by fall. The Telescope says: "It is an imposing building on an elevated piece of ground, within the corporation of Dayton, Ohio, a mile and a half from the principal square. It is near the chief street-car line and has easy access to the center of the city. The building can be seen from nearly every point of the surrounding region, and commands a fine view of the whole city and country. It is an era in the history of the church, when it can be said we have a seminary, with its own building."

—The Rock River Conference meets at Ridott, Ill, June 31. Rev. N. E Gardner of Coleta gives the annual address. Rev. T. F. Hallowell is to read a paper on the important topic: "Is it better to suffer a division of our church, than to modify our rule on secrecy?"

—Bishop Wright reports the following interesting statistics from his district: "Appointments, 1,501; organized churches, 1,127; classes, 1,141; members reported, 23,458; members remaining at the end of the year, 24,749; increase, 1,291. Preachers' salaries, including presents, $72,367 18; preachers' aid, $361 03 collections for missions, $3,926 30; conference collections, $1,354 22; church expenses, $27,-762 82; parsonages, 78; church houses, 202; Sabbath schools, 667; children in Sabbath-schools, 23 839; officers and teachers 4 168; miscellaneous funds, $758 57. Total collections for all purposes, $115 466 54. Obedience to the laws of the church and devotion to the cause of Christ and the principles of the church prevail in every conference in the district. The report shows an increase in nearly all the financial deparments, notwithstanding the failure of the crops in the northern part of district and the extreme financial depression in the West."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Another proof of the intimate connection of the M. E. church with Masonry was given at the Mexico conference week before last. Rev. A. Orr, who is known to most of our readers, sent a petition to this conference asking reinstatement as a preacher in regular standing. The petition was signed by a very large number of his former parishioners in this circuit and was every way entitled to a hearing. But it was not presented to the conference at all; and the moderator, we understand, said that if Rev. Orr wanted to oppose Masonry he had better go somewhere else than to the M. E. church. We are glad when the apologists for idolatry themselves begin to call for "separation," and that, too, to begin at the house of God. We shall perhaps have more to say next week.—American Freeman.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Mrs Dascomb, wife of Prof. Jas. Dascomb, of Oberlin, was buried on the 6th inst. She married and came to Oberlin in 1834, being one of the original founders of Oberlin College. She was ladies' principal for a great many years, being loved and honored by all who knew her. The funeral services were conducted by President Fairchild and Drs. Morgan, Cowles and Brand.

—Dr. J. E. Roy writes to the Advance of his Louisiana experiences. At Terre Bonne he found four Congregational churches, the leading pastor being Daniel Clay, a son of Henry Clay. The letter says of his work:

"He is cultivating two hundred and fifty acres of the old plantation where he served and owns ten, for which he paid forty dollars per acre, and is working his own four mules and three horses. The four adjoining plantations of the family of his mistress have all gone into utter financial ruin. I saw the legal document by which his church was incorporated. In this Mr. Clay was recognized as its 'bishop,' and three or four brethren as its preachers. How did he ever come across that New Testament idea of the eldership, or 'presbytery,' in a local church?"

—At College Springs, Iowa, the Congregational church, Rev. Henry Avery, pastor, has united with the other churches of the place, the Presbyterian, United Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal and Wesleyan Methodist, in a home association for mutual benefit. They have discoursed among other things, on funerals. Three things appeared as evils needing abatement:

1 The display and consequent cost.

2 The custom which obliges a minister to preach a "funeral sermon" while at every breath he is inhaling positive poison.

3 The custom which imposes on the relatives the "farewell look" in public.

A report was drawn up and adopted, embodying these and some other important and sensible reforms, and to which the attention of the people is called.

MISSIONARY.

—A Presbyterian missionary in Siam thus writes to friends in America: "A letter has just been received by the Siamese international judge, from the King of Siam, commanding him to make a proclamation to the inhabitants of Cheang Moi, Lakon, and Lapoon, that every man should be allowed, without molestation from any one, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience; those who embraced Christianity were not to be forced to worship spirits, or to work on the Sabbath, except in cases of emergency, as war, and the like.

—From the will of the late Dea. Otis, of Norwich, Coun., it is said the American Board will ultimately receive a million dollars. This will enable that society to undertake mission work on an immense scale.

GENERAL.

—The Chinese students at Easthampton have formed a home mission association for their own country. Some are anxious to unite with the Payson church, but cannot while the continue government students.

—Reports from the various agencies of the American Bible Society in China, Japan, Brazil, Uruguay, Russia and Turkey, show some increase of Scripture circulation over the preceding year, this increase being especially large in Russia, Japan and China.

—It is reported of the late Dr. DeKoven, head of Racine College, Wis., that a confessional room was maintained by him adjoining his library, whither resorted college students in quest of ghostly consolation. He was buried in the garb of a priest, and "commemorative celebrations" have been offered for him.

—A movement is understood to be on foot in New York to establish there a university for colored men, whose future work would be directed toward the elevation of their race in the South. It is reported that $200 000 have already been pledged for its support.

—An exchange has this comment on the popish follies practiced in Belgium: "Eighty miracles in seventy-two hours! This profession of miracles at Lourdes, on the 21st, 22d and 23d of May, last year, Monsignor Gaume, Protbonotary Apostolic, considers a 'solemn lesson to the world whose war-cry is, Death to the clericals.'"

RELIGION IN FRANCE.

—It is reported from France that the number of Jesuits in that country is increasing to a great extent. Quoting a writer who said "the Jesuits filled France when no one knew that a single one was to be found," it is remarked by a French newspaper that this was stated at a time when only six establishments existed in France, whereas now, according to official documents, there are no less than fifty-nine. M. Edmond About's paper reminds its readers that legally the Jesuits have no right to exist in France. It declares that the weakness of the government renders it, so to speak, an accomplice in the development of this powerful society, and ends by denouncing in no measured terms this dangerous association, which, "thanks to the support it has up to the present time always met with at the hands of the highest powers of the state,' has remained unassailable by Liberal measures.

The Protestant movement in France appears to be gaining ground rapidly. The population of the country is about 36 000,000, of whom 1.000,000 are Protestants, and the remainder are reckoned as Catholics, though a great majority are said by Protestants to be wanting in religious belief. Within the past year a decided movement toward Protestantism has been reported from many parts of the country. At a recent meeting in London of the National Club, it was stated that in three towns of the Department of Allier, where ten years ago there were about 60 Protestants, there are now nearly a thousands, almost all of them being proselytes. At Montargis, the birthplace of Admiral Coligny, a year ago there were between forty and fifty, while there are now 150. At Chateauroux a Catholic officer was recently buried with much pomp, and in his will was found a clause leaving money to build a Protestant place of worship; wherever there are 200 or more Protestants without a church they receive aid from the State. At Valenciennes, where twenty years ago there were only forty, there is now a church with a membership of 250 receiving a grant from the State. At Lyons, the second city in France, with a population of 350 000 and a stronghold of Catholicism, three mission rooms were opened on November 17 The meetings are described as crowded. In Paris meetings are conducted in twenty-two mission stations, with an average weekly attendance of 8 000 adults. In connection with these facts it is noted that during the late Exhibition 1 500 000 copies of the Gospels besides 20 000 Scripture cards and 3,000 Testaments and Bibles were distributed.—Our Banner.

CHINA.

A very singular movement in China is an imperial order closing the Buddhistic nunneries. Rev. Geo. F. Fitch, Presbyterian missionary at Soochow, writes, on December 19th: "Day before yesterday quite a little stir was created in this city, and, indeed, I suppose throughout the whole country, by an order from Peking closing all the Buddhistic nunneries throughout the whole land. For just what reason we have not definitely learned. Just across the way from our house are two nunneries, and on that day the occupants moved out. The younger will marry, and the elder will be sent to widows' asylums." Miss Safford, of the same mission, gives this account of these institutions: "There are fifty in Soochow, averaging six or eight nuns to a house. Women are the chief supporters of these nunneries, especially wealthy women whom the nuns have deluded into believing that great merit is to be acquired by founding and supporting such establishments. Individuals buy an interest in the private prayers of these nuns, at prices ranging from a few cents to several dollars, according to the wealth and liberality of the women who solicit them."

News of the Week.

—Southern members in Washington feel a good deal of concern over the possibility of the return of the yellow fever this summer. The appearance of fever in the ship Plymouth, after having been frozen up in Boston all winter, is considered a bad omen. The fear is that it will ravage the eastern coast this year, including Norfolk and the old fever points, and, in that event, there are apprehensions that Washington may not escape.

—Project of tunneling the Hudson river to Jersey City from New York is assuming solid proportions in the State Legislature, and is said to be backed by the principal railroads having termini there. The scientific and engineering problems are believed easily solved, and nothing in the way of the accomplishment of the project.

—A number of representative colored men of Boston held a meeting last week to consider plans furthering the negro exodus from the South. A committee was appointed to call a mass meeting in Faneuil Hall at an early day and arrange for means of transport for as many as may be desirous of leaving for new homes in the West.

—Cincinnati city elections have gone Republican for the first time in many years.

—From information received at the Treasury Department it is established that the credit of the United States in the money markets of the world is surpassed by no other nation except England. The credit of England is no better than fifty years ago, so far as can be judged by the quotable value of her obligations, but that of the United States has improved, especially within the past ten years, until it stands higher to day than ever before. The credit of France is now nearly, but not quite, equal to that of the United States.

—A serious attempt will be made in this Congress, it is reported, to admit Utah as a State, in order to get two more Democratic Senators. A Mormon delegation are working among Democratic Congressmen, and using the argument that the action of the Republicans with reference to polygamy will compel every Mormon to become a Democrat.

—General Fremont has a scheme to make an inland sea for the benefit of Southern California and Arizona. He would turn the waters of the Gulf of California into what he describes as their old basin. This would change what is now desert into a highway for commerce, and would open up great possibilities for Arizona.

—The Mormon conference closed in Salt Lake last Wednesday. John Taylor was re elected President of the twelve apostles and trustee of the church. Moses Thatcher Logan was re-elected to fill the vacancy as one of the twelve apostles. No President of the church as successor to Brigham Young was elected. G. G. Cannon, Territorial delegate to Congress, advocated polygamy as a preventive of prostitution.

—There were serious riots last week in the colliery towns, Durham, Eng. Near Consetts sixteen policeman protecting the non-strikers, were injured and the house wrecked. The rioting was resumed next day, and it is feared it may become general among the strikers. The miners in Houghton and Seaham districts have determined to destroy the property of the owners and managers. A hundred police are in Seaham hall, and a conflict is imminent. The colliery managers a leaving or barricading houses.

—Reports come from Kieff, Russia, that the political prisoners there are most cruelly treated. Many have been shot while attempting to escape The governor of the prison had received a decoration.

—The Russian revolutionary committee of the Nihilists has sent letters to all the imperial dignitaries at St. Petersburg, saying that though they do not intend to attack the Czar, they will continue to kill his attendants, especially the heads of police department, so long as the treatment of political prisoners is unameliorated.

—The proposed telegraphic cable from Aden, on the Red Sea, to Port Natal, on the African coast, will be 4 000 miles in length, and running down the coast of Africa will touch at Zanzibar, Mozambique, Delagoa Bay, and other points. Half the cable, it is said, will be laid by the middle of July.

—The Bulgarian Assembly has resolved that there shall be no censorship of the press Even religious publications are to be free. The Assembly has also resolved against the creation of a senate, after a violent debate, during which the advocates of a senate quitted the house. The Bulgarians are determined to have a national democracy of the severest simplicity. All parties are united in the determination that the legislature shall be elected wholly by the people. The Assembly has passed other articles of the constitution, including amendments in favor of triennial parliaments, universal manhood suffrage, and equal electoral districts.

—Advices from Capetown, Africa, about the disaster to the British convoy on the Intombe river, March 12 h report that besides the British troops killed and missing to the number of sixty, it is thought that forty wagon-drivers and followers were killed. Twenty-five Zulu corpses were found on the field of battle. Scouts report that the Zulus are concentrated in large masses eleven miles north of Tugela river. They are in a dense jungle, so that their numbers are unascertainable.

—The passage of the anti-Chinese bill and its subsequent veto attract great attention in China. The native newspapers in Hong Kong and Shanghai are extremely bitter against the proposed measure. They claim the protection guaranteed by treaty, and draw pictures of the future relation and exclusion of Americans from Chinese soil. They exaggerate the consequences to America of the withdrawal of Chinese labor, but speak with moderation though firmness of reactionary movements of China on her own ground.

Home and Farm.

Covering for Wounds of Trees.

It often happens that, either by intention, as in pruning, or by accident, trees are wounded in various ways. A common practice is to cover large wounds with coal tar; but this is objected to by some as injurious to the tree. Experiments made in the orchards and gardens of the Pomological Institute, at Ruthlengen, in Germany, go to show, however, that its use in covering large wounds is not injurious; but that, on the contrary, a callous readily forms under the tar, on the edges of the wound, and that the wounded part is thus protected from decay. There is, nevertheless, another objection; for if the tar is applied a little too thick, the sun melts it and it runs down on the bark of the tree. This can be obviated by mixing and stirring and thus incorporating with the tar about three or four times its weight of powdered slate, known as slate flour—the mixture being also known as plastic slate and used for roofing purposes. It is easily applied with an old knife or flat stick, and though it hardens on the surface, it remains soft and elastic underneath. The heat of the sun does not melt it, nor does the coldest winter weather cause it to crack—neither does it peel off.

The same mixture is also useful for other purposes in the garden. Leaky water pots, barrels, pails, gutters, sashes, etc., can be easily repaired with it, and much annoyance and loss of time be thus avoided. It will stick to any surface, provided it be not oily; and as it does not harden when kept in a mass, it is always ready for use. A gallon will last for a long time.

A most excellent preparation for small wounds and for grafting is thus prepared: Melt a pound of resin over a slow fire. When melted, take it from the fire and add two ounces of balsam of fir (Canada balsam), or two ounces of Venice turpentine (not spirits of turpentine), stirring it constantly. As soon as it is cool enough, mix in four to six ounces of alcohol of ninety-five degrees strength—according to the season—until it is as thick as molasses. It keeps well in close-corked bottles for a long time. Should it become too thick, by the gradual evaporation of the alcohol, it can easily be thinned by putting the bottle in warm water and stirring in sufficient alcohol to bring it to a proper fluidity. It is applied with a brush.

This preparation is much better than the liquid grafting wax composed of resin, beef tallow, and spirits of turpentine, which often granulates. If there be any danger that the scions will dry up by evaporation they may, beneficially, be brushed over with this composition, it being first made more fluid by adding alcohol. By this means I succeeded, in February of last year, in grafting a single eye of ægle sepinaria upon a lemon tree in a dry sitting-room, without the use of any glass covering.

Plant Early Potatoes Only.—Prof. McAfee of the Iowa Agricultural College, advises the planting of early varieties of potatoes only, in order to cut off the supply of food for the potato beetles late in summer. This, we think, is an excellent suggestion, and for other reasons than those named by Prof. McAfee. There are, at least, two broods of this insect in a season throughout the greater part of the northern and middle States, and in some favorable localities three. Now, if none but the earliest varieties of potatoes are planted, the tops will be ripe by the time the first brood of beetles have come to maturity. The second brood, not finding its favorite food in abundance, a large portion must perish, for, say from the first of August, until the following spring is rather too long a time for the mature insect to live, especially if short of food. It is generally the second or last brood of the season which hibernates, passing through the winter in safety; but by cutting off the supply of food we may at least lessen the number which are to pass over to the following season.

Poison—Lookout!—Daniel Leed, fourteen years old, died very suddenly at Akron, Ohio, April 2nd, from the effects of eating a considerable amount of painted candy, the paint containing some kind of poison. He suffered great agony.

Three children of William Miller and two of Fred Zeeler, residing at the mining village known as New York, a few miles from Youngstown, O., were poisoned lately by eating apples wrapped up in green window curtain paper. One of Miller's children has died and the others are very low.

Unwholesome Tinware.

The Michigan State Board of Health has recently been investigating the subject of lead poisoning from sheet-iron vessels lined with tin used for household purposes. The testimony of physicians tended to prove that children had died of meningitis, fits and paralytic affections, caused by using milk that had been kept in such vessels. Fruit-acids would act still more strongly and quickly on the lead than the acid of milk, hence tin fruit cans and all other tin vessels used in the household for holding food should be carefully tested for the presence of lead before being used. The following simple test is given by the Boston Journal of Chemistry: Put a drop of strong nitric acid on the suspected tin, spread it over a space as large as a dime, warm slightly till it dries, then let two drops of iodide of potassium fall on the spot. If lead is present it will be shown by a bright yellow color. Tin honestly made has nothing alarming in its composition, but manufacturers have discovered that although tin is cheap lead is cheaper, hence they have ventured on this dangerous amalgam. It may be thought that a poison taken in such small quantities could not prove hurtful, but herein lies one of its most dangerous characters; lead forms with acids what is called a cumulative poison; a number of minute doses may be taken before the effect of the whole becomes evident.

A Test of Pure Water.—An English technical periodical points out an easy way of testing whether water is good and fit for general use. It says: "Good water should be free from color, unpleasant odor and taste, and should quickly afford a lather with a small portion of soap. If half a pint of the water be placed in a perfectly clean, colorless, glass-stoppered bottle, a few grains of the best white lump sugar added, and the bottle freely exposed to the daylight in the window of a warm room, the liquid should not become turbid, even after an exposure of a week or ten days. If the water becomes turbid it is open to the grave suspicion of sewerage contamination; but if it remain clear it is almost certainly safe. We owe to Heisch this simple, valuable, but hitherto strangely neglected test."

Oil from Hen's Eggs.—The healing properties in the new oil extracted from hen's eggs are said to be very great, and it can be easily made. First the eggs are boiled hard; the yolks are removed, crushed and placed over a fire, where they are carefully stirred, and when the substance is just on the eve of catching fire the oil separates and may be poured off. One yolk will yield nearly two teaspoonsful of oil. In the southern part of Russia it is much used for curing cuts and bruises.

SERMON ON ODD-FELLOWSHIP AND OTHER SECRET SOCIETIES

BY REV. J. SARVER, Pastor Evangelical Lutheran Church, Leechburg, Pa.

This is a very clear argument against Secretism of all forms and the dnty to disfellowship, Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers, is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications.

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion.

A clear cutting argument against the Lodge, from a Christian stand point.

Do so called Antimasons love the cause we are engaged in? Do they believe in it? Have they any faith in God? Where is their zeal? Where is their money? May God bless the noble few who do and love and work and pray and pay and dare, and who will die with the harness on. May their number increase."

Notices.

TO THE PEOPLE OF NEBRASKA.

The time has come that the friends of light and truth in this State should organize to oppose secret lodges. The cause of every man, woman and child in this State is suffering from their influence. Let us rally at YORK, York County, Nebraska, on Wednesday, April 30th and May 1st, 1879, and set up our banners in the name of the Lord. Rev. J. P. Stoddard, Secretary of the National Association opposed to secret societies, will be present, and other distinguished speakers and lecturers are expected. Let there be a general attendance of all.

Topics of the Time.

A few years ago the rite of baptism was performed by a squad of many-degreed Masons in Washington. But that act of high paganism—if we conclude that paganism is permitted in our country—otherwise of proud blasphemy, is fully equalled by the celebration of the paschal supper by another coterie of the disciples of Albert Pike. The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune writes as follows in that paper April 19th: "Upwards of fifty Scottish Rite Masons assembled on Maunday Thursday night around a cruciform table, and, after partaking of the paschal lamb, enjoyed good cheer, speeches, songs and sentiments until the 'wee sma' hours.' The responses by Bro. Upton, Second Comptroller of the Treasury, and Bro. Loring the Representative from the Salem District of Massachusetts, both thirty-seconds, were very eloquent. Albert Pike, the Grand Commander, has been visiting Virginia, to revive some bodies of the Scottish Rite that have been dormant since the war." Thus accumulates the evidence that this Masonic system is one of the most subtle and deceptive forms of idolatry or Satanic worship. Yet our American churches are more blind than the dupes of Jeroboam. This Dr. Loring from Massachusetts is the great friend of Ben Butler, and the mortal enemy of Charles Francis Adams, towards whom he omits no opportunity of manifesting his vindictive spirit.

Dr. Charles Jewett, the eminent temperance lecturer died in Norwich, Connecticut, on Thursday, the 3rd inst. For fifty years this great man of one idea has battled against the rum power in nearly every State in the Union. While studying medicine in 1826 his attention was first called to the subject, but his great work was fully entered upon several years later, when, having sold a barrel of cider to a neighbor, he was astonished to find the man furiously drunk soon after. This circumstance led him to declare war on everything that can intoxicate, and thousands will recall, while reading the notice of his death, his forcible arguments against alcohol. He edited for a time the National Temperance Advocate of New York and was the author of several works, in the last of which, published some seven or eight years ago, he gives an emphatic testimony against the secret temperance orders. Although he had himself been connected with the Sons of Temperance, the result of his long and active opposition to the liquor traffic leads him to say that the secret order business had set back the temperance reform forty years in this country. Rev. W. M. Thayer, who preached his funeral discourse, paid a worthy tribute to this earnest man and reformer in these words: "To me the sadness of the hour is relieved by the grandeur of the life that is closed. I understand what I am saying when I use that word grandeur. The career of a man consecrating himself to the defence of a principle for half a century, regardless of reward or fame, intent only upon the triumph of his cause as a boon to suffering humanity, is both exceptional and grand. In comparison with the ambitious contests for distinction in the political arena, or even in the halls of learning, it is godlike. Divested of these selfish aims that mar the world, and enthused with the Christian spirit that was in the Master, such a life challenges the admiration of men."

The spirit of Jerome of Prague and of Huss, "the Bohemian goose" of Luther's dream, yet lives in the bosoms of the humble peasantry of Bohemia. More than a year ago a number of these lowly families left the Romish church, and although there are two evangelical churches acknowledged by Austrian law, they declined entering these, because the necessity of conversion before admission to church membership was not recognized by them. These protesting Christians declare themselves evangelical, take the Bible as their guide and accept the Heidelberg Catechism. But, for their persisting in an independent relation, they have been prosecuted, repeatedly fined, and even imprisoned. The effort of the papal authorities of Austria to suppress these believers can only be vain, but it proves what has often been charged upon the system of Romanism, that it is want of opportunity only that prevents its resuming its career of persecution.

Chicago emptied its Faubourg St. Antoine again last Sabbath upon the streets, but the Communist leaders were working for intimidation, and could not offer the seductions of liquor and the licentious dance, and so had a following of only seven or eight hundred. But nearly four hundred of these weak tools of a hundred headed despotism were armed and it is said their guns were loaded. The demonstration was a menace to every respectable citizen, and an insult beside, since being wholly composed of Bohemians, Swedes, Germans and Irish it called on Americans to stand by the Constitution, etc., cemented by the "blood of our forefathers." The militia bill now before the Illinois legislature, General Grant and the Chicago Times were especially attacked; the former, because under it short work can be made of such an armed mob, and the Times because it contrives to set the printers' lodges at defiance. There is little to fear from such stupidity except when it is allowed to gather a mob. These men make the strongest argument for a law against their own proceedings, and their attempted intimidation will hasten its passage and ensure its execution.

Secretary Sherman having succeeded so well in refunding the 5-20 bonds at four per cent, determined to call in all the bonds known as the 10-40 loan. Last Thursday nineteen New York and Boston banks united in the largest single subscription ever made to a government loan in history—one hundred and ninety million dollars. The Secretary has yet a reserve of 4 per cent bonds which are for the people and which will be kept for them. He is aware that the banks hope to realize a large sum from the premium on their immense purchase, and future sales will be managed to protect the interests of those who wish to invest their earnings in $10 certificates. This opportunity is being eagerly sought by thousands for whom the savings banks no longer have any attraction.

Miss F. E. Willard, who leads the Woman's Christian temperance movement of Illinois with such courage and skill, has united with other members of the National committee in a memorial to Dr. Schaff and his friends now revising the English Bible. They call the attention of the revisers to the fact that Christian temperance work is based on the Bible and must be greatly facilitated if the distinction in the use of Scriptural terms for wine and strong drink is made more emphatic than in our present version. The question has importance in view of the considerable class whose appetites are strong and consciences weak, and who will quibble over any Scripture for an excuse for self gratification. Such men, until the Spirit of God comes upon them and gives them grace to be honest, will have a plausible excuse, outside of the Bible if not in it, for their deeds; yet it will help many a weak brother to know that the Bible is undeniably against the use of intoxicants as a beverage.

The Spirit of Freemasonry.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

In a recent conversation with a clerical Mason, I said to him, "I know as much about Masonry as you do."

To which he replied, "Yes; about the outside, but not of the spirit."

So I came home and wrote out a little of what I know of the spirit of Masonry; and the following is the result:

1. It is a spirit of the most outrageous pretensions. Pretensions unsurpassed by the most inflated boasters that ever strutted through a boaster's ephemeral life. It claims for itself a power within itself to work a moral transformation equal to anything the Son of God can accomplish by the "washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." And this their standard works declare openly. It pretends to such celestial beatitudes and illuminations for its perfected members, that outsiders in comparison, are an unwashed, profane herd of ignoramuses; and strangers to the dazzling glories in which the initiated are ever and anon reposing as on the confines of a beatific swoon. Milton's inflated devil was but a dwarf pigmy in the presence of these disgusting pretenders.

My own ears have listened, as have thousands of others, to these mysterious hints of the glories within the veil of Masonry. Neither the Bible, nor prayer, nor the Holy Ghost, nor all these combined are enough to make the man of God perfect in Christ Jesus. O no! Not at all. It takes the unknown powers of the lodge to put on the "finishing touch."

2. The spirit of Masonry is therefore a lying spirit. And such lying as the lying of Ananias and Sapphria "can't hold a candle to." "Ye are complete in Him in whom dwelleth all fullness," said Paul. "Ye are not complete in Him," says Masonry, "but in me."

3. Hence the spirit of Masonry is the highest form of blasphemy. Can there be any greater blasphemy than the affirmation that sinful men can work out a higher or as pure types of character as can the Sovereign of the universe? That, if he is not sufficient to the task they are. That, if his attempts are failures, their's are a success. Masonry would demolish the Divine economy for restoring a lost world to holiness and happiness, and thrust its own miserable and tangled machinery, worked in the dark, into the place of God. Indeed, we are told by Masons that their initiatory ritual, represents the putting the candidate through the entire process, from the blindness before regeneration, conviction of sin, illumination of the Holy Ghost, and culminating in the "throes of the new birth!" This is the testimony of the Past Grand Master, Mackey. What can be more shocking!

4. The spirit of Masonry is the quintessence of delusion. They make themselves believe, that the virtues or characters wrought out by Masonic legerdemain and tomfoolery are the "stuff" that will commend them to their Maker. Thus do they thrust their vile self-righteousness into the place of the atoning sacrifice of the Son of God.

And what but the spirit of delusion thrusts the Bible into the forefront of Masonic marches, parades and public inaugurations! Thus do they hope to delude the beholders into the belief that Masonry is a Bible institution. (A friend of mine has just informed me that she recently saw a Masonic funeral procession in which the Bible was borne by one of the most miserable drunken infidels in the place.) Indeed this spirit of delusion is so rampant that I have been told that none but a Mason can rightly understand the Bible.

5. It is a spirit that confounds moral distinctions. "Hail fellows well met" are ministers and knaves, men of prayer and blasphemers, deacons and skeptics, class-leaders and infidels, disciples of Jesus and disciples of Voltaire, staid men and rowdies, Rechabites and inebriates, Christians and scoffers. Thus does the spirit of Masonry "put no difference between the precious and the vile." All are "brothers."

6. Masonry is an intolerant, brow-beating spirit. If all the intolerance and brow-beating that Masons have inflicted on those who call in question the divinity of the lodge were written, the world itself could not contain the books. Take two cases. In a prayer-meeting led by a Rev. Mason, the text, "Come out from among them" was read in the opening service. During the meeting I took occasion to say that the passage required Christians to come out from the society of the ungodly in the lodge; when this Mason brother most offensively interrupted me to inquire if I were a Mason, and was so angry at me that he refused to come again. And yet this man was a friend of mine, but his oath-bound obligation to the craft, and his zeal for the "handmaid," compelled him to trample on the sacred laws of friendship. So intolerant is the spirit that rules Masonry, that it seems to be a necessary attribute of the system.

Here is the other case. Conversing with a Mason recently, the conversation turned upon a prominent Anti-masonic minister, when this man flew into the wildest excitement and pronounced this faithful man of God an "insane idiot!" And this, simply because he had made a public expose of Masonry.

I have held a place among reformers for nearly half a century, during which time I have received titles not a few from the enemies of reform. But Masons, for Satanic ingenuity in concocting odious epithets outrank any rumseller, or slaveholder I have ever encountered.

But I pause in the beginning of these specifications that rival in number the evil spirits in the maniac, whose name was legion. It is no wonder, that the Rev. Dr. Colver when he awoke to the wickedness of his relation to this system of iniquity suffered an "agony of remorse equal to that which he endured when first convicted of sin; and his joy of escape from his bondage, was equal to the joy of the young convert."

My Experience in Getting the Cable-tow off.

Dear Cynosure:—As I desire very much the triumph of truth, I write a few thoughts in regard to my experience as a Mason for your columns.

I was made an Entered Apprentice, passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, and raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason in the State of New York, in the year 1859, in Margaretville Lodge. I traveled in parts of Ohio, Indiana and Michigan for three years. Have been in lodges in each of the above named States. I never saw a man converted to the religion of Jesus Christ in the lodge in all that time.

I returned to New York in the fall of '62, and attended a protracted meeting in the fall and winter of '63 and '64 and God saw fit for Christ's sake to forgive me my sins, and ah, dear reader, how he took the lodge worship out of my heart! When the love of Jesus was in my soul the love of the lodge was out, and as I found myself growing cold in the service of God, in the same proportion I would find the love of the lodge creeping on me again. In the year 1869 I took my demit from my lodge and came to Iowa and have paid my Grand Lodge dues of the State of Iowa to Euclid Lodge, No. 177, of Clarence, until 1878.

When Charles Blanchard came here in '78 to lecture against Masonry, I heard Masons say that he told a perfect falsehood. I told them that they knew better, and why talk so? But the obligations seemed to bind me, so I could not make any admission of the truthfulness of the exposure of Masonry to those who were not members of the fraternity, but Jesus Christ kept me so I would not lie for the lodge.

When D. P. Rathbun came here last June and worked the degrees, the way his work was laid in the lie by men professing faith in Christ, was more than I could stand and keep a clear conscience. I openly acknowledged the truth and have endeavored to stand by the truth ever since. I have perfect confidence in brother Rathbun as a minister of the Gospel. For me to stand by when a man of God is called "a black-hearted villain," by one who professes to preach Christ to dying sinners and hold my peace, it seems the very stones would cry out. I say, away with such an institution from the face of the earth!

I regard the institution as one of the strongholds of Satan to drag men to perdition. When members of Christian churches say in regard to this reform that they do not believe in stirring up strife, I believe that they are prompted by the evil one. In proof of this I have found that the moment you say any thing against Masonry, Satan rages in all his hideous character. I would say to all in connection or sympathy with Masonry as one who loves the souls of men, to seek an interest in Christ, and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.

Rev. D. P. Rathbun gives Masonry as I received it, and I want my testimony to go the world. I hope the Anti-masons in the State of Iowa will stand by Bro. Rathbun. I do not believe there is a lodge in the State that can excel him in making a Mason. He and his family have shared a part of my house with me the past winter, and the blessing of God rested upon our family altars and knit our hearts together like David and Jonathan. I am constantly praying that this Christ rejecting and soul-destroying institution called Freemasonry, may be driven back to its native place from whence it came.

Yours for reform,

James Ferguson.

The Royal Templars of Temperance.

[From the Sandy Lake, Pa., News.]

"The Royal Templars of Temperance" appears to be a religious order. The candidate about to join it is made to begin it with a confession of his faith. But its religion is not the religion of Christ. Christ's religion of Christianity, acknowledges Christ. The omission of Christ from its creed at the door of Royal T. of T. is the omission of Christianity from all beyond. The creed itself is that of the pagan, Mohammedan, deist and Freemason. Cudworth in his "Intellectual System of the Universe" shows that every pagan system recognizes one Supreme Deity over its multitude of gods. The creed of the Turkish Sultan knows no god but Allah. The Jew hates "the one Mediator." The deist has no Christ, while the creed of the Freemason, as stated by their lexicon, (article, Religion) is that "in which all mankind agree," and their 'Grand Architect" is but another name for Satan, the prince and god of this world. Each council of Royal Templars of Temperance has its chaplain. Section 4, article 5, of its constitution says, "the chaplain shall conduct the devotional exercises of the council." Purely secular associations such as railroads, fire insurance, banking and manufacturing or mining companies do not employ chaplains to conduct devotional exercises for said corporations. The creed of the Royal Templar is short, but it is still a religious one and every candidate for membership is asked at the threshhold to assent to this creed. Article 8, section 5 says "no person can become a member of this council unless they possess a good moral character, will acknowledge the existence of a Supreme Being and sign the pledge as in article 2 of the constitution." There is here no acknowledgement of the God of the Bible, the Christ of the New Testament, or of the Scriptures as a rule of faith and practice. It contains no reference to the Christian's God as the God of providence or redemption. This creed or confession of faith which every Royal Templar of Temperance is required to make at the door of the council discredits his Christian profession, if he has before made one, just as a second baptism discredits the first, as every papist knows when asked to be re-baptized in joining a Protestant church. It discredits his previous good profession just as a later will does one previously made and written by the the testator. So that, logically, every Royal Templar is a professed deist. He may be ignorant of it but such is his profession since the creed of the council is the creed of pure deism. It is nothing more and nothing less. Tested by its creed Royal Templar of Temperanceism is an inchoate Christless religion, incrusted with temperance to draw in and deceive Christians. Its evil consists in the sin of omission. It puts Christ on a level with idols by ignoring him. In this way it denies Christ and Christianity.

MEMBERSHIP.

"The membership of this order shall consist of three classes, viz: active, life and honorary. Active members shall consist of white males between the ages of eighteen and sixty, who have passed the required medical examination. Life members shall consist of white females above the age of sixteen. Honorary members are all those who passed their sixtieth birthday previous to gaining admission, and all those who cannot pass the medical examinat on for active membership. No person can be admitted as an honorary member who is under sixty years of age and can pass a medical examination. Honorary members pay the regular initiation fee, (less the one dollar for the beneficiary fund) and the quarterly dues, but are not assessible for beneficiary fund nor entitled to any of its benefits. This law shall not be so construed as to prevent an honorary member, who could not pass an examination at the time of admission, from becoming an active member at any time thereafter, provided he shall become sound physically and can pass the examination required, and has not passed his sixtieth year."—[Article 3, section 1, 2, 3 and 4 of constitution.]

OFFICERS.

The officers of the Royal Templars of Temperance council or lodge are, Select Councilor, Vice Councilor, Past Councilor, Chaplain, Secretary, Treasurer, Herald, Guard, Sentinel, and Deputy Herald. "A Senior Past Councilor is one who has passed the chair of Past Councilor." Junior Past Councilor is another honorary or official title. The Herald has charge of the regalia and property of the council, and is chairman of the room committee and is assisted in these arduous duties by the Deputy Herald. The Guard answers and reports all alarms properly made, allows none to enter or retire without the permission of the Select Councilor. The Sentinel's duties are defined to be "to maintain order in the courts, keep off all intruders and see that all who seek admission are properly qualified to enter." If, as the Scriptures say, "in the midst of counselors there is safety," this society must be a safe retreat. The Guard and Sentinel make it doubly so, as their business is to "report the alarms, keep off intruders," and require the pass word, grip, countersign, as the case may be, and allow no one to enter or retire without the permission of the Select Councilor. Washington did not appear to have his army in the Revolutionary war better guarded again, "alarms" and "intruders." But why all this guarding of the doings of a temperance society in times of profound peace, if its doings are what they should be in the council chamber?

OBJECTIONS.

1. It displays its caste spirit by confining its membership to whites, and excluding persons of all other colors irrespective of personal worth or moral character. A class distinction.

2. Its members must stand a medical examination and be "physically sound and safely insurable," thus excluding all sickly and infirm persons who most need assistance. A class distinction.

3. It excludes all females under sixteen and all males under eighteen and over sixty years of age from the benefits of active membership, thus cutting the young and the aged off from its privileges. A class distinction.

4. It religion is deism and not Christianity. Art. 3, Sec. 5th.

5. It gives two members who may be enemies of a worthy candidate the power to black-ball or prevent him from joining the order, for "if upon the second ballot two or more adverse ballots appear the petition shall be declared rejected." Art. 3, Sec. 7th.

6 Its origin from and identity with Freemasonry is so manifested by its signs, ceremonies, regalia, official titles, clearance cards, religion, secrecy, constitution and general management as to make it have at least "the appearance of evil" to those whose sentiments and religious convictions are opposed to secret orders.

7. It is unnecessary as a religious or reformatory order as all that it claims for temperance can be better done by the Christian "church which is the pillar and ground of the truth" on temperance as on every other moral question.

8. Its insurance even though cheaper than that of ordinary companies for this purpose is entirely too dear, if it costs a Christian the violation of his conscience, creed or Christian, profession because of his support of a secret society that in its religion ignores Christ and Christianity for deism.

What the Spirit Saith to the Churches of America.

Editor Cynosure:—I have of late, in my family devotions, been more than usually interested in reading the first three chapters of Revelation. These letters of John were designed not alone for the purity and stability of the seven churches of Asia, but for the benefit of the churches in all ages of the world; and would to God that Christians in this our day would take heed to the instruction and admonition of the Spirit to the churches.

The accusation made against the church in Pergamos was because they continued in church relation those who held to the doctrine of Balaam, and also those who held to the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing God said he hated, and he commanded them to repent and exclude all such or he would come and fight against them with the sword of his mouth. This is a solemn admonition to all the churches who receive, and continue adhering Masons in church relation. It is a parallel case. Their religious creed is anti-Christian, and any one who will acquaint himself with the teaching of their standard authors, will learn the fact that they do not recognize the Lord Jesus as the Saviour of sinners. Yea more, they have erased the name of Christ from the record God gave of his Son. Their hopes of heaven (or the lodge above) are not by the cross of Christ, but are attempting to climb up some other way. It matters not by whatever name false doctrine is taught, either by Judaism, Romanism, Nicolaitanes, or by the order of Freemasons, it is none the less displeasing to God. He hates "every false way," and has made it the duty of every church to require of its members to forsake every false way. This is what the Spirit said unto the churches; and if the churches of this our day had an ear to hear what the Spirit said, and he still reiterates this important truth, adhering Masons would not be received and continued as members of the visible church of Christ.

This was the prevailing sentiment in the Northern churches some fifty years ago. The New York Baptist State Convention in the year 1830, passed the following resolutions:

"Resolved 1. That in the opinion of this convention it is the duty of every member of our churches who is a Freemason to dissolve all connection with the Masonic fraternity and hold himself no longer bound by any ties of obligations, laws, usages or customs; and that he give to the church to which he belongs satisfactory evidence of the same, thereby practically disproving the institution.

"2. That this convention earnestly recommend to our churches to practice all Christian forbearance towards their Masonic brethren, but in case they cannot be induced to take the step above described it will be the duty of the churches to withdraw the hand of fellowship from those brethren."

The Baptist Theological Institution at Hamilton, New York, passed a by-law that no one could be received as a candidate for the ministry, who was an adhering Mason.

These were days of prosperity with the churches, and power with God. Never in the history of this country was the Spirit of God more apparent in the conversion of sinners and its sanctifying influence on the minds of those that believed. They walked in the fear of God and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost.

But sad to think, they have forsaken the ways of God and gone after Balaam. Some twenty-five or thirty years ago I was aware that the leaven of Masonry was at work in the churches, and the saying of the Saviour has been verified, that "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." Masonry has, to a great extent, become the controlling influence of the churches and religious journals. But few dare oppose or expose their false doctrine. A prominent member of one of the churches in Batavia, N. Y., said not long since, if the churches of that place should oppose Masonry, they could not be sustained. This is equivalent to saying that the churches of Christ are dependent on the support and influence of Masonry; and yet they preach the necessity of faith in God, who has said that the weapons of our warfare are mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds. This blessed promise was what sustained and encouraged the Apostle when he saw the people wholly given to idolatry; but his spirit was stirred within him to labor with renewed zeal for the overthrow of paganism; and if the churches instead of apologizing for Masonry, and receiving them into church relation, (as they say to make them better) would in the fear and strength of God combine their influence against this modern idolatry of Masonry, and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness as God has commanded, it would wither like Jonah's gourd.

Hazing at Harvard.

HOW IT IS STILL MAINTAINED BY SECRET SOCIETIES.

To the Editor of the Republican:

Have you a ruffian that will swear, drink dance,
Revel the night; rob, murder and commit
The oldest sins, the newest kind of ways?
—Shakespeare.

A few weeks more and the wee freshmen will be wending their ways to their respective homes, after their first term at Cambridge, and after being kindly greeted by loving parents, will be anxiously questioned about hazing. The general reply will be that hazing is a thing of the past, a folly of their fathers, and an ancient custom that is played out, a custom that has been dropped because it was ancient and barbarous, and because it had become unpopular at Harvard.

In a measure this reply is quite true. Hazing has been looked upon for some years past as something below the dignity of Harvard sophomores. The sophomores of '79 hazed but little, though they did not regard it as such a grave offense as those of '80. When '81 were freshmen the popular opinion was very much against hazing, and those who were known to have participated in the so called sport were, in a measure, looked upon as outcasts from society by their classmates. The class of men most influential in checking this barbarity were members of the leading sophomore society. Their good work was publicly praised in the Boston papers, and they received the thanks of the faculty through the college papers. The custom was so completely censured at that time that no instances of unfriendly hazing have been heard of this year.

Now while the faculty and the interested public are congratulating themselves upon such a complete reformation in manners and morals they seem utterly ignorant of the most atrocious forms of hazing that are yearly carried on by the very society of men who were so active in putting down class hazing in 1877. I refer to the initiations of certain secret societies. The evil exists at the very outset. Secret societies are forbidden by the university, yet the faculty is fully aware of the existence of such societies, and also of the devilish initiations that the new members are put through.

The chief argument against hazing is that it often seriously affects the nervous system. But I question if there has been any hazing within the last twenty years that can compare in barbarity with the initiations of the very sophomore society mentioned above. Those who are unfortunate enough to be elected into this society are made to go through a most thorough course of fagging for several days. Some are obliged to put on absurd costumes and exhibit themselves publicly, selling papers or passing hand bills on the streets. Others are stationed on the corner of the streets and obliged to salute every passer-by. But these are the milder and more generally known forms. In the secrecy of the club room, matters take a grave form. Each member is branded on the arm so as to be identified, and cases have occurred where arms have been seriously burned by the brander being in a beastly state of intoxication. Each member is obliged to take a plunge into the Charles river by night, and if he declines on account of his health he is dealt with all the more severely in some other way. Resistance is out of the question, and a case occurred not long since where a man was felled to the floor for refusing to obey orders. To conclude the new member is obliged to drink an exceedingly strong bumper of liquor, and as soon as this is done, he is pressed upon from all sides to drink with friends, who wish to congratulate him, but whose real object is to intoxicate him. During all these initiations the members are masked, so that those who commit the atrocities can never be detected. As a general rule the most fiendish initiation of secret societies are kept quiet, and as those mentioned above are very generally known, it is fair to infer that there are some still more barbarous. There are other societies and clubs at Cambridge which have their initiations. But those which are known are not of a kind suitable for publication. Speaking with a member who had lately been initiated I asked, "How is it that a society so directly opposed to hazing can be so inconsistent as to put its members through such torments?" His reply was, it was an ancient custom, and was kept up on that account. Many will no doubt think that these men are of the lower social class of students, but in general they are fellows of good social standing, and pass themselves off for thoroughgoing gentlemen. The worst phase of the matter is that those who are initiated one year are only too eager for revenge the next.

But what will be the moral effect of all this? Here is a law forbidding absolutely secret societies of any kind, and a body of men like the the faculty of Harvard, and a class of teachers and instructors of the young men of America, merely winking at their own laws.

Cambridge, Dec. 7. 1878.

Odd Fellowship in Michigan.

I have before me as I write an extract of the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows of the State of Michigan, held in the city of Jackson in February last. The extract is quite brief but very instructive. The Grand Secretary's report showed: Initiations during the year, 1,513, by card 300, reinstated 300, total 2 113: withdrawn 480, suspended 1 490, expelled 27, deaths 101, total 2 098. Net gain 15. There have been twelve new lodges organized with an average of ten members, making a total gain of 135. The work of 1877 showed a loss of 303 making a loss in two years of 163. The total membership of the lodges is given at 13 326.

But the most instructive part is yet to be given, and every young man in the State ought to see and study it before uniting with that order or any other. Of the 13 326 members only 445 have drawn relief during the year, or one in 29¾. Seventy-two families are reported as having been aided. The amount paid out for relief was $7,605 30. The total receipts are not given, but the total current expenses are put down at $42 417 which gives a showing that it costs about five dollars and a half to carry one dollar to the needy through that much boasted benevolent organization. For every dollar expended in charity (?) there must be put behind it a little over five and a half dollars to make it go. A man stands about one chance in thirty of receiving aid, and when he does it costs between five and a half and six dollars to get one dollar to him as relief. Verily this is benevolence with a vengeance.

It should have been stated in the proper place that there is reported a deficiency in the finances of about $5 000 for the current year, which will have to be made up by assessments, which is not a cheering thing to do.

Could the facts as brought out in this report of the Grand Secretary be properly presented and analyzed before the minds of our young men there would be a far less number of them swindled out of their money. The net loss of 165 members in the last two years and the comparatively small amount expended in relief and the enormous expense of operating the concern with its diminutive results are not a discouraging state of things for anti-secrecy folks, to say the least.

A Plea for Kansas.

Beloit, Kans., April 10, 1879.

Editor Cynosure:—I find that there exists a large amount of latent sympathy with the Anti-masonic cause among the people of Kansas, especially in the rural districts. The people seem to desire a religion free and untrammeled by any false and spurious system of salvation. It occurs to me, that as this State, in common with some others, is so rapidly filling up with the best class of people from the East, that the present spring and summer is a favorable time to press the battle not only to the "gates of the enemy," but on through to the very heart of the citadel. It can be done. The only question seems to be, will the work be entered upon with vigor and spirit? It is not enough that this State has an Association auxiliary to the National Christian Association with its list of officers and an annual meeting at which the members meet to hear a few lectures, pass more resolutions, have a good social time in general and then go home satisfied with the achievement to wait till next time. No, Kansas is fast settling with an energetic, determined people, who will take either one side or the other. And the lodge men are making a desperate effort to strengthen their grip on the throats and pockets of the people; and they are doing their work thoroughly, too. It is the case already that towns of 1 000 to 2 0 0 inhabitants have their chapters and councils, while small country towns must have each a lodge wherein the Christ-rejecting worship may be carried on.

I would propose that steps be taken to secure a course of lectures throughout the State the present year. Perhaps some may hesitate on account of the expense. The amount of expense would depend on the way in which the work is undertaken. If help from other States is entirely depended upon the outlay will be necessarily great. But this need not be the case. The services of friends from abroad would of course be acceptable and to be desired, but there is excellent home talent quite sufficient for the work at hand. As is well known by the friends of this reform, Rev. J. T. Kiggins of Oak Hill, Clay county, Kans., is an able lecturer, well posted and energetic, while his services in the past have been largely productive of good. Bro. Kiggins is now at liberty and would probably respond to any calls in this direction. Would it not be wisdom to keep him employed at the work? Undoubtedly there are others who would also do efficient service; while by a well-planned systematic effort a lecture course might be got up of sufficient extent to sustain almost any man who might be desired. At any rate, my brethren, let us all pray earnestly that God would direct, show the way for action by the brightness of his Spirit, and save his people for Christ's sake.

S. G. Barton.

A Good Work in Warren, Ill.

Those in Warren who stand opposed to the lodge have long felt the need of help in bringing to light the "hidden things of dishonesty" and reproving "the unfruitful works of darkness." God has answered our prayers and sent us help.

On the 7th inst. Ed. J. P. Stoddard came here on business of the N. C. A. and remained till Saturday morning. He spoke in Library Hall on Friday evening, taking for his subject "Masonic Satellites." The degrading influence of Masonic ceremonies, and the terribly evil influence of Masonry in the family and in the church, was clearly and powerfully set forth. It was shown that the institution aims to control the world, and that it is altogether impossible to follow Masonry and Christ at the same time.

Ed. J. F. Browne, State Agent, having unexpectedly arrived on Thursday, spoke on Saturday evening on "The Religion of Masonry." It was clearly shown by many quotations from standard Masonic authors that Masonry is a religion, that it is a false religion, opposed to the religion of Jesus Christ because it is pagan in its character; because it disobeys and dishonors Christ by the use of blasphemous titles; because it claims to regenerate and save men by its own teachings and ceremonies, and because it cuts Christ's name from the Bible, and degrades that holy book by profanely applying it to its own ceremonies and putting it on a level with the Koran.

According to previous arrangement, Capt R. M. Wilson of Nora, Ill., replied briefly. He did not attempt to answer Bro. Browne's arguments, but contented himself with making large quotations from the dry Masonic lectures found in the monitors of the order, and mixing in the customary railery against Anti-masons. Mr. Crummer, the pastor of the M. E. church, being called on to speak for Masonry, lowered himself in the minds of thinking men and women by indulging in low abuse, without trying to answer the arguments of Bro. Browne. Some of the Freewill Baptists wanted Bro. B. to preach in the church on Sabbath afternoon, but as this was opposed by the Masonic pastor, Horace Woodworth, a meeting was held in the hall, where Bro. B. preached to a good and appreciative congregation. The cause of truth has been much helped by these meetings, and thinking people are being led to declare that they will no more support or hear Masonic preachers. We feel encouraged and say "thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

BENJAMIN WILLIAMS.

ELDER BROWNE IN CARROLL CO., ILLINOIS.

DEAR FELLOW WORKERS:—On the Lord's Day, April 6th, I preached to the Church of Christ in Ustick. The Lord's work advances with the brethren there. The meetings are well attended, and the Bible school just begun numbers more than a hundred. God grant that the brethren and sisters may be very humble, and that they may always be "abounding in the work of the Lord."

On the 8th I went to Lanark and saw our friend, N. R. Corning. "Riley," as he is familiarly called, is, under God, the principal support of the anti-secrecy cause in Carroll county, although I may be allowed to say, in only moderate circumstances financially, yet he has cheerfully become responsible for the expense of a month's work by myself, and the additional expense of two public expositions by Bro. Rathbun, if his services can be secured. All honor to such patriots as Mr. Corning, who in the face of persecution and loss for the truth's sake shows a practical interest in his country's welfare.

Having made arrangements for work in Carroll county I went on the 10th to Warren, stopping on my way in Freeport to see friends there. Had the pleasure of calling on Eld. A. F. Ferris, pastor of the Free Methodist church, and also on Dr. L. B. Peck. Bro. Ferris does not hesitate to preach against the lodge, and in spite of the fierce opposition of the charitable (?) fraternities God has greatly blessed his labors, many saved people having been added to the Free Methodist church during the past winter, some of whom left their secret lodges to cast in their lot with the people of God.

On arriving in Warren, and calling on Father Williams, I found Bro. Stoddard. Of the meetings held by Bro. S. and myself Bro Williams gives you an account. He writes me under date of the 15th, "As the smoke of battle clears away, we find the slain are many."

On the 14th I returned to Carroll county and lectured in the Baptist church in Salem. Tuesday evening, the 15th, I spoke in Freedom, and on the 16th in Georgetown. Tonight (17th) I am to speak in Cherry Grove, and on the 18th in Salem. Am to spend next week, D. V., in this county, after which I hope to speak for a time in Stephenson county.

GOOD NEWS FROM SOUTHERN INDIANA.

COOK AND HOBSON AT WORK.

LYNESVILLE, Ind., April 12 1879

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Upon invitation of Dr. S. L. Cook, the Indiana State Lecturer, I was with him in the classic city of Bloomington, the seat of the State University, and the surrounding communities, from the 31 to the 9th inst. On the 31 the doctor lectured at the Park school-house, two miles north, and at the Phillips school-house five miles east of Bloomington, on the evenings of the 4th and 5th. These lectures were well attended, and the people were much pleased.

These two neighborhoods are composed mostly of United Presbyterians, and never before have we been among a more clever and devoted people. They are industrious, intelligent and well posted on current events, and yet, from some cause or other, they are awfully opposed to secretism. In these two neighborhoods Dr. Cook and I are under obligations to Wm. Gourley, E. H. Fee and brother, Robert Henry and Mr. Phillips for much kindness shown us. I am personally and individually under special obligations to Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor of the U. P. church in Bloomington, who voluntarily tendered me the use of "Sankey" to ride out into the country.

Bro. McNary's name is not unknown to the Cynosure. A few years ago he preached a sermon on Masonry in Bloomington. The sermon is printed and for sale by E. A. Cook & Co., Chicago.

Bro. McNary having occasion to attend a Presbytery in Illinois was absent from his congregation on Sabbath. Prof. T. A. Wylie of the State University, occupied his pulpit.

Previous arrangements had been made for Dr. Cook to lecture in the court-house, permission having been obtained from the sheriff, but the craft set up their usual cry, and it was thought best to have the lectures in some of the churches.

On Monday evening Dr. Cook lectured in the U. P. church, and on Tuesday evening in the Covenanter church. These lectures were well attended and good order prevailed, but it was evident that the craft were uneasy.

Secret societies are pretty well represented in Bloomington: Masons, Odd fellows, Knights of Pythias, Red Men, Good Templars, college fraternities, etc. It is an encouraging fact, however, that but one of the members of the college faculty, and but one of the city pastors are, so far as known, members of secret orders.

The mayor of the city is an Odd-fellow, and in conversation with him he said that about two years ago there was a fellow here pretending to expose Masonry (referring to Bonayne) and that they came very near arresting and fining him for an indelicate exposition, but upon reflection they thought it might result in injury to the craft. From this admission we learn that Masonry is a selfish institution, and are led to the conclusion that it interferes with the administration of justice. I told him that Bonayne had publicly worked the degrees in Chicago, Dayton, Worcester and many other places and had never yet been arrested and that probably the people of Bloomington were no more refined and over sensitive than they are elsewhere. The mayor then frankly told me that after these expositions the very worst classes of men joined the Masons. This is a natural consequence for good men have no desire to join such an institution when they become acquainted with its true character.

Bro. A. W. Johnson is a prominent worker for our cause in Bloomington. He feels that he cannot be without the Cynosure. His hospitable and comfortable home was our headquarters during our stay in the city.

Dr. Cook is a good lecturer, and has done a good work in Monroe county. Persons wishing true light on Masonry in their neighborhoods would do well to send for Dr. Cook, and then remember that "the laborer is worthy of his hire," and act accordingly.

Yours in the cause,

J. T. HOBSON.

FROM DR. COOK.

APRIL 15th, 1879.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just got home from an extended trip of seven weeks, the latter of which was spent in Fountain, Hamilton and Monroe counties. There was mud, blustery weather and some other hindrances over which I had no control, but in the main I had a pleasant time and found friends everywhere. It was cheering to get into old Hamilton again where two years ago I made many acquaintances and I believe friends. They were ready and active in making appointments; some of them would take no denial till they could again hear what "this babbler" had to say.

Peter Rich and A. Ballard are always on the mountain top and enjoying a prevision of better times, peering eagerly into the future to catch a ray of light from the land of victory. They and others were not unmindful of my pecuniary wants. But with due respect for all, the friends must indulge me in a brief reference to the Christian kindness and comfort I enjoyed in the family of Oliver Linley, the sequel of which became intensely interesting. Without explanation or time for serious reflection I was rapidly transported behind Oliver's fleetest sorrel to Boxley, where I had the friendly grasp of Eber Teter. While warming I heard low mutterings. Was it a secret "ballot being spread," or a conspiracy? I was finally notified that I was wanted in the preparation room in the back part of their store. The door being tyled I was notified that the ballot was clear and that without preliminaries I would be "duly and truly prepared." It was acknowledged that I was a very difficult subject to initiate, but I finally received the "rite of investiture." Let all our friends say amen! It leaves a green spot in my memory which I will cherish with my earliest and latest benedictions.

In Monroe county I found an excellent feeling in our favor. I had some of the best meetings in that county I have had in a long time in company with Bro. J. T. Hobson. He is a young man who has talent and honesty enough to be on the right side of all moral questions. It is a beautiful sight to witness the harmony existing between Bro. W. P. McNary and his people. They form a compact host against lodgeism and all other bad isms.

On my way home I deflected from the most direct route to see our executive committee. I found them very united in their official work and making an earnest effort to secure the one hundred five-dollar subscriptions. Friends do not let them fail; send on your names. It is now believed the next annual meeting will be at Attica, Fountain county.

On this trip I passed through four United Brethren conference limits and found a very general regret among U. B. ministers and laymen on account of the spirit manifested by Bishop Weaver towards President Blanchard. A very common expression is, "The Bishop is mad and is showing bad temper." "It is not in keeping with his profession and his high position in the church." "His pride is hurt." "His last article is simply angry personalities." Bishop Weaver seems to have a horror of one ideaism but his one idea and perhaps a pet one seems to be to see how near he can pass by a very great and crying sin and yet not touch it. Bishops ought to let grace sweeten their temper as well as other people

Respectfully,

S. L. COOK.

Where to send the Cynosure.

BY ELIJAH.

A short time since while praying to God for his blessing to rest upon our reform work, it occurred to me it would be a good thing to send the Cynosure to two or three institutions of learning in whose usefulness I am interested.

In reflecting upon the impression I have felt it was a heavenly thought sent to me by the Lord. A good thought is worth more than money; so I send the greater with the lesser, hoping it may influence some other person to send the Cynosure to one or more institutions of learning, that they may have in their midst a burning and shining light to show them the evils of secret societies.

Dear reader, pause and reflect upon the good such a light as the Cynosure may cause to spring up and grow in these centers of far-reaching influence. Verily, if this candle of ours can be placed in such places its light may travel round the globe. Often the seed-sowing of secretism is done more effectually in our colleges than any other place. And if we act wisely we may as sucessfully sow seed that will harvest much fruit in our endeavors to educate the rising generation and glorify God.

My dear friend, do you love Jesus? Have you a few dollars you can spare to advance his glorious kingdom and extend the knowledge of his precious love? If you have please sit down in the light of my "heavenly vision" and write to the president, principal or some other officer of any institution with which you are acquainted and ask if the Cynosure will be a welcome visitor, and carefully placed on the files of their reading-room; provided you pay for it for one year. If you receive a favorable reply send it along with your prayers that the Divine blessing may attend its reading.

No one can tell how its light will shine to show the evils of Freemasonry, or what a power for good it will be to many who need its help.

A Story about Lincoln.

The following story about President Lincoln is certainly characteristic: Soon after he went to Washington he attended the Foundry church occupying a seat within the altar while Bishop Simpson preached a missionary sermon. After collection was taken at the close of the sermon, and as the congregation was about to be dismissed, an irrepressible brother rose and proposed to be one of a given number to raise $100 to make President Lincoln a life director of the Missionary Society. The proposition was put and brothers A, B and C responded glibly. But the inevitable pause finally came. Part of the money was wanting. When the bishop announced, "who will take the balance?" the pause became slightly impressive. Then the tall form of Lincoln was seen to rise, a long bony arm was extended imploringly, and he said: "Bishop, this is the first time I have ever been placed upon the auction block. Please let me say the balance myself, and then take me down."

Another Name for the Roll of Honor.

KENYONVILLE, N. Y.

I have been a reader of the Christian Cynosure for some time and am very much interested in perusing its pages. I believe you are engaged in a good cause, and may God hasten the day when oath-bound secret societies shall be done away in our land. I know they are poisoning the minds of many who become connected with them and their tendency is to lead to scepticism and infidelity.

I was for a time a member of the Masonic lodge; but, thank God, I was led by the teachings of his Word to see the wickedness of the institution, and that it was no place for a man who claimed to be a Christian, therefore I renounced the whole thing and am determined, as I have been for some time past, to use my influence against the lodge; and you may, if you please, place my name in the list of seceders. May the Lord bless your efforts and lead us on to certain victory! Yours truly, A. F. PLUMMER.

An Honest Confession.

LAWRENCE, Mass.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Although removed to a distance from Chicago, I still take a deep interest in the welfare of the cause and always read your paper if I have time for nothing else. This town seems completely given over to secretism—Odd-fellowship, Masonry, Knights of Pythias, Royal Arcanum and a host of minor societies flourish in all their glory. The people never heard of opposition to secretism. The Old-fellows have the finest building in the State and city. Some of them seem to be honest about their institution. I was talking with a prominent merchant the other day who said, "Why man, I don't pretend to say it [Old-fellowship] is a secret. Any man can learn all about it for a trifle." And on my giving him a few of the grips he said, "You have read this thing up, I see." But most of them claim that we know nothing whatever about it. Of course there are a few men in the lodge who are innocent of what they are doing, but the vast majority know just what it is and they don't care. But how a minister can give his sanction to it by joining and remaining in it, is beyond my comprehension.

Your paper grows better all the time. Wishing you success, I remain yours truly, H. M.

Masonic Politics in Kane Co., Illinois.

BLACKBERRY STATION, Ill., April 14, 1879.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The election of supervisors this spring in Kane county has resulted in a triumph of Masonry. There were a few Anti-masons on the board last year, but Masons now fill their places. In one town a Knight Templar takes the place of an Anti-mason. But Masons say that Masonry does not interfere with one's politics or religion. We know this is false. We had a special election last Saturday to elect a county clerk and coroner. All the candidates were Masons. Meredith, of Batavia, Republican, who is a high Mason, is probably elected clerk. He is the man, who fought so hard a few years ago for Hurlbut, a Mason, and against Lathrop, who was not a Mason. How long will Anti-masons stultify themselves, by voting for Masons? Every Anti-mason is under the ban; they are spotted. There is more to be feared from secret oath-bound organizations in our country to-day, than from anything else. Every voter should take the Cynosure.

AN ANTI MASON.

The Evangelist Kent Draws the Line between Holiness and the Lodge.

REMINGTON, Ind.

Possibly you would like to know how the cause of Christ is prospering in this community. As to the final triumph of Christ over all opposing forces, however mighty a superficial glance may seem to indicate them, I have not entertained the least apprehension, as I know by faith and revelation that he is to be the Judge of the people and they must all acknowledge his supremacy or be swept away when "his wrath is kindled but a little;" but for individual cases and at least one church, the perplexity and labor of my soul is great.

I speak of the M. E. church in this place. It seems as if God Almighty had borne with us as a people as long as he would, and that his hand was already dealing in vengeance on those who had dishonored him "among the heathen round about them." Yet they seem almost given over to "blindness of heart." O the pride and worldliness, the contempt of poorly dressed Christians, the deceitfulness of riches, the bowing down to Baal and kissing the golden calves, make me cry out with one of old, "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." Not slain by the power of the Holy Ghost (would God they might be) but by their sins which cry unto heaven for vengeance and wrath upon them, rather than mercy. There have been times in the past when the burden of this church rested upon my soul like a huge mountain, crushing almost its very life out! But to-day, although their sins are apparent in all their enormity as ever, and I still pray if perchance Jesus of Nazareth might pass this way once again anointing their spiritually blind eyes with the oil of his grace, and unstopping their deaf ears, so healing them, no longer does my care for them destroy my power to labor. I rest in the full conviction that the glory of my risen Lord shall be subserved in any event, either by their redemption shortly, or sudden destruction from the presence of God and the glory of his power.

The present pastor has been holding a series of meetings, assisted by an evangelist by the name of Kent, (I believe) who has told them more plain truth than I ever heard from that pulpit, and yet not half what they needed. His principal theme was holiness, and I was glad to observe that he dealt with the subject as a practical principle to enter into the life and business of life, and elevate them; rather than as a mere theoretical, sentimental, abstract emotion which holds itself too pure to condemn sin, and so perfect in love that it seems to love the devil and all his works. I have seen many such holiness advocates, and their lives showed them to be the children of their father. Such teachings are not found in the Bible and are neither religion or anything else of any utility to our fallen race, but rather tend to honor hypocrisy and to crush out true piety; but vital godliness, the holiness taught in Scripture, ennobles, purifies, eradicates all sin, and makes eternal warfare upon it wherever found. I was glad to notice that the lodge members were taught by the evangelist that their connection with an institution denying Christ was irreconcilable with a profession of holiness. They could not mistake his meaning, and this may have accounted for the slim attendance they gave him. (The "Antis" having lost faith in the M. E. church had mostly gone over to the meeting the Un. Brethren had just organized.) Several persons came to the altar seeking holiness. Whether any made a profession of the blessing I have not learned. Some of those standing in the gates of Zion, hedging up the way, were mightily shaken. I had prayed that the convicting power might reach them. If they shall come out and confess and make reparation and restitution to those wronged and driven away, then will there be hope for this church; not else, unless the Lord in wrath removes them suddenly as he has some others. The U. B. church has organized a class here, many of whom are seceders from the M. E. church. I do not consider the present pastor, brother Webb, as responsible for this schism. It dates farther back, but other men have a fearful reckoning to pay.

Yours in the faith, E. H. L.

Our Mail.

Wm. A. Carr, Stafford, O., writes:

"I feel it my duty to do all I can to brek down the great evil, Freemasonry. When I read your noble paper, the Christian Cynosure, I feel my ambition rising. I pray God that the day may not be far in the distance when I will be able to do more for the Anti masonic cause. We need more faithful workers, like E Ronayne, Mr. Rathbun and others, who are doing all they can to put down the monster. May God inspire us and help us to be more faithful in discharge of duty. Every one has a work to do, and we should be at it."

A. O. Howell, Champaign, Ill., writes:

"The Congregational church I helped to organize twenty-seven years ago, then barred out slavery, intemperance and secret societies. Our entire rules have been illegally rescinded. * * But one with God is a majority, and we are yet hopeful to retain our thorough principles. It is hard to contend against such powers of darkness, and so easy to float with the popular current."

James T. Goodwin, Pittsfield, Ill., writes:

"My sympathies are with you in the fullest sense. I look on secret societies as one of the greatest evils of the day; degrading to the man of God, one who stands before the people as an ensample to the world."

Josiah Livingston, Tilsonburg, Ont., sends for a copy of Mr. Ronayne's new book, "The Master's Carpet," and writes:

"I would like to see it, and hope it may have a large circulation in Canada."

Andrew Hinckley, Spencer, Mass., writes:

"May God bless all the earnest effor's of those connected with the Cynosure. I would feel lost without the paper now."

F. M. Waldron, Cascade, Minn., writes:

"I was so much pleased with my last paper (they grow better each week) that I am constrained to write to express my thanks to you, editors, and all my dear brothers and sisters in the cause of truth. I forbear to mention names, but there are giants in these days, thank God. Brother Hinman was here last summer and gave us three lectures and two sermons. One man was saved to the Lord and added to our number. He is delighted with the Cynosure. We (for now I am not alone) are feeling after two more, who we expect will take the paper. I am pleased that you exposed the Good Templars. All secret societies constitute one great image of the Beast. Now, dear brethren, is it not just as bad to worship the toes, the foot, or hand of this image, as its head? If I am wrong in my views of this, I can easily be set right."

E. L. Dilley, Spencerville, O., writes:

"We have a lodge of Odd-fellows, and two churches that are contaminated with the cursed iniquity of secrecy. I have been a radical reformer for over thirty years. Some thirty-one years ago, God, for Christ's sake, took my feet from the miry clay and set them on the Rock of Ages, and since then I have been opposed to Masonry, slavery, war, and sin of every kind."

A lady in Cortland, O., writes:

"Freemasonry breaks a husband's marriage vows, and separates him from his own lawful wife, whether he joins before marriage or after. No man has a right to belong to three or four families, and those families into which his own wife, his bosom friend, cannot go, or know anything of what they are doing. A husband may say, I belonged to the Masons or Odd-fellows before I married you! But he is to leave father, mother, brother and sister and cleave to his wife, not to cleave to three or four families, Masonry, Odd-fellowship, etc. Christianity provides for one home, one wife and family on earth, and one home and an undivided family in heaven. I call it Mormonism, only worse, to belong to secret institutions bound to conceal from wife and lawful family."

Anthony Yerkes, Lowell, Mich., writes:

"Some preachers and people here are afraid to have it known that they support such a paper as the Cynosure."

Ber J. Q Cherry, Paxton, Ill., writes:

"Just as soon as the Christian people are taught to know and made to feel that there is no happiness in any other than the church of the Lord Jesus Christ, lodgery will fall. It is impossible for a man to have his whole soul in the cause of Christ and belong to the lodge. 2 Cor. 6:16. A man who joins himself to the church of the Lord Jesus and joins himself to the lodge is living in acultery. 1 Cor. 6:15. Let a Christian lean on the bosom of Jesus every day and hour and he will soon quit beer, whisky and tobacco. 1 Cor. 3 16, 17. Just as soon as the pulpit and press cry out in love toward those whom the devil has led astray, and restore them to their former love, the whole thing will tumble to the ground. 2 Tim. 2:24 26."

Albert L. Post, Montrose, Pa., writes:

"I have just received the two copies of Ronayne's 'Masonry and Baal-worship Identical.' I consider it a masterpiece, irresistible to a candid, reasoning mind, in its conclusions. I would that every Christian in our land could be induced to read it."

John Compher, Smyrna, O., writes:

"The Cynosure tracts and books I keep sending round from one to another, hoping that the time will come, by and by, when the harvest shall be gathered in. Still I have some hopes that I shall yet be enabled to do something for this good cause. But whether I am or no', I firmly believe the Lord will carry on the work until the final victory is won; which is also I believe to be brought about through the instrumentality of his faithful servants who as soldiers, are enlisted in his cause. Let us be firm and unshaken as a rock, and never turn our back to the enemy, ever relying on Jesus the Captain of our salvation. Brethren, we must labor hard, expect much, hope long and wait patiently for the victory. It will come. But you and I may not live to see it. There will be yet very much hard fighting, I presume, before the victory is won. The image of the Beast will be defaced. Courage, brethren, onward, and the victory is Jesus' and ours in him."

A. Geil, West Union, Ia., writes:

"I still stand firm in opposition to secrecy and hope the right will prevail and that ere long."

Mr. G. Maynard, Boltonville, Wis., writes:

"Four years ago I for the first time saw a Cynosure, and before I could read it an Odd fellow took it, and I saw no more of it for two years, when Bro. Holt showed me a copy and asked me to subscribe for it. He said it was opposed to Masonry and Odd-fellowship. I told him to put my name down, and now I am in for it for the remainder of my life. I am in a not bad of lodgism."

Orson Chamberlain, Webberville, Mich., writes:

"I give my paper away and send it far and near. I shall do all I can for your good work. I have been persecuted bitterly by the Masons and Odd-fellows. I hope the time will come when all secret societies will be blotted from existence."

Mr. Hogge, of Paxton, Illinois, inquires of the Cynosure if there are any "prominent pre-millenial Adventists who are Freemasons. If so, how many, and who are they?"

We have never heard of any except J. V Himes & Son, who afterwards left the denomination. The members of this church, as a rule, are opposed to secret orders.

J. O. Miller, North Baldwin, Me., writes:

"Secret societies want the whole power here, but my prayer is to Almighty God that your labors may be crowned with success in rooting out these secret dens of darkness. Christ is the light of the world If we walk in him we shall not walk in darkness."

D. B. Heckert, Ogden Center, Mich., writes:

"I think the cause is gaining ground."

Justin D. Fulton, pastor Centennial Baptist church, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes on receiving a copy of the Cynosure:

"This is a big war. Rome is only a secret society worked by the spirit of the devil and doing its best to injure the cause of Christ. Thanks for your brave paper."

Enos Mitchell, Pittston, Me., writes:

'May God speed the day when the hoodwink will be taken off these ministers' hearts, so that the light of Divine truth may shine into them. Candles do not give the light they need to preach the Gospel."

LESSON XVIII.—May 4, 1879.—THE SUFFERING SAVIOUR.

SCRIPTURE.—Isaiah 53:1-12.

1 Who hath believed our report?
And to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?
2 For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant,
And as a root out of dry ground:
He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him,
There is no beauty that we should desire him.
3 He is despised and rejected of men;
A man of sorrows and acquainted with grief:
And we hid as it were our faces from him;
He was despised, and we esteemed him not.
4 Surely he hath borne our griefs,
And carried our sorrows:
Yet we did esteem him stricken,
Smitten of God, and afflicted.
5 But he was wounded for our transgressions,
He was bruised for our iniquities;
The chastisement of our peace was upon him;
And with his stripes we are healed.
6 All we like sheep have gone astray;
We have turned every one to his way;
And the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.
7 He was oppressed and he was afflicted,
Yet he opened not his mouth:
He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter,
And as a sheep before her shearers is dumb,
so he openeth not his mouth.
8 He was taken from prison and from judgment:
And who shall declare his generation?
For he was cut off out of the land of the living:
For the transgression of my people was he stricken.
9 And he made his grave with the wicked,
And with the rich in his death;
Because he had done no violence,
Neither was any deceit in his mouth.
10 Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him;
He hath put him to grief:
When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin,
He shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days,
And the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.
11 He shall see the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied:
By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many;
For he shall bear their iniquities.
12 Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great,
And he shall divide the spoil with the strong;
Because he hath poured out his soul unto death:
And he was numbered with the transgressors;
And he bare the sin of many,
And made intercession for the transgressors.

NOTES.

"Sheep." The sheep of the East are not placed in fenced fields, but led out to pasture, and watched by a shepherd. His voice they know, and will usually follow and keep near to him; but sometimes they stray away for grazing and are lost in the mountains.

"His generation," or "His manner of life who would declare," alluding to the trial of Christ, when no one was allowed to bear witness to his character, as was usual in criminal cases.

"His grave." Hebrew sepulchres were usually on some elevated place. Verse 9 is rendered "And his grave was appointed [by his enemies] with the wicked; but with a rich man was his tomb.' So was it: Christ was placed among malefactors by the Jews; but Joseph of Arimathea, a rich man, gave him a tomb.

"No form." The Bible avoids any particular description of the personal appearance or face of Christ. All paintings of him are only the idea of artists, without authority, as are various descriptions in ancient writings.

[From International Quarterly.]

HISTORICAL.—The time of this chapter was probably about B. C. 710, within the last half of Hezekiah's reign. The kingdom of Israel had been destroyed, and the people carried away captive B. C. 721. Assyria was then the great nation of the world. But the time of the lesson was the time of Christ, when he was despised, rejected and crucified; when "he was wounded for our transgressions," and "his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree."

THE CONNECTION.—"We saw in our last lesson that the book of Isaiah is divided into two chief parts. Part first (chaps. 1-39) contains the account of Jerusalem's fall (and she was the type of the whole race) attributed to her sin. Part second (chaps. 40-66) is a vision of salvation from this sin and the coming of the kingdom of righteousness and peace. This second part has for its central point chapter 53, the lesson for this day. The last lesson brought the breaking of the day in the coming of a Saviour, a Deliverer; to-day's lesson is the central point—the cross of Christ, with the suffering Messiah upon it, making atonement for the sins of the world. Chapter 53 opens up the vision of the glorious days of Christ's kingdom. "How beautiful upon the mountain are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation (verse 7). Then they are bidden in verse 9 to "break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord hath comforted his people." In verse 13, the Messiah appears, with a brief description of him and of his work. Then chapter 53, the lesson of to-day, enlarges and continues the description of the person and work of the Messiah. It is certain that both ancient and modern Jews interpret this chapter of the Messiah.—Dean Alfex in Peloubet's Notes.

In chapter 42 we heard of a Saviour to come; in chapter 53 we see him. Our chapter is a frame with six pictures; try to draw them in your mind. 1. A prophet herald asking a question (verse 1). 2. Christ, the Arm of Jehovah, revealed as a tender plant (his obscure birth and humble life; verses 1, 2). 3. Christ despised and rejected of men (in his life, teachings, and offices—verse 3). 4. Christ, the sinner's substitute (wounded for us, our iniquities laid upon him; verses 4-8). 5. Christ on the cross and in the tomb (verse 9). 6. Christ the conqueror rejoicing in the fruits of victory (verses 10-12).

CONTEMPORARY HISTORY.

There was now no hope that the nation as a whole could be rescued from the destroying power of idolatry. And yet it was important that effort should be made. If the nation as a whole could not be saved, a "Godly seed" at least might be preserved for the glory of God and the good of man in the earth in coming generations. Every individual who could be firmly planted in right principles would make the victory of righteousness more rapid and far reaching when the chastening of captivity had wrought penitence in Israel. This then was the work of Isaiah. He had at one time seen a "tidal wave" of reformation sweeping over Judah. It seemed at that moment as though the people were to be thoroughly and permanently reclaimed. But the forces of wickedness were only repressed for a time to break out with greater virulence than ever as soon as the circumstances changed. The revival accomplished a permanent good in increasing the number and stability of the "Godly seed" before referred to. But it did not permanently reclaim Judah. And now when the tide had turned and everything seemed to run downward the most stringent, urgent and encouraging motives needed to be urged to establish the minority in piety.

Such motives were found in the prophecies of the future deliverance of the chosen people from their enemies, through the "Servant of Jehovah," the coming Messiah. Accordingly we find this part of Isaiah given to descriptions of the redemption of Israel and the mission and work of Christ.

I repeat this list to refresh the memories of friends interested and for the additional purpose of calling attention to this very important matter. Please cut this out and paste it on the fly leaf of your memorandum, and as occasion presents call the attention of your neighbor and especially of your pastor to it. Talk the matter over and see what is wisest to be done, and write me when you get any light or facts that bear directly on the case. It is not too early to begin to canvass the questions: Where shall our meeting be held? What shall be the programme? Who shall be speakers? What steps are wisest to take in advance to awaken an interest and secure a full attendance? Who shall be the State agent and how shall his expenses and salary be paid for the year? How much ought I to appropriate of the Lord's money intrusted to me in this work?

Seven of the above States have notified me of the adoption of the times suggested and one or two others have reported the matter under advisement. I want to hear from others. I go to Nebraska next week, D. V., and on my return, before the 15th of May, I want to hear from every State or other association interested, and from individuals who have wisdom in this matter. Greater system is what is needed and what what many are calling for in our work. One or a few cannot secure this without the aid and co-operation of the many. Send me your views, and aided by your wise councils I will call to my assistance such helpers as I am able and give you the benefit of my best judgment.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 1879.

THE RELIGIOUS TELESCOPE seems to be fulfilling the Scripture "They go from strength to strength." Indeed we have seldom read anywhere more clear and powerful writing than the following from the editorial columns, April 9th. After discussing with much force the necessity of a "New Political Organization," the editor thus presents almost an abstract of our American Platform:

"For ourself, we shall never meet the sin against God and the American republic of knowingly voting for a man on whose tongue are the oaths of Freemasonry and kindred obligations, or for one who is not avowedly in favor of the cause of temperance and the national observance of the Christian Sabbath. The American people shall soon demand a knowledge of the moral as well as political sentiments of a man for whom their suffrage is asked. Not merely the party that supports him will be able to control their votes. Let party be lost in an effort for the good and the right. The work of reform should begin in villages, towns and townships, and continue until it possesses counties and States. It should grow with the years until American politics is purified as by fire."

Another editorial cites a suggestion of Jeff. Davis that but for "extremists," "questions which are now a source of so much contention might settle themselves." The editor compares Jeff. Davis' plan of letting questions "settle themselves," his hatred of "extremists" and love of "peace," with those of the brethren who bore with exemplary silence the nullifiers' convention in Dayton, but cry "Peace! Peace!" whenever an attempt is made to purify the Brethren church from the leprosy of the lodge. He closes thus:

"Of all the places in this life the militant Church of God is the last one in which to expect great questions to 'settle themselves.' It is placed in the world to settle questions of morality and religion. When it settles upon its lees it is no longer worthy of the name of the church of God. Its mission is to advance, not to remain idle. There is not enough of grace in the storehouse of God to preserve a non-militant Christian or church."

THE VOICE OF MASONRY has at last broken silence and opened its columns to a discussion of Anti-masonry. The April number contains a report of the late Minnesota meeting and exposures of the lodge. This is significant. If the lodge refuses discussion, discussion will destroy it. If it admits discussion it will destroy itself. This dilemma results from the nature of the lodge itself. It can only prosper, like the vice which is its Scriptural symbol, by being 'let entirely alone.' But it will not be let alone, but destroyed by the breath of Christ's mouth and the brightness of his coming.

SECRETISM IN RUSSIA.—The struggle of the Czar and the Nihilists is becoming terrible—a duel between the iron hand of autocracy and secret assassins. The attack upon the person of the Czar last week was the third that has failed against him, but all around these secret emissaries are picking off one and another of his officers. Their methods are such as are always used by the lodge when assassination is the business. An official who repelled one attack has received notice that the society regard him as a brave man. They will spare him but his only child, a loved daughter, must be their victim. The body of a student was found in St. Petersburg with a note stating that he had met the fate of a traitor to his society. The government on the other hand is exiling by the thousand and has appointed six Governors General with perfectly despotic power. Russia is really to-day under martial law.

Elgin Association.

This even handed justice
Commends the poisoned chalice to our lips.

The constitution of this body is reviewed by Dr. Leonard Bacon in the New York Independent, April 17th, with learning and great force of diction and of thought. The conclusions to which he arrives concerning it are, that for two reasons, but for his respect for the men composing it, he "would rather be responsible to the judicatories of Presbyterianism." And suggests whether the Elgin Association, since it is not Congregational, should not call itself "The Elgin Classis or The Elgin Presbytery." The pretence on which that body "withdrew its privileges" from the editor of the Cynosure, was that Congregational polity, or order, required them to do so because a small minority of the Wheaton church left that church and, meeting elsewhere, excommunicated the editor while he belonged to the church remaining in the College. This same body is now read out of Congregationalism by the best and strongest Congregational authority existing.

The real reasons for my expulsion from the Elgin Association were shown in their receiving a declared Freemason to membership at the same sitting; and appointing a Knight Templar—with the horrible "fifth libation" on his lips, drank from a human skull—a member of the Association committee. Several of the best churches and ministers of that body object to the disingenuous and wicked conduct of these brethren, and years of lassitude, division and weakness in their churches must result, unless peradventure God may give those brethren grace to reconsider their action and retrace their steps. There are no better men and women on earth than the ones now in the churches of Elgin Association. For these and their children, I am sorry.

The last addition to this list was printed September 19, 1878, and the whole number then appearing was 232. Herewith we add twenty new names, and have several reserved until permission is given to publish. The following names bring the number up to 252:

Rev. Alexander C. Scott, Martinsburg, Ind.
P. Gough, Pella, Iowa.
Drury Holt, ——, Ind.
Charles Dutt, St. Louis, Mo.
Mr. Picket, St. Louis, Mo.
H. C. Pratt, Fairfield, Mich.
Rev. E. Y. Carl, (7) Salina, Iowa.
J. C. Fuller, (3) New Brittain, Conn.
C. H. Elliott, Midland City, Mich.
Wm. Swaney, El Paso, Kans.
Rev. —— Noyes, (1) Woodbury, Conn.
A. F. Plummer, Kenyonville, N. Y.
A. Cowles, Caro, Mich.
Captain D Tracy, Vineland, N. J. (who paid $60 for one degree in New York city.)
R. J. Haynes, St. Charles, Ill.
Charles Looker, (3) West Unity, Ohio.
James Lawrence, Clarence, Iowa.
H. A. Gates, (3) Chicago.
C. S. Beaubien, Concord, Minn.

Let every reader of the Cynosure keep in mind this very important part of our work. Spare no effort, relax no diligence to gain your neighbors who have deen deceived and drawn under the Masonic yoke. Help them by prayer and Christian exhortation to cast off this heavy yoke and accept Christ's. Dot not consider the work done if he only leaves the lodge. Fear lest the one devil being cast out he may return with seven others and the state of your friend be made hopeless. It is not enough until the man redeemed from the lodge be brought humbly to Christ, in whom he may find grace and help in the time of temptation that he must expect.

We must continue to exhort the friends to send us the names of those who have fully renounced. Elder Rathbun says thirteen have come out under his labors; Elder Browne reports several under the faithful preaching of Bro. Ferris, the Free Methodist pastor at Freeport, in this State; and reports of this kind are not unfrequent. There are probably over five hundred seceding Masons in the country at a very low estimate. The power of these five hundred bold names would quickly help to double the roll; and five hundred noble witnesses for God and truth would shake the lodges to their foundations.

—Bro. Stoddard goes from Wheaton to Nebraska to assist in forming a new State Association at York next Wednesday and Thursday. Let every one read his article on the State meetings in another column.

—Bro. Hinman, as president of the DuPage County Association called an annual meeting for Wednesday of this week, to be held in the College Chapel at Wheaton, addresses in the evening by J. P. Stoddard and C. F. Hawley. The notice of this meeting was not received until our last number was printed. A report will appear in our next.

—Rev. J. P. Lytle, D.D., of Sago, O., reports the late Ohio State Convention for the United Presbyterian. He says that Father Taylor of Milnersville, O., has been accused by the lodge of till-tapping, and Bro. Stoddard is posted in the lodges as a horse-thief.

—In its question column the Inter ocean lately answered a correspondent who inquired for the founders of Freemasonry, that some dated it from creation, others from Babel, and others still from Solomon; but that it was safe to say that it was recognized by the popes of Rome early in the Christian era. Another correspondent, a more honest Mason than the Inter-ocean, corrects the editor a week or two later and shows by undeniable authority that speculative Masonry arose in 1717.

—The Oakland City Times, Ind., has been opened to a discussion of the merits of Freemasonry pro and con. The writers take shelter behind assumed titles, but the reform side of the question is well written.

—We have not lately opened a new paper with more supprise and gratification than when the Young Reformer came to our table last week from New Rumley, Ohio. This neatly printed monthly for young Christians is full of such spiritual food as makes strong faith, courage and zeal in the Christian life. It is edited and published by J. K. Graybill, of the United Brethren in Christ, but is not so denominational as to preclude its excellence for all readers. Its honest, God fearing position on the great question now agitating that church is truly cheering. It is on the right side of the line between God's worship and Satan's as practiced in the secret lodge.

—A correspondent asks for information respecting the so-called "La Belle Manufacturing Company" of this city. The following appeared in the Inter-ocean of last Wednesday from which it would appear that the establishment is not a safe one to invest in:

"Inquiries were made a short time since by an Eastern party as to the standing of the La Belle Man'f. Co., of this city, the company having been prolific in its distribution of its high-flown circulars through the mails. It was then stated that the company's business was carried on by one Richard Simms in the basement of a building on Clark street, between Washington and Randolph streets, and that its appearance was not very encouraging, as taken in connection with the circular received by the inquirer. Yesterday two judgments by confession were entered in the Circuit Court in favor of one George P. Braun, for $558 and $505 respectively, against the company.

—Bro. J. T. Hobson, who has been laboring in southern Indiana with Dr. Cook, is better known to our readers as editor and publisher of the excellent reform monthly, the Christian Ensign. He writes us that the time for which he was appointed to publish that paper will soon expire. Bro. Hobson wishes to continue in this work, however; and since the Indiana State Association endorses him for that work, and his experience and religious convictions strengthen him for it, the friends in Indiana and southern and eastern Illinois will do well to send for him often. He is a member of the Indiana United Brethren conference, and may be addressed at Leesville, Lawrence county, Indiana.

—Bro. A. Gilbert of Hickory Corners, Mich., sends us an interesting computation on the number of people who could be accommodated on our globe. It is computed that there are 52,000,000 square miles of land on the globe, which reduced to acres, it will appear that 200 generations of twelve hundred millions each can have room to the amount of about eight per acre.

Gleaned.

—When you hear a man say, "I believe in holiness, but I do not a hobby of it," you will find that he leads no souls into a state of entire sanctification. The Bible makes a hobby of holiness from the beginning of Genesis to the end of Revelation. "All Scripture is given.... that the man of God might be perfect."—H. T. Besse in Am. Wesleyan.

—The absence of the Christian from the opera, the festival, the fair, the secret lodge, and other places where worldlings delight to gather, is a strong testimony for Christ. It is a declaration that Jesus, his church and people and service, are enough to satisfy the wants of the soul. The presence of professors at such places is a practical denial of the Saviour; it declares that God and his service are not satisfying, and that something else is needed. That flock which is well fed at home, has no disposition to wander into strange pasturage.—Rev. J. Hoke in Highway of Holiness.

—"Carthagena Delendæ" was the favorite saying of a distinguished Roman general which embodied the hatred of his heart against ancient Carthage. It was the sentiment that fired his heathen heart, that gave him no rest day nor night till Carthage was destroyed and plowed like a field. "Crucify him, crucify him!" was the short but terribly significant expression uttered when Jesus was before Pontius Pilate, as the embodied malice, fury and rage of Jewish scribes and high priests who thirsted like hyenas for the blood of the gentle and harmless Saviour. This malice knew no rest or cessation till they saw him crucified. This is the unyielding nature of sin and Satan and the servants of both to persecute the righteous to the bitter death. It is the same unforgiving spirit of evil and evil-doers now as in the days of ancient Roman or Jewish history. There are men and associations of men that having begun an evil work of destroying a good man or cause give neither sleep to their eyes nor slumber to their eyelids till their fell purpose is fully accomplished. One of the most common things in the display of this spirit of the prince of the pit is that all such malice, fury and rage is done under the cloak of faithfulness to the truth, for the interests of religion, or even the best interests of the injured. Paul thought he was doing God's service when persecuting the saints even to strange cities. Beware of men.—Sandy Lake News.

—In view of the undeniable fact that Masonry and Odd fellowship are religious institutions, that they each profess to save their adherents from sin, and fit them for heaven; and in view of the fact that both these orders reject our Lord Jesus Christ and will not permit their members, officiating in any of their meetings, to pray in his name, according to all their standard authors, what are we to think of those churches that close their doors against the exposures of these orders? By their own silence on this subject, by closing their doors against those who would expose these evils, they make the sins of these orders their own.—Wesleyan.

Lodge Notes.

—Secretary Harlow is announced to speak at an Odd-fellow celebration at Wilmington, Ill., next Saturday.

—The Masons of Spain are proving how false is the brotherhood of the lodge by internal dissensions between the Scottish rite and craft lodges.

—Next Saturday, April 26th, is the sixtieth anniversary of Odd-fellowship in America. Great celebrations are on foot throughout the country. Let our readers be ready to take notes and report briefly for the Cynosure any facts of importance that may come under their notice.

—A grand council of Red Men will be held in this city next fall, to be attended by "sachems" from all the States. Their intervals of business will be filled up it is said with pipe and glass, orations and a banquet.

—Springfield is as full of Odd-fellows as Washington is of Masons. There are in the city five Past Grand Masters: Thomas Needles, State Treasurer; Thomas Mitchell, Representative; E. B. Sherman and J. H. Oberly, Railroad Comissioners; Secretary of State Harlow, and Secretary of the Board of Agriculture Samuel Fisher are Past Grands.

—A Knights of Pythias lodge was lately formed at Glenwood, Iowa, by some twenty-five "leading attorneys, county officers and business men" of the place. The lawyers and politicians know where to get ready for caucuses and clients.

—The demonology of the Masonic system is well illustrated in the following. Satan does not care to be recognized in the lodge catechism: To the question, Is a person who does not believe in a devil a proper candidate for the mysteries of Masonry? the West Virginia Grand Lodge replies: "Belief in God is all that is necessary, and it does not matter whether he believes in one devil, seven devils, or no devil at all."

—The proclamation of the local committee of this city respecting the Knights Templar meeting here next year is as follows:

Eminent Commanders, Generalissimos, Captain Generals, and Sir Knights of the United and Canada:

FRATERS:—The Triennial Committee of Knights Templar, who have in charge the affairs pertaining to the entertainment of the Grand Encampment of the United States and other Templar guests who may make a pilgrimage to Chicago in the month of August, A. D 1880, desire to announce that they have engaged the hotels of the city of Chicago for the accommodation of Templar guests. Any commandery of Knights Templar which contemplates making the pilgrimage to Chicago in 1880 need not be apprehensive about quarters, because all will be provided for by the Triennial Committee. The object of the committee in engaging the various hotels has been to save money to commanderies by obviating the necessity of committees coming to Chicago to secure quarters, and to promote a desire on the part of all commanderies in the United States and Canada to visit Chicago upon the great occasion, by giving the assurances (so far in advance) that all will be accommodated with suitable quarters. The Triennial Committee is composed of members of Apollo Commandery, No. 1, Knights Templar; Chicago Commandery, No. 19, Knights Templar; and St. Bernard Commandery, No. 35, Knights Templar, who, when advised officially as to the wants of each commandery, and aided by their knowledge of the hotels in Chicago, can make assignments which will suit all. Headquarters can be engaged only through the Triennial Committee, the hotels having entered into a contract to that effect. At a future day a communication will be sent from these headquarters to every commandery in the United States and Canada, giving details regarding rooms, beds, rates, and capacity of the various hotels. No necessity exists for arriving to engage quarters until then. Any commandery desiring information, other than that which is contained herein, and in advance of a subsequent official communication, can address the undersigned. Courteously yours,

NORMAN T. GASSETTE.
Eminent Commander of Apollo Commandery, Chairman.

GEO. M. MOULTON.
Captain General St. Bernard Commandery, Secretary.

Lost and Found.

I met the brook as it wound its way
Like a thread of silver hue;
Through greenwood and valley, through meadow-grey,
'Twas hidden away from view:
But I found it again a noble river,
Sparkling and bright and free.
Wider and freer growing ever,
Till it reached the boundless sea.

I lost the tiny seed that I sowed
With many a sigh and tear,
And vainly waited through sunshine and cold
For the young green to appear:
But surely after many long days
The blossom and fruit will come.
And the reaper on high the sheaves will raise
For a joyful harvest-home.

I lost the life that grew by my own
For one short summer day;
And then it left me to wander alone,
And silently passed away:
But I know I shall find it further on,
Though lost as it left me here;
For the shadows and mists will have passed and gone,
I shall see it fair and clear.

I lost the notes of the heavenly chime
That once came floating by;
I have listened and waited many a time
For the echo, though distantly;
But I know in the halls of glory it thrills,
Ever by day and night;
I shall hear it complete when its harmony fills
My soul with great delight.

I lost the love that made my life,
A love that was all for me;
O! vainly I sought it amid the strife
Of the stormy, raging sea:
But deeper and purer I know it waits
Beyond my wistful eyes;
I shall find it again within the gates
Of the garden of paradise.

I shall lose this life! it will disappear,
With its wonderful mystery;
Some day it will move no longer here,
But will vanish silently:
But I know I shall find it as a once more,
In a beauty no song hath told;
It will meet with me at the golden door,
And round me forever fold.

"The Imprecatory Psalms."

The Psalms of the Bible express more fully than any other book the religious experience of believers; and if there is one fault more prominent than another, in the modern expression of our religion, it is that we have too much tried to make exact philosophy out of St. Paul, and too little sought to cultivate the spirit of the songs of David. The religiousness of these songs is rounded out into completeness. Here is no one-sidedness, no metaphysics, no substitution of forms of words for rightness of temper and life. We have more or less sympathy with that body of Presbyterians who refuse to sing any other songs than those of the Bible; for what an immense power is lost for want of their study and influence, and how pale and flimsy are the modern hymns by the side of these anthems of our God.

One of the curiosities of skepticism is the assault that has been made upon the "imprecatory Psalms." It was perhaps to be expected that an age which ran to sentimentalism, and ignored righteousness, should find little comfort in these Psalms. But of the two attitudes of mind—on the one hand profound pity for the murderer, on the other profound horror for his crime—the one habitually taken in the Psalms is not only the more moral, it is also the only civilized attitude. The Psalms are pitched everywhere on the key of Bible morality, they express the emotions of a soul in sympathy with the law of a righteous and holy God. Perhaps the criticism of these songs as breathing a revengeful spirit, grew from forgetting the subjective character of the work—it is not God speaking to man, it is man speaking to God. It does not profess to reveal the mind of the Lord so much as to express the thoughts and emotions of a loyal worshipper. And how can a soul devoted to righteousness look upon wicked men with the complacency and pity required by our sentimentalism? What must the righteous now pray for, if he cannot pray for the extinction of evil men in the earth? Is "thy will be done" to be reconciled with indifference to a maintenance of a law of righteousness? A strong winged devotion breathes through the Psalms. God is sovereign, righteous, terrible to the evil but kind and gracious to the good. He is long suffering to us in our errors, patient with us in our doubts. He lifts us up out of the pit of sin, he forgives our iniquities. Is the loving God made more loving in any human song or creed? Who has so laid bare the tender pitying heart, so assured us of the everlasting arms and the sleepless solicitude of our God? If we love righteousness and hate iniquity—though falling away now and again under the temptations of temptation—if we are at heart loyal to God and his truth, we shall find only comforts, warnings, and very tender expostulations in these Psalms. But if God is righteous, if his moral law is as fatefully sure as gravitation, what can we expect from the inspired singer but sympathy with the divine indignation against the incorrigibly wicked?

The Psalmist presents the only solution of the problem of evil. He has gone all round it, he sings all its sorrows, doubts, despairs, and from the utmost deep of its distressful thoughts, looks up to God and cries out: "As a dream when one awaketh, so, oh Lord, when thou awakest, thou shalt despise their image." The evil doers shall be cut off. The swift vengeance of our God shall overtake and overwhelm the guilty. And he who loves righteousness must find himself in sympathy with the singer's expectation and joy other attitude of mind is either a kind of blank ignorance of the problem, or a sympathy with the moral disorder that plagues the earth.

We must hold the Gospel as an antinomianism (a destruction of law) or find it in harmony with David's songs. It is an expansion of the fifty-first Psalm (in spirit, we mean,) and not a negative of the thirty-seventh. It does not set the law under foot, but on high and on the throne of power. He who reads out of it the majesty and eternal might of our God has left it as useless as the last novel, as powerless as tears on the face of the dead. For, at last, evil (the evil man, for evil without a doer is an absurdity) must be caught, bruised, destroyed. We are urged to repent, given a way of escape—but pointed to the flames that are curling around our house of sin. The right shall win (the good man shall triumph,) not because of some hidden virtue in pity and pathetic things but because the great and terrible day of the Lord stands waiting in the midst of the years to cut off evil doers.—The Methodist.

The Sands of Life.

To every man life is the beginning of endless, shoreless, fathomless, inconceivable happiness or misery. To the wicked the end of life is the end of sinful mirth and pleasure. To the righteous the end of their earthly existense is the end of all doubt and pain. There is no middle course. "The man who lives in vain, lives worse than in vain. He who lives to no purpose lives to a bad purpose. Time misspent, is not lived, but lost."

In former days public executioners carried an hour glass to the place of death, and set it down before the unhappy criminal, telling him that when the sands were all run, he must close his eyes on earth. Sometimes his spiritual adviser said to him, "Your sands are almost run," and he saw it was so. But the sands that measnre our days are hidden from our eyes. They have been running for some time. They are running now. They may all be run in another minute. But we may live some days, or months, or years. This is our solemn condition. Yet how few are impressed by it.

Some, indeed, are wise. They live very much each day as they would if they knew it to be their last. They are waiting and watching. Should they at any time hear the cry, Behold the bridegroom cometh, they would respond, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." These are wise. They shall shine as the firmanent. They shall be forever with the Lord.

Because these things are so, I am resolved:

1. To esteem myself in fault, and to count the day lost, wherein nothing is done for the glory of God, nothing for the profit of my neighbor, nothing for the good of my own soul.

2. Always to do promptly what I can for increasing my knowledge, piety and usefulness; and not to defer till the next hour what can be done this moment.

3 As "he lives long who lives well," I will try to think most of the manner of spending my days, and but little of the length of my days.

4. As the number of my days is with the Lord, I may well mind my own business and let him say when, where and how my earthly existence shall terminate.

5. I will try to set the Lord always before me, and keep in view the early and solemn close of my earthly life.—Ex.

Need of Right Influence.

The fire-patrol of Chicago is a wonderful combination of agility with skill. Our readers will scarcely believe us, and we therefore dislike to say the truth, that the firemen will be out of their beds and into the wagon, the horses taken out of their stalls and hitched up, and the driver be on his seat with the lines in his hands and start for the fire all within three seconds after the alarm sounds. The bed-clothes are jerked off the sleeping firemen, traps thrown open at their bed-sides, step-ladders run down to the wagon, all by electricity, and as instantaneously as a lightning flash. Their pantaloons and boots are in one piece, and their coats, cloaks and hats are in the wagon, and they dress while the team rushes through the streets at the utmost gallop. All this to stop the destruction of property by fire. Now our readers, every one, know how much property is worth when weighed against the personal safety or purity of a beloved one, a son or daughter, or any dear friend. It counts for absolutely nothing when thus weighed in the scales—dead leaves, cobwebs and rubbish are as heavy as gold. The firemen will in most cases stop the flames, with more or less destruction of property, but it is a great deal more difficult to quench the fire of passion, of strong drink, or any evil habits or tendencies, when they once get started. You cannot rush upon them, dashed forward by an electric stroke and by fleet-footed horses. You must wait, with a sore and impatient heart, almost in despair sometimes. You must pray. You must study the approaches, and you will need the gentle, patient, loving wisdom, almost, of the great and good Shepherd, in seeking to quench that fire. Why not then strive to prevent its being enkindled? You need the church with all its holy influences, and the loving vigilance of an active and wide-awake pastor; you need the religious newspaper, home religion, and every and all means of grace to guard against and prevent such fires from starting, or to suppress them at the first feeble show of their flames.—The Interior.

When some of his free-thinking friends reproached Germany's greatest author, Goethe, for wasting his time over the Bible, the poet responded: "I am convinced the Bible becomes more beautiful the more one understands it."

CHIMES OF THE CLOCK.

What says the clock when it strikes one?
Watch, says the clock, O, watch, little one.

What says the clock when it strikes two?
Love God, little one, for God loves you.

Tell me softly, what it whispers at three,
It is, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

Then come gentle lambs and wander no more,
'Tis the voice of the Shepherd that calls you at four.

And, O! let your young hearts with gladness revive,
When it echoes so sweetly, "God bless you," at five.

And remember at six, at the fading of day,
That your life is a vapor that fadeth away.

And what says the clock when it strikes seven?
Of such is the kingdom—the kingdom of heaven.

And what says the clock when it strikes eight?
Strive, strive to enter in at the beautiful gate.

And louder, still louder, it calls you at nine,
My son, give me that heart of thine.

And such be your voices, responsive at ten,
Hosanna in the highest! Hosanna! Amen!

And loud let the chorus ring out at eleven,
Of such is the kingdom—the kingdom of heaven.

When the deep strokes at midnight the watch-word shall rise,
"Lo! these are my jewels, these, these," saith the king.

A FAMOUS STATESMAN'S EARLY TRAINING.

When Sir Robert Peel was a little boy, his father used to set him on a table and teach him to make short speeches; and while still very young he accustomed him to repeat as much of the Sabbath's sermon as he could recollect. At first, it is said, the boy found some difficulty, and did not make great progress; but he steadily persevered and soon attention and perseverance were rewarded, and he was able to repeat the sermon almost word for word. It was in this way that he became one of the most distinguished statesmen of his country.

HOW MANY WERE THERE?.

Henry, upon being asked how many boys were in his Sabbath-school class last Sabbath, replied: "If you multiply the number of Jacob's sons by the number of times which the Israelites compassed Jericho, and add to the product the number of measures of barley which Boaz gave Ruth; divide this by the number of Haman's sons; substract the number of each kind of clean beasts that went into the ark; multiply by the number of men who went to seek Elijah after he was taken to heaven; subtract from this Joseph's age at the time he stood before Pharaoh; add the number of stones in David's bag when he killed Goliath; substract the number of furlongs that Bethany was distant from Jerusalem; divide by the number of anchors cast out at the time of Paul's shipwreck; substract the number of people saved in the ark, and the remainder will be the number of boys in the class." How many were there?—Advance.

THE FISHERMAN'S DAUGHTERS.

It seemed to me I had been away a whole week instead of only one night, when I kissed Elsie's soft pale face, and she pressed me to her heart, with the tears in her eyes, murmuring,

"My little darling! my great comfort!—Thank God you are come back safe; what a walk you must have had! what fearful lightning! Kneel down, my child, and first let us gratefully thank our Heavenly Father for so mercifully sparing you.'

So I knelt down, and with my face on Elsie's thin little hand, repeated after her the beautiful prayer she said for me. Then sitting on the side of the bed, I told her all I had done, and seen, and heard, and how pleased they all were with me and with herself, and mother, and that the great doctor was to make her quite well, they said.

Mother came in just as I finished, and I had to tell her all over again; and oh! wasn't she joyful at hearing of the doctor! and at sight of all the money which I gave her, and the beautiful warm shawl and flannel petticoats, and the large basket of nice things for dear Elsie.

Oh! I had never been so happy in my life before!

Elsie was very quiet; and if that could be, whiter than before; and her dear hand was trembling so, I could not bear to see it—it made my heart ache.

She lay a long time silent, while mother asked me many questions about how the grand ladies looked as they talked of Elsie, and of bringing the doctor. Did I think they really meant it? Fine folks so often made fine promises, and never kept them. I saw mother was fearful of raising false hopes in Elsie's heart; and I took the hint, and did not go on speaking so certainly of their bringing the doctor, as I had at first done. Indeed, I began to grow less trusting myself, when I perceived she was so, and heard her talk so doubtingly of grand people and their promises; for I knew mother was well up to their ways, having lived so long a time amongst them.

Well, days went by without our hearing anything further of the doctor. Oh, how I hoped every morning, and longingly watched all day! and how, as the shades of evening came on, my heart darkened with their approach, knowing no chance remained of the doctor's coming that day, and how it sickened under the hope so deferred. Elsie often looked anxiously at me: I saw that her tender, pious spirit, sorrowed more for the disappointment to those she loved, than for her own. Indeed I do not think she grieved at all for herself; her trust in God was to firm to give way under any trial.

"Dear Gatty," she one evening said to me, as I stood looking out of the window in her room, watching with a sad heart the fast increasing darkness, which was putting an end to my hopes together with the sun's light, for that day, "it distresses me to see your bright little face, always now so full of care. Oh Gatty! remember everything is in the hands of God, in the hands of a kind, an all-wise, and merciful friend and Father, who knows what is best for us, far better than we can know for ourselves; and who, if we but humbly trust in him, will be sure to work out that best for us, in his own good time. Do not allow yourself therefore to be too hopeful, my darling; but strive to keep in mind, that having done all that lay in your power, 'to cast the lot into the lap,' you must now leave 'the disposing thereof with the Lord.' We cannot in our shortsightedness, see at first God's reasons for the afflictions he sends, or permits to come upon us; but certain I am, he has some great and merciful end in view in having so stricken me; and strong in that feeling, I now am willing to wait patiently for the fulfilment of that end, be it by my death, my recovery, or continued illness. And oh, Gatty! I would I could persuade all you dear beloved ones, to be equally as submissive and obedient to his will."

A great deal more she said, which I have never forgotten, and which went, with all her other gentle teachings, a long way towards making me better—I trust much better—in heart than I should have been, had I not been thus so continually blessed during Elsie's long sickness. It cost poor father a sore struggle too, to be patient at this trying time.

CHAPTER VIII.

And now a fortnight had come and gone; but alas! no London doctor with it; nor further word or promise, even that he ever would come.

"Oh! it was very cruel of them to make believe they cared so much, and not care a bit after all!—for they can't care to act so!' I muttered to myself as I stood at the door one wet day looking up the valley. There had been a steady downfall of rain since eleven o'clock and but little promise showed in the sky of any likelihood of a change for some hours, if not days longer. "And yet how kind they were to me, and how sorry they seemed for Elsie," I went on; "perhaps, as mother says, they have forgotten all about it; or, are at present too much taken up with the trial of the robbers to have time to spare for any thing else. Oh! when will that be over, I wonder? If they only knew how anxious, how even miserable their unkept promise has made us all during this long, long fortnight, I am sure those young ladies would feel for us, and bring the doctor at once." The came a sudden thought into my mind—I would end further doubt, by the next day setting off for the house and seeing them, and telling them how unhappy we were about Elsie, because the great London doctor had not come; and beg, and—yes, I was determined—entreat them to keep their promise.

I was greatly comforted by this resolution, and was turning round to go up stairs to tell Elsie of my plan, for I felt sure it was useless watching for the coming of the grand carriage with the doctor and the ladies such a pouring wet day as this was, when all at once I heard a strange sound—strange at least in our valley.

My heart jumped and beat so violently, I could scarce breathe as I listened. Father and brothers were away fishing, so the noise could not be caused by anything they were doing in the garden or elsewhere; besides, it seemed to come from a long way off. Nearer and nearer it came, and now I knew it for the sound of wheels. Could it be? oh! could it be the great London doctor?

Elsie's doctor always left his gig on the other side of the hill, at the back of the house, and walked down the wood when he called to see her. It was such a long way round by the valley, he never came on wet days, so it could not be he.

The sound drew nearer and nearer; in a few seconds more, it—the carriage, whatever it was—would turn the bend in the valley, and I should see and know. It came; it turned the point—it was a carriage!

Staring wildly at it for one minute, I rushed into the house and told mother, pointing out, "Mother! mother! the doctor! Oh! I'm sure—the grand great doctor!

Poor mother turned so white, I feared she would faint; and she ran and sat down and fanned her face with her apron; whereupon I ran and brought her some water to drink, which did her good. "Are you certain, Gatty? what makes you think so?" she said in a thick trembling voice.

"Because there's a fine carriage coming along the valley from the Barlow Court side," I answered hurriedly; "it can't be any one else."

"It may only be my lady, and the young ladies," mother said; "but run, my child, and tell Elsie—gently, don't do it suddenly, and startle her—it may be the doctor."

"Oh, how I wish father was at home!" I cried, as I scampered upstairs to her room. Quietly though I told her, and firm as she tried to be, poor sweet Elsie, when she heard the first words, directly guessed the rest, and began to tremble violently.

'Oh, how I wish father was at home!' she said in a faint voice; "dear father! he is so good, and always supports me under all my trials as no one else in the world can do. Kneel down, my child, and pray for me to yourself; pray God to support me—only that; leave the rest to him; only to support and strengthen me under all that may be awaiting me—either for joy or for sorrow, for health or death."

I knelt down and buried my face in the bed-clothes, and prayed at first as she bid me, but quickly my prayer ran into these words, (I felt as if I could not help it), "Oh, please, great and good God, make Elsie well. Oh, make her well, please good God, through thy servant, the ——" and here I stopped, not knowing the doctor's name, and not thinking it holy enough towards the Almighty to say, "doctor," in a prayer; then repeating my petition and ending only with "thy servant." Elsie too was praying.

Meanwhile the quick loud tramp of horses' feet came on to the house, and at last stopped before the door, and now I could pray no longer. Springing up, I stood and listened and stared at Elsie. She lay as she always did, partly up against the pillows, her thin hands over her face, and I saw she was still praying, praying for strength and trust in the Lord; and her prayer was answered.

Presently I heard the same sweet voice speaking to mother that told Mr. Edwards that night to bring me out of the storm, whoever I was. I knew it directly, although I could not distinguish the words; and then came dear mother's voice—so low and mournful like. Directly after footsteps were on the stairs; mother's were first, I could tell that. And now they were close to the door, and mother spoke low and shaking words, 'If you will please, sir, to wait one instant, just while I tell her," and then she came in. Her face was very, very white, and she stood by Elsie's bed, and bent over her, taking hold of one of her hands and said, almost in a whisper, "My dear child, he has come."

Elsie uncovered her face; how calm and beautiful she looked, though so deathly pale; but a holy light was in her eyes, and such a sweet, firm look about her mouth. The good God had heard her prayers and was supporting her.

"Yes, mother, I know," she answered gently; "please ask him in."

Mother softly put her two arms round her, and pressed her to her heart, and kissed her head; then went back to the door and put it open, saying, "I humbly beg your pardon, sir, for keeping you standing; will you please walk in?"

I know not why, but I felt greatly frightened, and ran back to the window and watched them from a distance. I fully expected to see a grand tall man, much bigger and grander than Mr. Edwards, march slowly into the room, with his head up in the air, and looking down upon us all over his nose. Never shall I forget my surprise, when, instead of that, in walked a little thin man, very quickly, with round shoulders, a stooping head, and a pale, long, kind face, that don't look as if he thought himself a bit better, or greater than we were. And his voice was so pleasant, too; so low and quiet, as he began asking Elsie a number of questions about her health. But just then mother came to me and sent me down stairs to wait on Miss Barlow; so away I went and found her standing in the hall looking more finely dressed and beautiful than ever. She spoke kindly to me, calling me their dear little preserver, that though I tried all I could not to do so, I began crying and sobbing like a baby. But she was not at all angry with me for being so foolish, and sat down and put her arm around me, and talked so gently, saying (what I felt was true) that I was agitated about Elsie, and had no doubt been frightened at the unexpected arrival of the doctor. Now she went on very eagerly, more to cheer me I am sure, "I want so much to see that dreadful place where the robbers met; I am sure you will come and show it to me?"

—Messrs. Needles and Nutting of the American Freeman purpose republishing General Phelps' address at the Worcester Convention in pamphlet form and for a small price.

—A good many respectable men like the smell of a good cigar, but there are very few intelligent smokers who would wish their sons or their daughters to follow their example. Many might, without great sacrifice abjure the habit, and if they knew its effects on the mental and physical constitution of man we think they would be likely to do it. Light can be obtained on this subject through the documents issued by H. L Hastings at the Anti-tobacco Tract Depository 342 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

Discussion on Secret Societies between M. S Newcomer and G. W. Wilson of Ohio, both elders in the Church of God, and the latter also a Mason and Odd-fellow. This discussion was originally carried on in the Church Advocate and afterward collected in this neat pamphlet. With truth on his side Elder Newcomer was of course victorious, and it is interesting yet painful to mark the shifts of his opponent. A congratulatory letter to Elder Newcomer by James Mackey of Shippensburg, Pa, concludes the work. It is furnished at 25 cents per copy; $2.00 a dozen by Ezra A. Cook & Co.

The May number of the North American Review opens with an article by the Hon. George W. McCrary, Secretary of War, on "Our Election Laws." Other articles are: "Campaign Notes in Turkey," by Lieut. F. V. Greene, U. S. A. "German Socialism in America" is concluded in this number. The anonymous author shows that the conflict between State Rights and Centralization is intimately associated with the development of Socialism, and, paradoxical as it may seem, that while it has engendered disorder, it has has formed the most powerful obstacle to its spread. "Law and Design in Nature," is a discussion opened by Prof. Simon Newcomb, one of the leaders of what is known as the scientific school of thought. His antagonists are President Noah Porter of Yale College, President James McCosh of Princeton College, Rev James Freeman Clarke and Rev. Joseph Cook, each of whom assaults the Professor's opinion with all the zeal of his faith, repudiating emphatically the scientific position. Mr. Lloyd Bryce follows with a "Plea for Sports," and "Notes on Recent Progress in Applied Science," by President Henry Morgan of Stevens Institute, close the number.

Hopewell Missionary Baptist church. Lowndes county, Miss., April 6, 1879.

—President Blanchard preached last Sabbath at Riley, McHenry county, Ill.

—The last name added to the list of churches associated against the lodge is accompanied by the following note written by a young colored man, a licensed minister of the Baptist church:

"We of the Hopewell church wish to join the Christian churches of Christ opposed to secret orders. Colored people are opposed to them and wish you great success in so doing. We think Bro. E Tapley is doing great good in opening our eyes upon the subject.

W. M. JOHNSON, Sec'y."

Mr Tapley visited this church on the first Sabbath in the present month. After his discourse, a colored man approached him with several others and asked his real motive in condemning secret orders, whether he really thought they were all wrong, or if he only wanted to make tools of the blacks for political purposes? He was assured that it was the real good of himself and his people that was sought. He continued that the colored people once had a secret order for self-protection, but some of the order informed the whites who broke it up with violent measures, shooting at the blacks. Mr. Tapley replied that they tried to cure one sin with another and their mistake was that they trusted in a secret order instead of the Lord, and their hope failed them. He reminded them how Saul called upon the Witch of Endor but was slain. His listeners were attentive and candidly acknowledged that this was the right course, and they saw it so clearly. Such tokens of good from the South are truly cheering, and Christian people at the North do well to sustain such laborers as Bro. Tapley.

—Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins held their last service in Chicago last Sunday at the Moody church. Five weeks continuous labor on the North Side, with most of the time three services a day, have been most too much for Mr. Pentecost, who, it will be remembered, suffered the first fortnight with a sprained ankle. A head trouble now admonishes the evangelist that a week of rest is indispensable before commencing labor at Minneapolis, Minn.

—Captain Henry Bundy's Gospel ship Glad Tidings, now in Cleveland, will go in June on her summer tour of missionary labor to Lake Superior. Bro. Bundy was lately in receipt of a letter from Mr. John M. Smith, of South Manitou Island, in which that gentleman states that a good religious work is progressing on the island. Mr. Smith invites the Glad Tidings to return to South Manitou to continue the work of preaching the gospel there.

—Last Sabbath Capt. Bundy began his labors for the conversion of sailors in port on the docks of the lumber market. The sailors and tug men desire that these open air meetings should continue, and a policeman is asked for to prevent disturbance, as on this occasion, by a drunken man.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—V. C. Johnson, a minister of the Friends living near Winchester, Indiana, has lately joined the United Brethren conference.

—Bro. D. S. Caldwell, pastor of Green Creek circuit, is duly authorized by the people of said circuit to visit the various fields of Sandusky conference to solicit means for the purpose of liquidating the debt on the church and parsonage at Green Springs, Ohio. The amount of indebtedness on the whole is one thousand dollars.

—Rev. L. S. Chittenden of Westfield College assisted in a great revival at Decatur, Ill., during the past winter in which from 45 to 50 souls were saved, and 32 received into the church.

—Rev. I. D. Barnard of Iowa was a preacher in the Methodist Episcopal church for 21 years, but could not endure the secretism. Last year he joined the U. B. conference, and in a twelve weeks' revival meeting in his church, 33 professed conversion and 19 united with the church.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. T. C. Jerome of Patchogue, Long Island, united with the Manhattan (anti-Beecher) ministerial association at its last meeting. Mr. Jerome's faithful words against secret orders in New Bedford, Mass., and also in his present location will be remembered.

—Rev. G. W. Bainum has received a hearty and practically unanimous invitation from the church at Bunker Hill to return there, and will probably accept it.

FREE METHODIST.

—Bro Edward Mathews has met and vanquished the enemy at Hudson. On Sabbath, the 14th, he baptized thirteen converts in the presence of an audience of over a thousand who thronged the river bank in an orderly and deeply interested manner. Quite a number have handed him their names to be received into the church. Next Lord's day, 27th, he purposes to preach at three in the afternoon on the Origin and Peculiarities of the Free Methodist Church. He is receiving calls for lectures and hopes soon to respond.

—Bro. M. L. Vorheis reports in the Free Methodist from Burlington a good work progressing in several quarters of that city, with many conversions and numbers added to the church.

GERMAN BAPTIST (BRETHREN).

—Elder P. R. Wrightsman of South Bend, Ind., proposes to begin a two week's meeting in Chicago soon.

—The question is being agitated of changing the name of this body of believers from the "Brethren" to "Triune Baptists," a name that would designate their method of trine immersion, in the name of Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

FRIENDS.

—A six weeks meeting at New Burlington, Ohio, was owned of God in the conversion of 115 souls. Sixty-two applied for membership in the Friend's meeting.

—An effort is being made by Friends in Indiana to endow Earlham College by penny contributions. Large and fine collections have lately been made to the museum of the institution, among them a mounted skeleton of one of the largest elephants ever brought to this country.

—A great revival has been experienced at Salem, O., under the labors of James H Morgan, a preacher from Harveysburg. There were 55 conversions while ten were reclaimed from a backslidden state.

—Several meetings of great spiritual power have been held by the Friends in the Eastern Quarterly meeting, North Carolina, resulting in many conversions. At one of these points a correspondent of the Christian Worker writes of one very remarkable case of an outbreaking sinner being thrown down in the midst by the power of God, and after lying nearly an hour as one dying, the evil sprits seemed to be cast out of him, reminding us of the man in the country of the Gadarenes, out of whom Christ cast many devils. This man also after he arose appeared to be sitting at the feet of Jesus clothed and in his right mind. He too went his way publishing how great things Jesus had done unto him.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Rev. John Miller, D. D., late professor of the Theological Seminary of Princeton, has been formally deposed from the ministry for heresy by the session of the Presbytery of New Brunswick.

—Dr. Howard Crosby recently addressed the Presbyterian Association at Baltimore, and pointed out what he thought were some of the great dangers now affecting this denomito temptation, "spiritually weak, easily led by surroundings and ready to let the world instruct it." It is threatened with dangers from "worldliness in its broadest and deepest meaning, the worldliness which comes into the family, which leads the son into a mind-consuming hunt after gold, and the daughter after fashionable distinction, which makes ministers go to secular papers for notoriety, and tell sacred secrets to those who laugh them to scorn." In New York it is impossible to get a Presbyterian church to colonize, but "if the missionary spirit induced men and women to go to Siam and China, why not to less fashionable districts of a city?"

—The work among the Chinese in California is thus spoken of by Dr. C. E. Babb, the correspondent of the Herald and Presbyter: "It is said sometimes that the churches are making no impression upon the Chinese on this coast. But of the thirty-eight added to our church in Sacramento, March 21, eight were Chinamen; and yesterday, at the regular communion in our Chinese church, in this city, (Dr. Loomis), eleven were added on profession—two of them women. We have many Chinese Christians here who will compare favorably with Christians anywhere."

LUTHERAN.

—The Standard, of Columbus, Ohio, has the following interesting news from New York city: "The recent events in St. Matthew's congregation in New York show how mistaken those men of the Council are who assume that existing evils cannot be eradicated in Eastern congregations. The Word of God is quick and powerful there as well as in the West. Dr. Adel writes to the Lutheran: 'It may interest you to hear what is going on here in reference to secret societies, at least in one of our churches. Some months ago this question began to be agitated in St. Matthew's German Lutheran church, and finally, the pastor, Rev. G. H. Sieker, preached a sermon on the subject, which was published, at the request of the congregation. Afterwards came a number of congregational meetings, in which this subject was fully discussed, the pastor's printed sermon being taken up in order. A great deal of interest was manifested in these discussions, which were attended by some of the members of other congregations. Some defended the secret societies, especially that of the "Masons," and testified that the charges brought against them, were not well founded; while others just as strenuously defended the position taken by the pastor in his sermon. I have been told that it was discovered that the number of members of secret societies was by no means as large in St. Matthew's congregation, as many had supposed. Finally, the congregation—I am not able to tell you by how large a majority—determined that henceforth they would not admit any member of a secret society to the membership of St. Matthew's congregation.'"

—There is a colony of Icelandic Lutherans near Halifax, in Nova Scotia. In answer to a petition of the Nova Scotia Conference of the Pittsburgh Synod the government of that province has granted a tract of 100 acres of land for the use of a Lutheran minister.

GENERAL.

—The Western Christian Advocate says: "Rev. N. L. Brakeman of Valparaiso, Indiana, sends us the following: 'During our late revival here, sisters Skinner (wife of the mayor), Goodwin, Maxwell, and other ladies among the more spiritual and earnest workers in the church, assisted by their pastor as his health would permit, held daily religious services at the jail, for the seven prisoners confined there for the crimes of grand larceny, seduction, robbery and murder. In due time four of the seven professed conversion. A few days later the other three broke jail and escaped, opening the way for all to go out. One of the four converts, conscious that the penitentiary was his doom, and seeing his opportunity, fell into the temptation, and 'made way for liberty' at the top of his speed. When he had made a couple of miles, conscience 'made way' for principle; he sat down to rest and reconsider the matter, and arose and returned to his cell! The three who refused to escape, when they could have done so by simply walking through the open door, were as glad to see him back as they were sorry at his leaving. Singularly enough, the Scripture lesson at the jail service the day before the escape was Acts xvi: 16 35 Further than this, when the four converts came to their trial, though advised to plead "Not guilty,' they would not do it, but said, 'We are guilty, and deserve punishment.' Three of the four have been tried and sentenced, and before this reaches the reader will be in the State prison at Michigan City. The other one is yet to be tried, but will no doubt follow them."

—The Evangelical Alliance of the United States will hold its coming biennial session in St. Louis, opening Oct. 28, 1879. Its St. Louis branch thinks the disuse of the catechism is a serious loss to Sunday schools.

THE JEWS IN PALESTINE.

—Eighty years ago the Sublime Porte permitted residence in the holy city to only 300 Israelites. Forty years ago this number was raised, but the Jews were obliged to reside in a special quarter of the city which bore their name. This last restriction, however, disappeared in its turn ten years ago, and since then the Jews have bought up all the land in Jerusalem that could be bought, and have even built entire streets of houses outside the walls. Naturally the increase of the population has been followed by substantial progress. Synagogues and Jewish hospitals have multiplied. The German Jews have no less than sixteen charity associations, and in the interior of the city one may count already twenty-eight 'congregations religieuses.' Two journals have been started. In the Rothschild and other Jewish hospitals 6 000 patients are ministered to annually. A Venetian Jew has given 60,000 francs to found a school of agriculture in Palestine. Baron Rothschild, at the time of the last loan of 200,000,000 made to Turkey, accepted as security a mortgage on the whole of Palestine. Owing to the Jewish immigration, the population of Palestine has doubled during the last ten years. In 1875 there were 13 000 Jews in Jerusalem only. The value of the land at the gates of the city has increased more than tenfold; building and constructive work of all kinds is carried on night and day, and it is to be remarked that the immigrants, who, to a large extent, are from Russia, are animated by religious enthusiasm of a very pronounced type.—Ex.

News of the Week.

—The last of this month the east wing of the new State, War and Navy department building will be ready for occupancy, and the two last named departments will move into it and occupy it jointly until the other wings, which are to be occupied by the War department, are completed two or three years hence. This building, which has been in the course of erection for seven years, will be, when finished, the handsomest structure in the United States, and some men of universal observation have said that there are very few buildings in the world that for beauty and design surpass it. The entire building will be 567 feet long and 342 feet wide, when completed, and, beside the wide corridors, will furnish about 700 office rooms. The style is the Italian renaissance with Masard roof, and the material is granite from the Virginia quarries. The cost of the entire building will be about $11,000,000. The Capitol cost $13,000,000.

—The great sensation in financial circles last week was the subscription made on Thursday by the First National Bank of $150 000 000 of 4 per cent bonds and $40 000 000 funding certificates, which practically provides for the prompt funding of the $194 566 300. The subscription was made according to the terms prescribed by Secretary Sherman in his circular of April 16. While the First National Bank for itself and associates has subscribed for the full amount of $190 000 000 of 4 per cent bonds available for government sale until 1881, it is understood that the amount which will be finally awarded will be smaller, as the Treasury department will grade it down according to the number of bona fide subscriptions which may have been forwarded before 3 P. M. by banks and banking institutions in the general course of business, and actual sale of funding certificates all over the country.

—During the first three months of 1879 there were 7 539 476 passengers carried on the lines of the New York elevated railroad and 3 935 623 on the Metropolitan elevated railroad. The last named company do not run Sunday trains. The average number of passengers per day, by these figures, is 83 772 for the first and 51,102 for the second named company.

—Last Wednesday evening a violent rainstorm occurred at Charleston, S. C., which continued throughout the night. Accounts from the interior show that a storm began with a terrific tornado, which swept through the lower part of the State, causing great destruction of life and property. In the village of Walterboro more than 100 dwellings and all the churches were swept away. Three-fourths of the inhabitants are homeless. Fifteen persons were killed and many wounded. Among the killed were Mrs. Dr. S. M. Rivers, her daughter, and Mr. Philemon Sanders.

At Oakley, a station on the N. E. R. R., all the negro houses were leveled and one negro killed, besides many hurt. Similar casualities are reported from various points in the track of the tornado.

—The dispatches from London indicate that Russia has virtually carried her point as to Roumelian occupation. The English proposition is to appoint Aleke Pacha Governor of Eastern Roumelia and leave matters as they are for a year. During that time Russian influence will be actively exerted against Turkey, and when a year has passed the easiest way to settle the matter will be to annex Eastern Roumelia to Bulgaria. In the meantime the Bulgarian Assembly, largely controlled by Russia, is preparing to elect a Prince who will favor the union of the two States or provinces.

—Last week Monday an attempt was made by a Nihilist named Solouvieff to assassinate the Czar, who was walking in the imperial gardens at St. Petersburg. Five shots were fired in quick succession and when the Czar was within a few feet, but he escaped uninjured. Very cordial communications were exchanged between the Czar and Lord Beaconsfield after the attempted assassination. The Czar, replying to Lord Beaconsfield's congratulations, expressed the belief that the preservation of good feeling between Russia and England was essential to the best interests of Europe, and he counted upon Lord Beaconsfield for the maintenance of such feeling.

—A Berlin dispatch states that the Chief of Police of Archangel has been stabbed. The Chief of Police of Yalta, in the Crimea, has been arrested as a revolutionist. The reported arrests at Kharkoff and Kieff number several thousands.

—A Berlin dispatch states that General Zuroff, prefect of St Petersburg, has resigned because of threats to assassinate him. Martial law has been proclaimed at Odessa, a precaution against expected outbreaks.

—News came last week of another battle in South Africa. Col. Wood attacked the Umbelinis' stronghold on the 28th of March and captured a quantity of cattle. Subsequently 2 000 Zulus retook the cattle, and on the 29th attacked Col. Wood's camp. The Zulus were repulsed after four hours' fighting, but the British loss was heavy, seven officers and seventy men were killed.

—By an explosion of fire-damp in the Agrappo coal pit, near Mons, Belgium, the woodwork of the shaft caught fire and fell in. There are 240 men in the mines, and it is feared that many have perished. A later dispatch says there appears to be scarcely any hope of rescuing any of the 240 miners.

—The Khedive of Egypt has published a manifesto justifying the course which he has taken in dismissing the foreign commissioners, and insisting upon the carrying out of his own programme of reform. He says he will be fully responsible for the public safety of Egypt, and for the due payment of the foreign debt, if he is allowed to exercise the power he wishes through the National party. An opposition to the national feeling there, excited by the exactions and demands of foreign bondholders, can only succeed through force and oppression. The National party, he insists, is strong, earnest, and united. By its aid he will be able to preserve Egypt from disgrace of bankruptcy, relieve the people to a great extent from the onerous burden which they would groan under were the plan of the Conservatives carried out, and succeed in finally discharging the obligations due foreign creditors. The manifesto is a strong and well-written document.

Home and Farm.

Sparrows.

How much longer will there be sparrow clubs and sparrow prizes? They must be the result of want of observation. A new light broke in upon my bailiff yesterday as he saw flights of sparrows busily engaged in our field of green peas, appropriating the "louse" which was injuring the plant and stopping its growth. I am a great believer in birds and poultry as farmer's friends, and this belief has been produced not only by reading the opinions and facts of others, but from thirty years of close observa ion of their habits. My gardener was an inveterate enemy to birds and destroyed their nests in my shrubbery, and in consequence there was always a complaint of grub and other destructive insects; but when I put a firm veto against the destruction, my garden was well filled with uninjured produce. In fact, if you have grub and insects in your garden, stock it with birds or poultry, and you will no longer complain. In very dry weather, when worms and insects are scarce, you must protect your fruit. Just now I see lots of my poultry among the mangold or the tares, "appropriating" my enemies. But I have so often said that my best corn crops are within fifty feet of the fowl house, where the crops, from the day of their sowing until harvest, undergo poultry examination, that I will not again trouble you with details. One must have confidence with only a bushel an acre of seed wheat at their mercy. Let me warn those who do away with all their hedges that there should be belts or shrubberies, not only as a breeding places for birds, but also as shelter from strong prevailing winds.—North British Agriculturist.

Hints on Milking.

Milch cows should be kept as quiet and comfortable as possible, and no person should be employed in milking whom the animals fear. As a general rule, it is important that the milking should always take place at regular hours. The same person should always milk the same cows, and in the same order each day, so far as practicable. A good dairyman should know enough of his stock to be able to tell which of his cows are more difficult to milk than others, and when any new help is introduced the easiest milking cows should be assigned them.

Owing to a spirit of rivalry common among the young and inexperienced, they make an effort to get their pails filled in the quickest possible time; consequently, drawing from each cow as much of her milk as is given down rapidly and readily and leaving a considerable quantity behind in the udder. They may fill their pails rapidly; but the interests of the owner suffer ultimately. The dairyman needs to assure himself by personal trial that one cow is not left for another until she is fairly milked out; since, though it is proper to draw the milk rapidly, it is even more important to secure the last drop.

Cows that are ill-treated or roughly handled will sometimes turn obstinate and will hold their milk. Milkers should study the disposition of the cows under their charge, that they may become familiar with them—fondling them, patting and stroking them, thus securing their confidence. In driving cows from a pasture, they should never be driven or hurried, or made to go faster than a moderate walk. The dairyman should insist upon his assistants milking properly from the very outset. It is far better to spend a little time in this way at the start than to allow the contraction of bad habits, which results in a certain amount of loss every day in the season.

Briefly, the end in view in milking cows is to empty the milk vessels completely by means of a progressive pressure, exerted first by the thumb and index-finger, and subsequently by the rest of the fingers. Part of the milk will be left behind unless good care be taken not to strangle the nipple, as it were, at its base before pressing it, thus rendering part of the force applied of no avail. Inexperienced persons sometimes think that they get on faster by proceeding hastily to the alternating movements required in milking. This is a very great mistake, resulting in an incomplete milking, to begin with, unnecessary fatigue to the operator, and a good deal of distress to the cow. The milkers should always have their nails cut short; and, if a cow's teats are painful from inflammation or other cause, care should be taken not to increase her sufferings. The teats should be annointed with some fatty matter, free from salt, or with a few drops of milk simply. Those who exercise the greatest care, patience and gentleness in the matter of milking cows will be rewarded with the best results.—American Cultivator.

To Cook Meal as it is Cooked in the Southern States.—Wet your meal and set it down where it will keep warm, and it will by its tendency to ferment become light without any yeast or saleratus. Then put it, steaming or boiling or baking, as you desire, at once, and you will have the nicest and most wholesome pone, or corn dodgers, or hoe cake that can be made from corn meal. One thing may cause you trouble; it must be watched very closely, for it sours very quickly after it is light.

How to allay Inflammation.—How to get rid of some superfluous rising in the flesh, or inflammation, or irritation. Tincture of iodine will scatter most of them; put a drop, more or less, on the place once or twice a day and they will gradually disappear. I have even scattered a schurous tumor with it. It will sometimes arrest what would have been a cancer, and ought to be kept in every house. The bottle must have a glass stopper, for it very soon eats up the cork. Sugar of lead will act in many cases, but I think iodine is both safer and better. People who are liable to these things ought to eat but little grease in any form, and no buckwheat or spices or stimulating food of any kind.

Best way to Cook Codfish.—Pick it into shreds—not too fine though—removing all bones. Soak in cold water about twenty minutes, then set it on the stove; let it heat to nearly boiling; then pour off the water and put on fresh. Let this heat, and by this time the fish will be fresh enough for use. Pour off most of the water, and put in enough sweet milk to make all the gravy you want over it; heat to boiling; stir in enough flour dissolved in water to thicken moderately, add quite a large piece of butter; if too fresh, season; and lastly, stir in two eggs well beaten; remove from the fire at once, and you will have a delicious dish.

—Graft the trees yourself. When you set a tree dig a hole large enough to allow the roots plenty of loose dirt to start in and be very careful not to crowd the roots. Pour in a basketful of chip dirt before putting in the tree and tread the dirt firmly about them.

Publishers' Department.

E. J. Chalfant, York, Pa., writes: "I think the reason why people don't take the Cynosure is because your canvassers don't give ALL THE REASONS why they should. And no man can remember half or even one-tenth of them, unless he has them in a tract, always at hand for use. Think of this. We must lose no time, for if the Cynosure, has only about 5,000 subscribers by May of 1880, we may as well bury our American platform and the American party, and fall back into the Republican ranks, and ask for a little mercy from the Knights of the Royal Art."

Will other friends and workers send us suggestions and items which would increase the value of a tract the object of which is to lead those who read it to subscribe for the Cynosure?

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list. No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

Notices.

The Constitution of the N. C. A. fixes the time of annual meeting on June 18th this year. This is the date at which Wheaton College Commencement occurs, and as many wish to attend both gatherings, and as the Board of Directors N. C. A. have authority to change the time of meeting for good reason, I presume our anniversary will be held on the 19th instead of the 18th of June. This will give parties from abroad an opportunity to attend both meetings with very little extra expense. I have consulted several members of the Board and all so far as seen approve of the change, but it will have to be done legally by the Board in session. Friends will please make a note of this and be on the lookout for farther notice in due time.

J. P. STODDARD, Sec. N. C. A.

J. F. BROWNE.
Agt. Ill. Chris. Asso'n.

—It is reported that King Oscar of Sweden is about to circulate a reply to Pope Pius IX's attacks on Freemasonry. The King of Sweden is a high Mason, and proposes to prove that the Pope's attacks are groundless, and need not be observed even by faithful Catholics.

Topics of the Time.

While last month Freemasons of Washington, Chicago and elsewhere were mocking Christ and his church by their blasphemous orgies in pretended celebration of the Lord's Supper and the Resurrection, the Odd-fellows of the National Capital, inspired by the same zeal of lodge worship, occupied the First Baptist church of that city last Sabbath afternoon in a so-called religious celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of that lodge in America. This meeting might pass for what it is worth as a locality item, if President Hayes and his wife had not given up their usual afternoon singing at home, and lent their presence to this desecration of the Lord's day and house to promote the honor and prosperity of a secret order that worships a god of its own manufacture in rites unknown to the Bible. The other day a brother told us of the experience of a friend who was brought into an Odd-fellow lodge for initiation; blindfolded and led about for some time until in a proper state of confusion, the bandage was seized from his eyes, and he beheld through a hole in the curtain or partition a bloated being with distended cheeks pronouncing with a ridiculous air of solemnity, "I am God and there is none else." The veil was lifted from the reason and conscience of this honest man instantly; but President Hayes yet loves such vanities and blasphemies, and is dishonorable enough to lead his wife, who has shown the spirit of a true woman, and has exalted his administration,—her he has led to this Sabbath lodge performance to be flattered by its public laudations, while he conceals from her its degradation and blasphemy!

The recent communistic demonstrations in Chicago do not pass without careful attention from our municipal authorities. As we predicted, the armed demonstration against the bill then pending in the State legislature, against unauthorized armed organizations, has had the effect to carry it; and if the Governor so orders, the militia force of the city will proceed to disarm these foreign revolutionists. They propose to test the matter on Independence day. Meanwhile the Chicago ministers are moving in the right direction—a campaign against Sabbath-breakers of all classes, and for the enforcement of the laws which give us one peaceful day in seven. Success for such an effort means extermination to the commune. Sunday saloons, theaters, picnics, carousals, and bloodthirsty speeches are blood, sinew and backbone for that secret lodge. If it can be compelled to behave on that day, the rest of the week will take care of itself. May God bless the effort for his day.

From the European dispatches as yet no hope appears through the gloomy cloud hanging over Russia. Assassinations and arrests are lengthening out into a gloomy chapter, and no one dare prophesy what may be written before we read "The End." It is said that the Nihilist secret lodge numbers 19,000 fully initiated members, and from all classes of society, besides thousands who have taken a modified oath of allegiance. The value of their property is 2 000,000 roubles. The French, German and Italian branches of this lodge movement are not inactive; and the trembling pope, after muttering his manifesto lately, is now sending to foreign governments for promises of help in case he is beset with the secretists. He is also said to be preparing an invitation to all European governments to unite in the suppression of Socialism. The visionary Garabaldi has for a moment shaken off the decrepitude of age to publish a manifesto to the Italian people on the formation of a league for the attainment of universal suffrage. He concludes in these threatening terms: "The league has decided to work by pacific means. Whoever governs Italy must take note that, if, by impeding the work of the league, he compels it to resort to other means, he will be held accountable by history and the nation." Whatever may be understood by this, the old revolutionist has been trying to raise a subscription to buy a million rifles to distribute among the people. This rash project has been defeated by the dissensions of its promoters, but may be followed by another as rash but more successful. Trained to gain all advantages by brutality and bloodshed these poor people of Europe, like the rabble of the Crusades, are only too ready to follow a bellowing leader into revolution and war; while more peaceful measures might gain their ends sooner and more surely.

In Washington, while Secretary Sherman is saving $13.600,000 a year by refunding the national debt, Congress is given over to speechifying. Blaine, Conkling, Robeson and others had their say last week and gained the applause of the papers. The army appropriation bill which passed both houses with its political amendments will be vetoed by the President and his message is expected on Tuesday. The minority presented several amendments which were as bad for the Democrats to refuse as to accept. They were voted down however, and that party in Congress thus declare that no army, naval or civil officer shall approach the polls to keep the peace, while rifle clubs and armed ruffians may go there, ready and intent on disturbance and molestation. The legislative bill will pass, it is predicted, with less debate, and then the question is, What next? These bills cannot be passed over the executive veto; and the last resort will be to vote appropriations for six months and refer all else to the regular session in December.

As the Cynosure has called attention in the past to the fortunes of St. Louis in attempted licensing crime against nature and sense, the description of the final act in the performance from the N. Y. Witness will be read with a sense of relief:

"To St. Louis belongs the bad preeminence of having been the first and only American city to adopt the odious old world system of license for the social evil. The infamous experiment was soon abolished at the demand of the better portion of the moral and Christian citizens. Repeated attempts have, however, been made since to revive it. The latest was in the form of a charter amendment, authorized by an act of the legislature, which was submitted to the votes of St. Louis on the 11th inst. The advocates of license, embracing German materialists, a corrupt police, shyster doctors, and licentious men, have been persistent and vigorous. The opponents of the wicked scheme, including the clergy of nearly all denominations, have been active and outspoken against it. It is gratifying to be able to add that the obnoxious amendment was voted down at the polls by a majority of nearly two to one, there being 7 058 votes cast against it, and 4 716 for it. In thus defeating the vile measure the better portion of the citizens of St. Louis have not only saved their city from a great disgrace and peril, but their timely action will also prove an additional safeguard against kindred immoral schemes in other American cities."

Is the Masonic Oath of Secrecy Morally Binding.

BY REV. H. H HINMAN.

1. No obligation is morally binding which requires what is practically impossible. Freemasonry has been fully published to the world, and the oath to "always conceal" it is as practically absurd as an oath to suppress the sunshine or conceal the current news of the day.

2 No covenant is morally bind ing which is entered into in ignorance of what is promised. Every candidate for Masonry must promise to "cheerfully conform to all the usages and customs of the order." He is assured that he knows nothing about these usages and customs and hence knows nothing of what is promised. The Master Mason swears "to conform to and abide by all the laws, rules and regulations of the Master's degree and of the Grand Lodge," so far as the same shall come to his knowledge. He knows nothing of what is involved in that promise.

3 No covenant is morally binding that is entered into in violation of D vine law. All covenants to keep unknown and concealed promises are thus forbidden: "If a soul swear to do good or to do evil, and it be hid from him, he shall be guilty in one of them; and shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing. (Lev 5:4 5) "Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shall perform unto the Lord thine oaths." (Mat. 5: 32) Every one swearing an oath to do some unknown thing is forsworn, for he swears to what he does not know to be true.

4. No covenant is morally binding that has been fraudulently obtained. Masonry is a fraud. It assures the candidate that Masonry contains great and invaluable privileges, and that it requires nothing inconsistent with his moral or religious duties (Sickels' Monitor, p. 31). Both of these are false. It tells him that "Masonry contains a regular system of science," and "includes almost every form of polite learning" (Sickels' Monitor, p. 62). Utterly false.

It tells him that a Master Mason is endowed with morality and intelligence—the stay of religion, has the protection of Deity, and that nothing more can be suggested that the soul of man requires (Sickels, p. 97).

He is told that the common gavel will fit him as a lively stone for "the spiritual temple the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens" (Webb's Monitor, p. 22).

He is told that in the Master's degree he is admitted into the holy of holies, is saved from "the grave of iniquity and raised to the faith of salvation," and "inspired with a most cheering hope of life and immortality" (Mackey's Masonic Lexcon, Art. Master Mason).

He is told that he comes to the lodge "seeking the new birth," and that the "ceremonial preparations that surround him all indicate that a great change is about to take place in his moral and intellectual condition" (Mackey's Ritualist, p. 22). All false.

5. A covenant to do what is forbidden by Divine law is in its nature void. The oath of the men who swore to kill Paul was void, though deliberately taken, because it involved crime. The Masonic oath of secrec y implies: (a) lying. The Mason must pretend that Masonry cannot be learned except in the lodge, which is false. (b) Union with unbelievers contrary to 2 Cor. 6:14, Deists, Jews. Mahommedans or Masons. (c) Conferring of profane titles, such as Worshipful Master, Grand High Priest, etc. Christ said, "Call no man your master." (d) The taking of illegal and profane oaths. All Masonic oaths are extra judicial and profane. (e) The concealment of what it holds to be most important truths. Christ said, "Let your light shine." (f) A religious worship in the lodge that omits all mention of Christ. Jesus said, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me."

6. A covenant that requires a violation of divinely appointed covenants is void. The marriage covenant is of Divine appointment and enjoins mutual confidence between husband and wife. Masonry enjoins a life-long silence on the part of the husband as to what he does in the lodge. Church covenants require confession of faults. Masonry forbids the convicted Mason to confess his sin to the church. Church covenants enjoin the submission of our lives to the watch-care of the church and imply the right of inspection into the character and conduct of its members. Masonry forbids all inquiry into its character by the church or into the conduct of its members while in the lodge. Church covenants bind each member to tell his brethren of their faults and if they will not hear, to tell it to the church, but Masonry says he shall not tell to the church what has been done in the lodge, and swears him to conceal all the secrets of a Master Mason except murder and treason, i. e. it binds him to disobey the solemn covenant he entered into with the church.

7. Every covenant is void that is inconsistent with loyalty to the civil government. Freemasonry is another government, with laws, penalties and modes of trial, essentially different from those of this Republic, It denies all right of inspection and repudiates all responsibility to the civil law. It holds that the Masonic covenant is paramount to any statuary enactment. Its language is, "It is the covenant that makes the Mason. He cannot cast off or nullify his Masonic covenant. No law of the land can effect it. No anathema of the church can weaken it. It is irrevocable." (Webb's Monitor page 240). No covenant to conceal what is immoral and disloyal can be binding and hence the Masonic oath of concealment is void.

Hush it up!

The old city building of Providence, Rhode Island, or as it was sometimes called, the old market building, was formerly occupied by the city government until said government removed into the new City Hall last November. As the new City Hall was new furnished throughout, the discarded furniture in the old building was being got together for an auction sale, when a strange discovery was made, which some one makes fun of in the following manner. We clip from the Providence Journal, Feb. 17, 1879:

A MUNICIPAL MYSTERY.—While rummaging around in the old city building on Market Square, getting the furniture and valuables together in preparation for the auction, and sort of investigating to see what was there, some of the city officials discovered in the basement at the northwest corner, a human skull and several bones carefully laid away The matter has been kept quiet for some reason or other, and a systematic attempt has been made to carry the bones away one at a time, possibly for purposes of concealment. A member of the Committee on City Property took away the skull, either for a relic, a parlor ornament, to make a drinking cup, or, as already intimated, for concealment. A member of the Fire Department has taken away other portions of the remains, including an old spoon which was found near them. But there yet remain several bones and portions of b nes and there seems to be no doubt they are human bones. There is a small copper kettle with these remains, but it may or may not have any connection with them.

Who, in years gone by gave life and motion to these bones, is of course unknown. It is not known that anybody was ever killed in the old building in the heat of debate, nor in any other manner, except, perhaps politically. Many measures have died and been buried within those walls, but no men as far as recollection serves. Captain Winship, who has been intimate with matters and things at the city building for some years, on being asked concerning these remains, took on a queer look as if he knew all about them, and flatly refused to give any information. It is not probable there will be an investigation, the general desire seeming to be to hush the matter up.

Also from the same paper next day:

"ALAS! POOR MAN, I KNEW HIM WELL"—A fellow might have been seen wending his ways through the ancient halls of learning(?) seeking for the Mayor's chair. What dis position was made of that poor man Captain Winship still declines to reveal or give any information.

The true Masonic ring of the above extracts, or perhaps we should say of the doings related therein, leave little room for doubt that the affair is in some way connected with the lodge, even if rumor did not charge Capt. Winship, the Mayor's clerk (and our Mayor is a 33° Mason, you must know) with taking some of the bones away in a covered basket, and refusing to give any information concerning them. The Masonic jewel of a silent tongue is very prominent throughout. It is believed by many that the bones are some cast off piece of lodge furniture. If so, we don't wonder at their anxiety to hush it up. Keep your jewel, brethren of the mystic tie, by all means. Yes, hush it up! especially as there is a certain legend connected with the old building told thus in the Providence Press of Nov. 14, 1878.

After speaking of the construction of the old building, the Press goes on to say:

"The ground floor was used for market purposes, while the upper rooms were, and have been up to to-day, devoted to municipal uses. In the year 1797 St. John's Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons were granted the right to add another story to the building, which they at once did, using the rooms thus created as lodge and ante rooms. About 1800 the cellar, which was of very small size, was further excavated, and thus more room was made for market purposes. From 1800 up to the time the Anti-mason question swept over the country, the market business must have progressed quietly and undisturbed, for no mention is made in later historical sketches of any eruptions about the building. With Anti-Masonic disturbance the building once more came into notice. An absurd story was started to the effect that the Masons had enticed an Anti-mason man into their lodge room and

HAD MURDERED HIM.

The story grew as it spread and pretty soon such a pandemonium was raised that the meetings of the lodge were broken up. One frequenter of the market, old "Abe" Wilkinson, of Pawtucket, averred 'that five hundred men had been murdered up there' meaning the lodge-room. Finally that trouble passed away, and peace, beefsteak and sausages prevailed in the old market."

Such is the legend as recorded in history. It is too bad for the lodge that that skeleton tallies so well with the legend. Yes, all things considered, lest the lodge should come to shame, that skeleton affair had better be hushed up.

RHODE ISLANDER.

Providence. April 15, 1879.

How to organize a Steal.

First get up a ring in the regular Masonic style. Let the members be persons of the first standing in society, and regular church-goers. Put the deacon forward to act as receiver in a case where the stockholders of the principal railroad of a State are trying to recover their property from a previous ring that has put the capital of the road in their pockets.

Now get one of the members of the Supreme Court of the State to act as chancellor and to run the road in connection with the deacon. The ring has now the church and the bench on its side.

Now proceed to give free passes to all the prominent lawyers, all the judges, all the members of the legislature, for the time being, to the bishops and to the leading politicians.

Already the organization is very strong, and can control almost every interest of the State. Of course it had all the masters of lodges in its interest from the very beginning. It presents, therefore, a great array of religion, law, justice, politics, Masonic holiness, etc., as an evidence of honesty; but a great steal can never have too much security against possible disclosure and accountability. Hence the next step of the ring is to send round a "bright Mason," a great lover of the innocence of lambskin aprons, to work upon the pious feelings of farmers' wives and daughters; for farmers are honest folks, or are so considered to be, and they are the voters at any rate.

The bright Mason proceeds in this way—going to the principal farmers' families of every town, and oiling his tongue afresh with lodge palaver, he extols to them all the beauties of secret organizations.

First, they shut out Irishmen, negroes, tramps and other unworthy persons.

Second, they preserve the Republican party, which is so precious to the country.

Third, they constitute a large number of pleasant offices.

Fourth, young ladies are brought forward to act as chaplains, and show their gifts in prayer.

Fifth, (though that is a matter that is kept quiet) it enables the select few to control the elections, and enjoy the sweets of secret power, and

Finally, the members of these organizations, called granges, can get all their flour, meal, salt, stoves, plows, and in short all their store-goods from ten to fifty per cent cheaper than outsiders can.

These are advantages not easily to be set aside. They offer religion, politics and store-goods at a cheap rate. The whole State becomes organized, every small village having a grange, or diluted Masonic lodge, with its Master, its Flora, its Ceres, its Pomona (bright, lovely girls) its female chaplains, etc.

Nor does the organizing power of the ring stop here. There is an old, time honored almanac in the State, which holds its place in the family next to the Bible. The maker of this almanac is induced to publish in its columns all these granges, with the names of their Masters, thus rendering them one of the institutions of the State, and presenting the Masters as so many keys to be played upon by the ring at its pleasure.

All the owners of the road are thus swindled out of their property. It goes into the pockets of the ring, which shares with the grangers to the extent of furnishing them goods transportation free. Having thus organized its steal, the ring, of course, proceeds to run the State as well as its railroads. It holds the power of political life and death over every one in the State, and can put whom it pleases in office, from village post master up to presidential elector.

The people and their civil institutions no longer govern the State, but the ring, sustained by secret organizations, has taken the government into its own hands. It is not the people who make our officers; but secret lodges do it. The power of appointment to office has completely gone from the hands of the people as if it had already become an article of the constitution that all officers shall be chosen by secret organizations.

Only one step more is needed in order to supplant all our civil institutions, and that is to get up a great political ring, with a great GRAND MASTER at its head, to control all the other rings of the country.

What shall we do? turn our backs on our old American institutions, and yield servile submission to these secret rings? Have we already become so servile that we are bound, by the price of a new plow or harrow, to vote for the member of a secret ring? Have we already so far lost our liberty that we must vote for some one who has sold his own liberty to the Masonic lodge? I am an American, and will vote for no one but an AMERICAN.

The question arises, are lawyers, generally speaking, the most reliable men for sound judgment and integrity. If so, we are doing right to send a vast majority of lawyers to Congress. But if the very nature of that profession and the unscrupulous arts lawyers are expected to resort to when espousing the wrong side of any case lead to a special pleading style of viewing questions and an elastic conscience in voting upon them, their number in Congress should be very limited, and there should be a goodly proportion of sturdy farmers, merchants, manufacturers, shipowners, and, in fact, all classes in Congress. See Mr. Chittenden, for instance, the retired New York merchant; what a breadth of intelligence and solidity of judgment he exhibits. You never find him following any foolish cry, got up by unscrupulous politicians, to serve selfish ends. Let us have a majority of agriculturists and business men or men of leisure and culture who are living on their property. Lobbies, wine dinners, free passes, gratis shares and even more substantial forms of bribery, have no overpowering charms for them as they have for political adventures, and they will not take fees as lawyers in Congress do, to become special pleaders for private interests which are to be effected by legislation.—N. Y. Witness.

SERMON.

Preached in the College church, Wheaton, Ill. Sabbath morning, April 20, 1879, by the pastor, Prof. C. A. Blanchard.

TEXT, MATT. 8: 2–3,

Let us in studying this Scripture note, first, the man who throws himself at the feet of our Saviour as he comes down from the Mount. His garments are rent and his head is bare. Rushing hastily into the presence of the Lord, as if he feared the opposition of the crowd, he falls upon his knees and then upon his face saying, "Lord if thou wilt thou art able to make me clean."

He is a leper. This disease starts in the bones. Is may lie hidden for many years but at last it reveals itself. After it is manifested it may progress more or less rapidly. Sometimes, as in the cases of Gehazi and Miriam, the leper in a moment of time was covered from head to foot with the dry hot scales of the disease. At other times the character of the disorder remained for a time in doubt and only after repeated examinations was the unfortunate assured of his fate.

This trouble was then and is now incurable by human art. The one stricken by it was sentenced to die by a slow and horrible death. Waking or sleeping, hour by hour the destroyer marched steadily on; one by one the members of the body dropped away until at last the poor sufferer, hideous and loathsome to his fellows, hastened to the friendly solitude of the grave.

Not only was this disease incurable, it was contagious as well. He who was stricken might shrink in horror from the wilderness, but as he remembered that even his touch might consign wife or child to the agony of a living death, honor and affection pointed with undeviating finger to the desert and love joined with despair in hurrying him to its wastes.

It mattered not that his form was perfect, his face beautiful, his mind cultured and his soul filled with lofty ambitions; he well knew and so did those who most loved and cherished him, that all these gifts and graces were powerless to save him from his fate. Not only so but the salvation of others depended on the rigidity of his exclusion from the haunts of men. Without the camp, garments rent, lips covered and head bare he crouched like some wild beast in the shade of rock or tree, and at sight of human being cried, "Unclean! unclean!"

THIS IS THE CONDITION OF THE SINNER.

If there is one thing that is more clearly taught in the Bible than another, it is that sin is in the heart before it is in the outward act. The world looks with contempt at the poor, drunken ignorant man who sells his vote for fifty cents or a glass of beer. It also looks with disdain at the poor tool that puts the price of his vote into his hand, but the blind, stupid world often forgets to visit its scorn on the man who, for the sake of office or power, furnishes the drunken agent with means to ply his trade. We look at saloon keepers and habitual drunkards with abhorrence, but the men in high places, the lawyers and ministers and merchants and professed Christians and professedly decent men who bargain for their votes and protect them in their traffic are as much more dangerous to the community than they as hypocrites are baser than honorable men. The leprosy has come out on the man who is in the ditch; it is in the bones and heart of the man who,

"Smiles and smiles and is a villain still."

But this sin that is in the heart will by and by discover itself to the world. It will come to the surface. The ostrich hides its head under some broad leaf or heap of sand and imagines its clumsy body to be out of sight; so the man who is at heart opposed to God plays for a time a double part. He deceives honest men and is the steadfast adherent of those who are evil, i. e, he is as steadfast as his own selfishness will allow him to be, but sooner or later the hypocritical mask will be torn from his face and the awful depravity of his character be revealed. It is the misfortune of sin that like leprosy it cannot be concealed. Lie hidden it may for years but at last it must be declared to the world and the sinner be driven out of the camp.

Then again sin resembles leprosy in that it is contagious and hereditary. One sinner destroys much good saith the Scripture, and our observation furnishes a thousand testimonies to the truth of the saying. It is also true that sinners destroy good in proportion to their popularity and power. If some poor outcast has the leprosy it is very sad, but if the leaders in church and state are infected with the poison then let all beware.

A bad man is dangerous just in proportion to his outward decency and his intellectual power. The poor debauchee spewing in the gutter makes no converts to the saloon. The dirty cup in the trembling hand of some ragged beggar is not dangerous to others. Men are made drunkards in gilded halls where white and jeweled hands offer the wine cup, and smiles of beauty lure the young man who just enters the busy whirl of life, into the drunkard's road.

The Age of Reason and the coarse witticisms of Ingersoll and Voltaire, these are not the sources of infidelity. Gambling church fairs, proslavery, Masonic preachers, cheating and lying and adultery at the very doors of God's house, these are the enemies that the Christian church has most to fear.

From this fact arises the desperate struggle which Satan makes to control the church and to keep in it hypocrites enough to render it powerless for good. If the Christian world could only have had its enemies in front, it would long since have had them by the throat; but when Judas carries the bag, Ananias is attorney and Haman high priest, it fares ill with the cause of Jesus.

Hence God has so ordered it that the leprosy of sin will work its way to the surface. The only way to seem good is to be good. The feet of those who hate God will slide in due time. While they are in the camp they will do much harm. Those who touch them will be contaminated, but at last their true character will be revealed and they be cast out.

WITH GOD ALL THINGS ARE POSSIBLE.

This poor man in the text had probably been hanging off on the edge of the crowd listening to the sermon on the Mount. The discourse was over and the meeting had broken up. He saw the men and women walking along home and the children hopping and skipping down the mountain side.

The night was coming on and the poor leper thought of his own home away in the city, his wife and children gathered in the quiet hush of twilight to look up at the stars and pray for the wandering husband and father. It was a heavy cross and the tears fell like rain; at last starting up from the ground he hastened into the crowd and cast himself down at the feet of the Saviour. "Lord if thou art willing thou art able to save, to heal me," he said and then bowed his head and waited. He had done all that he could. The disease that burned in his veins was wholly beyond mortal power. If the Lord did not help him nothing remained but for him to rot to pieces an inch at a time. His faith led him to the Lord, to utter the prayer and then to wait an answer. This is precisely the position for the sinner and the saint, waiting on the Great and Holy One; sure that he can if he will, and sure that he will if it is best do for us what we need.

What consolation in this leper's cry! Oh mother, thou who hast prayed for life for the babe, the Lord can if he will, and he will if it is best. Oh father! pleading for the salvation of thy son, the Lord can if he will and he will if it is best. Oh Christian, crying out for the desolations of Zion, the Lord can if he will,and he will if it is best rebuild the broken walls and make them stronger and more beautiful than ever. Oh burdened one, whatever thy sorrow, rest thy tossed and troubled heart on the surety that the Lord is able to do what he wills and that he wills to do what is best for thee and thine.

This is the language of true faith. In our weakness and halting we often say in heart at least, "Oh Lord thou wilt if thou canst do this."

We imagine that the Ruler of the universe wants to do well and will do as well as he can. The ancients thought that there were two gods one of good the other of evil, each one powerful in certain directions but limited in others. Unconsciously we drift into the same error. We practically, if not theoretically, believe that if God is able to wipe out dram drinking, secret societies, slavery, tobacco-using, sectarianism, bribery and corruption in elections and kindred evils, he is willing to do it, but we are a little in doubt as to his ability. Let us this morning learn a lesson from the poor outcast who on that mountain 1800 years ago repeated that glorious truth; "Lord if thou art willing, thou art able." Only with our clearer light let us add to his confession the equally glorious truth that God is willing to cleanse us, and his church and the world from the foul stains of sin, and that since he is both able and willing, the work is sure to be done.

THE LORD'S ANSWER.

One of the marked peculiarities of our Saviour's answers to prayer was the immediateness of them. In nature God seems to work slowly. The trees that lift their forms and stretch their arms from the mountain summits have wrestled with the winds of centuries. The coal that you put on the fire when you go home to-day was stored away in the ground hundreds of thousands of years ago. The stout-armed, broad-chested man was a helpless infant and came to his present state by the same course of nursing, crying, creeping, walking and running that you and I so faithfully pursued. So nations are educated slowly. It has taken six thousand years to teach the world that man simply as man has rights. If we learn in six thousand years more to use our rights wisely, we shall get along finely.

But in almost every instance where men came to our Lord for help the answer followed the asking as the roll of thunder follows the lightning's flash. In this particular instance the poor leper, helpless and unknown, comes and declares his faith. Without waiting a moment the Lord touches him and says, "I am willing, be thou clean," and while he yet lay on his face he was cured. Great men are difficult of access; they fence themselves about with servants and ceremony and often keep anxious men waiting hours, weeks or months for answers. The Lord hears before men call and answers while they are speaking. The greatest and best Man who ever lived was prompt and kind in his answer to a leper. True greatness of character is humble and helpful. The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and give his life a ransom for many. When will we learn as we ought this great lesson and when will we make it our business to be first in doing promptly and cheerfully the thing that needs to be done?

NOW IS THE ACCEPTED TIME.

In conclusion let us reflect that this man's cleansing resulted from timely action. It is true spiritually, intellectually and financially that there is a tide in the affairs of men which taken at the flood leads on to fortune. The wise man sees his opportunity just before he gets to it; the fool just after he has passed it by. The blind men that sat by the road were cured because they were active at the right time. Naaman was healed because he did as he was directed at once. Saul, as soon as he found out who he was persecuting said, "Lord, what shall I do?" and this leper came at this time or possibly he would never have come at all.

How many of you who are here this morning are, and have been, convinced of duties which are still undone? Some want to confess Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour; some to unite with the church; some to establish family worship; some to rebuke some brother that is out of the way; some to encourage some one who is weary and heavy laden. Dear brethren and sisters, do speedily whatever you are to do for the night comes when you cannot work, whatever your wish may be.

One morning about three or four o'clock, a ship struck the rocks off the coast of Northumberland. Signal guns were fired and soon a few men and a crowd of boys assembled on the cliff that overhung the sea. One by one the moments dragged slowly by, and at last the grey light of morning showed the watchers the wreck. A group of sailors were huddled in the rigging, and one shouted through a trumpet, 'Can't you help us? When the tide comes in we shall all drown." But there was no boat, and if there had been the waves were planting their heavy fists against the rocky cliff in such a determined manner that it could not have lived ten minutes in the surf. The school teacher said, What shall we do? and a little silent fellow named Tim said, "I think we had better pray." "You are quite right," said the teacher, and men and boys dropped on their knees and prayed the dear Lord to have pity on the brave fellows who clung to the ropes away out among the breakers. Just then the man with the trumpet cried out: "Stand by! we're going to fire a line ashore." The flame leaped out from the cannon's mouth, but the ball fell away short and splashed in the sea. The men and boys groaned, but the trumpet called again, "We have one more ball." A few minutes of waiting and the gun was fired. It was the last ball and the last hope. It struck the edge of the cliff and fell into the sea. But all at once Tim darted from the group of boys and at one leap cleared the edge of the cliff and down, down, like a bird leaped into the waves. They followed him as soon as they could find a path down, and the teacher rushing into the surf dragged him ashore, the line fast clenched in his hands. A cable was drawn ashore, a basket rigged, and every man on board was saved. Little Tim lay for hours cold and still as death, but at last he opened his eyes and said: "The line, the line; did we get the line?"

Now, brethren, to do good or to get good we must act promptly. Don't stand talking with a sin or a duty. Say to the sin Get thee behind me. Say to the duty, Here am I, send me. If duty call you to the testimony for Jesus before the crowd, do it. If it take you into difficulty and danger, do it all the same. And when you feel your sinfulness, your weakness and need, lift your voice to that One who stood upon the mountain and say, "Lord if thou art willing thou art able to help."

Reform News.

NORTHEAST PENNSYLVANIA.

REFORM SOCIETIES AND CHURCHES.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have a few more facts to c mmunicate regarding our reform work in this region of country. Our quarterly meeting at Clifford was thinly attended in consequence of the stormy weather and the almost impassable condition of the roads. The meeting need not be regarded as a failure, though not the success we anticipated.

We opened on the evening of the 27th (March) by a good address given by Eld. J. W. Raynor. Saturday, the 28th, was used for prayer, free conference, and business. On Saturday evening we were well entertained by a good anti-secret sermon delivered by Eld. Rogers, a missionary of the Seventh-day Baptists. He is an able man and takes right ground on the lodge question.

On Sabbath we attended church in the morning, some at the Baptist and some at the M. E. church. Eld. Wm. A. Miller is pastor of the former and Eld. Davitt was then pastor of the latter; both good men of the conservative sort, not committed to this reform.

In the evening we were cheered by the presence of a quite large audience and your correspondent preached and was followed by good addresses made by Elders Wm. A. Miller and S. E. Miller, the president of this association.

The next quarterly meeting will be either at Harford, or Uniondale, Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, to be determined by committee, and published in due time.

Permit me here to say that in a card from Eld. A. L. Post, I learn that a campaign is suggested for northeast Pennsylvania by our General Agent, J. P. Stoddard, in November next; the 11th, 12th and 13th. I approve of this plan and will do all I can to make the proposed campaign a success. We shall then expect to see Stoddard and other noble men consecrated to this much needed reform. Put us down for the campaign as above and we will arrange for the place and advertise in season. Can we not get our posters from the Cynosure office?

Now in regard to other matters which affect our reform, we may report progress.

An anti-secret Baptist church has recently been organized in Lenox, Susquehanna county, Pa., under the supervision of Elder S. E Miller; and another in West Preston, Wayne county. The latter will be supplied by myself for the present, and next Sabbath will be my first with them. Both of these churches are thoroughly anti-secret.

A suggestion to the Cynosure.

When, Mr. Editor, the Cynosure throws our anti-secret ministers (?) into convulsions I submit to your humanity that there must be in it something that needs modification, if not moderation. I dislike to have our Baptist ministers go into spasms and especially those who say they are opposed to Masonry.

In a small city in Pennsylvania a good brother got hold of a Cynosure and on seeing the title he, voluntarily or involuntarily and spasmodically, tore it asunder and threw it into the stove! Whether he recovered from the shock I never heard. But think, Mr. Editor, of the effect on the poor man's nerves, and in the next number you put up, use truth sparingly; as I suspect that paper had too heavy a charge of that ingredient for the nerves of a "speculative Anti-mason." Remember, my brother, that this is an age of charity (?). We are making rapid strides h—ward now, and baptising into the church many things supposed, forty years ago, by all godly people to be impious and profane. Now if we can only convert these former enemies of the church into aids and consecrate them by baptism and the Lord's Supper, why not do it? Let the old fogies who are opposed to lodgery, church gambling, etc., who believe in "being sober and vigilant" and watching unto prayer, and all that sort of thing, go on their way, while we advance to a general good time of pleasure seeking and so tone down on these pious old notions. If you persist in dealing out the truth naked and undisguised in your "old fashioned" way we shall forgive you and so "have peace."

The spirit of prophecy has fallen on the people in the region of the new churches and quite a sensation is apparent. They foresee our speedy destruction and have come to the conclusion that your poor correspondent is crazy. From the sons of "faith, hope and charity" comes the sound of epithets on the odious name of "old Callender." At this you need not marvel, as you know "the orders" are very beneficent and charitable. You may be sure that these accusers are very sincere in their accusations of insanity, as they hold me intensely responsible for all that I do, and a great deal more that I don't do. Can you not, Mr. Editor, do something to prompt these angels of the lodge to subscribe towards getting me a straight jacket and pay my way in some asylum for the insane? You know at what immense cost the Masons provided for Wm. Morgan and family. They will surely help us in case they have an opportunity. What has been published about the Preston Center Baptist church is pronounced "all a lie."

NATHAN CALLENDER.

DuPage County Convention.

A meeting of the DuPage County Association was called last week by the President, Rev. H. H. Hinman, but too late for very general notice. A large attendance was not expected, but in proportion few reform gatherings of the year can surpass it in ability, intelligence and zeal.

The meeting was held in the College chapel, Wheaton, Rev. H. H. Hinman occupying the chair, M. E. Griswold, Secretary.

After a season of prayer business proceeded. H. L. Kellogg was appointed enrolling committee, and Pres. J. Blanchard, Dr. J. B. Walker and Rev. C. F. Hawley committee on resolutions.

A propo sition to question candidates for political office met with favor, and H. L. Kellogg, Rev. C. F. Hawley and E. B. Thompson were selected as committee to correspond with candidates to learn whether or no they are connected with secret lodges.

It was suggested that an effort be made to awaken some interest in our reform questions and disseminate accurate information respecting them through the county papers, the Wheaton Illinoian and Naperville Clarion. Prof. C. A. Blanchard was requested to act as committee to confer with the respective editors and secure space to be filled with matter of general interest in opposition to secret lodges.

A discussion ensued on the question of political action, whether distinct nominations should be made, or the public mind educated on the dangerous nature and practices of the secret orders; the direct effort being made in the primary meetings to secure committees and candidates unsworn by the lodge. While the universally expressed opinion was that no vote should be cast for a Freemason, it was finally concluded that for the present it would be sufficient to rely on the committee of inquiry, and let their report of the standing of candidates, through the local press, be a protest against them if members of the lodge.

In the evening the following resolutions, presented by the committee, were adopted:

Resolved, That while we rejoice in the decline of Freemasonry in Illinois as indicated by its Grand Lodge statistics, and while we are glad that the Masonic Chapter has ceased to hold its meetings in Wheaton, yet we deeply regret that the moral sense of the people continues to be outraged by the maintenance of a lodge, and earnestly call on every good citizen to unite with us in the abatement of those public enemies the dram-shops and the lodge.

Whereas, The nations of Europe are kept in a state of continual agitation and alarm by the secret orders known as Nihilists, Socialists and Communists; and

Whereas, These are but the outgrowths of speculative Freemasonry, the modern mother and type of all secret orders; and

Whereas, Masonry, like Socialism, repudiates all responsibility to either the church or State, therefore

Resolved, That we regard all such secret orders as dangerous to the public welfare and enemies to be aoated by law.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the continued prosperity of Wheaton College, evinced by the fact that in the face of combined opposition of organized secretism and of ecclesiastical conservatism, it has extinguished its debt, increased its available means, and secured entire harmony in its faculty and board of trustees.

Resolved, That in Communism, Socialism, and Nihilism, with their attendant contempt of law, whether human or Divine, we see the legitimate fruit of Freemasonry, and that the toleration of another government than that of the constituted authorities, whether that government be called Freemasonry, trades union or communism, imperils all legitimate government, brings Christianity into contempt and is destructive of Christian civilization. Nor is there a reasonable hope that this danger will be averted while Freemasonry, the fruitful mother of secret orders usurps the places of power and repudiates all responsibility either human or Divine.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard of the National Association occupied the evening in a powerful address on the antagonism of Masonry to the social order and the family circle. Rev. C. F. Hawley, Wesleyan Evangelist, was also advertised for an address, but from the lateness of the hour begged to be excused. The Association then adjourned until the annual meeting about the middle of September.

The Indiana State Gathering.

WEST NEWTON, Ind.,
April 18, 1879.

To the Friends of the cause in Indiana:—The subject of our next annual meeting is now before us, and is an important one; but where it should be held in order to make it a success is what we want. It appears that our last two annual meetings were neither of them as successful as we anticipated, that is, for some cause the masses of the people were not interested, did not turn out; but our meetings at West Newton and Plainfield were not entirely in vain. A number of young men have acknowledged to me since that they had intended to join the Masons; but were completely undeceived and were glad of it.

In my judgment the time for holding a meeting in Indianapolis has not come yet. No one is more anxious to hold a meeting in that city than myself. I like the idea of "bearding the lion in his den." But before making such a bold attack, let us be sure that we can hold our ground and not have to retreat in disgrace. Financially we are too weak, and we must be sure that we have the command of all the big guns in the service. In order to make a success in Indianapolis we want at least six hundred dollars unless we could have the use of a hall free, and I think our cause is too unpopular for that. I live twelve miles from Indianapolis, and I think I have some knowledge of the forces we would have to contend with there. But if I live a few years I hope to see a meeting of this organization held in our State capital. Respectfully,

PRESTON ALIEN.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The subject of Masonry is freely discussed at this place. Our men, women and children have their signs, grips, pass-words and their philosophy. The thing assumes such a form here that we can't confine the battle to Masonry, but we have to occasinally war with Masons.

In my last letter to your paper I mentioned the grand gift concert held by the Masonic fraternity at Fort Wayne, Ind., and the following week the Journal of that city came out with an article signed "Fair Play," (said by the editor to be a business man of Zanesville,) in which he says, "I do not understand that the concert alluded to was gotten up by the Masons. Freemasons as an order had nothing to do with it." This sets "Fair Play" before our people as one of two things: either a basely ignorant man, or a notorious liar. The printed circulars state that "the Masonic fraternity of the city of Fort Wayne have undertaken the task of erecting this building in connection with their temple, and they propose to push it through to completion." They advertise themselves as coming before the people with this plan (for a concert). I quote now from the circular further:

"The idea of holding a grand gift concert suggested itself thus: Many of the Masonic bodies of Fort Wayne are the possessors of real estate, acquired by careful saving of their revenues, to undertake to convert that into cash would prove a failure. Therefore the Board of Trustees [what trustees? why of the association! Masons, every one of them so far as I am able to learn] have decided to make a distribution of it at their concert."

Further, "accordingly a committee from the board of trustees managing the affairs of the Masonic fraternity in Fort Wayne have found no trouble in maturing a grand plan."

John I. White one of the trustees of Fort Wayne Commandery of Knight Templars was president of the board; Jas. H. Simonson, one of the trustees of Home Lodge No. 342 A. F. & A. M., of Fort Wayne, was treasurer; and Wm. Lyne, one of the trustees of Bayless Lodge No. 359, was secretary; and yet "Fair Play" says that Freemasons as such had nothing to do with that concert. O truth, thou art a rarer jewel than consistency!—especially with "Fair Play."

"Fair Play," tries to justify the proceedings at the Masonic concert, but he knows that the people know there were deceptions practiced and Masons generally as well as other people denounced the thing as a swindle. The Daily News of Fort Wayne stated that the thing was very irregular. I ask my friend "Fair Play" to call on his brother Mason, Peter Kiser, and ask him how the sale of the tickets went; whether it went all right or not. I think Mr. K. is the man, if I am not mistaken, who sold five hundred tickets and found the thing was a cheat, and sent for all his parties to come to his store and get their money back. All the local papers made sport of the concert. And how about the drawing? Would "Fair Play" deign to say it was all right? How about the building catching fire? O, don't try to denounce people for tearing out their pulpit and erecting a platform to expose such a wicked institution as you are pleading for, "Fair Play." But you had better repent of your sins, you have gone so far now that it will take the prayers of almost a nation to save you. I have no doubt you were once upright and innocent but you have embraced an institution which is founded on error, falsehood and deception, and the result is you have partaken of the nature of the thing. If you have anything bad to say about a Christian minister after this, go to him. If you want to slander him by inventing lies and slanderous reports, sign your name to your stories so we won't have to take the pains to go to the office to ascertain who you are. While I love you as a sinner and pray for your forgiveness, I hate your sins with a perfect hatred. I say of Masonry,

I loathe you with my bosom;
I scorn you with mine eye;
I'll taunt you with my latest breath,
And fight you till I die!

Our Mail.

J. Coomler, Lincolnville, Ind., writes:

"I am seventy-two years old. I have been an Anti-mason since the Morgan murder. I shall live and die one."

J. L. Eddins, Alexandria, O, writes:

"An Odd-fellow here said if he had what he had psid to the lodge it might go to ruin for all of him; it was a fraud and he intended to leave the order. He said what Mr. Stoddard said about Odd-fellowship was true. I think Bro. Stoddard did a great deal of good here. I am doing all I can for a reform."

C. P. Miller, Sycamore, Ill., writes:

"I am just home from Kansas and Nebraska. Had a pleasant trip."

George Sovereign, Kishwaukee, Ill., writes:

"It would seem to me that this was the last time I should request the renewal of my paper, the Cynosure, the paper that interests my mind more than any other I read. The reason of this remark is that the numerous changes of weather has wrought so hard on my old frame that some more such will probably end my earthly existence. Be it so if it is God's will.

* * Our part of the State is something peculiar. We are not, properly speaking, fr ge-ridden. A great many are in sentiment opposed to Freemasonry. A great many more are mixed up with the secret societies, and think it the most prudent way not to oppose. Take a case I asked a gentleman which he would choose for office or the pulpit, Freemasons or others. Not a bit of difference; he would just as soon have one as the other. I then told him of a Freemason buying a flock of sheep, and utterly refusing to pay as he had agreed for them, and that no bill was found against the man by a grand jury of Freemasons, although a clear case of fraud.

'Yes,' he replied, 'I always knew that they would take each other's part.'

When I compared this acknowledgment with what he had just said, that he would not make any difference between them and others, he was entirely silent. So it is. There is not spirit enough to get up a war against this image of the beast."

J. M. Allen, St. Edward, Neb., writes:

"I hardly know how I can live without the Cynosure. It brings comfort and consolation every week. Those supplements and tracts I received last summer I have scattered broadcast. The M sons here were eager to get hold of them, for what reason I know not. I would be pleased if I could get two or three more supplements as there are men here who want to see them. The wives of Masons are also anxious to see those pictures that expose the hideous performance their husbands pass through."

A. B. Lipp, Martinstown, Mo., writes:

"I hope you will hear from others how, by the grace of God, I have been stirring the old battle-axe in this part, as it never has been done before. I have, during the last two weeks spoke to larger and more attentive crowds than even the friends expected. I spoke about eight hours during the time. I have been encouraged to hear more confessions from both Masons and Odd-fellows. May the Lord give more power to the work of reform. Yours for the war."

Geo. H Stiles, 38 Oakland St., Brooklyn. N. Y., writes:

"There are so many lodges of all kinds here the people seem to think them all right. I hope the time may come when they will be shown up here in the true light. I wish Mr. Ronayne could pay us a visit and throw a little of his light on Masonry. I know he could do a good work here."

J. S Baldwin, Pitcher, N. Y., writes:

"I think the Cynosure grows better and better, and my hope and prayer is that the principles of this reform will continue to spread and finally triumph over these works of darkness."

Rev. Jno. M. Snodgrass, Hickory Grove, Ia., writes:

"I have from the first been your friend, and hope presently to do something for our cause—organize some points, and plead some for the cause, get some names for the Cynosure, etc"

W. R. Morley, Brush Creek, Fayette Co., Ia., writes:

"The Methodist Episcopal society have built a fine church and have gained considerably in numbers since last spring in Brush Creek. There is a lodge of forty Freemasons besides some outsiders who do not attend the lodge. Some of them have taken only one degree and are evidently ashamed of that, but their mouths are closed. The United Brethren have built a neat brick church and I think have good subscriptions not due yet to pay all arrearages. They have gained considerably in numbers since last spring."

Israel Gable, Stewardstown, Pa., writes:

"There are plenty of men and women who are in principle opposed to Masonry and other secret societies. If the Lord would only favor us with good lecturers; lectures are needed to convince the people here. I have the promise of a man by the name of Sterns, who is a preacher and a temperance man, belonging to the United Brethren church, to come and lecture in Stewardstown soon. I walked four miles to hear him lecture on secrecy. It was his first effort on that subject. I think he did exceedingly well for the first time, and hope he will enter the field as a regular lecturer against secretism. He seems to have been a life-long opposer of secretism, and suffered a good deal at the hands of Masons and other secretists."

George M. Freese, Washington, Ill., writes:

"The 'apron tribe' seem to be firmly fixed against our reform, and especially against the Cynosure and our lecturers. Bro. H H. Hyman lectured one evening in our church (U B.). After the service a Mason told me that 'all that old man said were lies.' At another time he said, 'His lecture made more Masons.' Take the opposite of the Mason's statements as referred to, and we have the facts. I know of at least two young men who heard that lecture who now are strong anti secrecy men, convinced and settled. That lecture with his whitened head and reverential movements made lasting impressions. We wish he would come again."

Chas. N. White, Ionia, Mich., writes:

"My desire is to glorify God in spreading the light in dark places More light and more of the spirit of Christ is what our churches need."

Rev. C Powers, Brookline, Green Co., Mo., writes:

"I am persuaded that anti-secrecy is a needed reform as truly as anti-slavery was twenty years ago. And I am resolved to do what I can for the cause."

G. P. Loomis, Birmingham, Ia., writes:

"Please send me three copies of the sermon on Odd fellowship and other secret societies, by Rev. J. Sarver. I think the friends of reform ought to read and distribute this sermon. It strikes death blows to the principle of secrecy. The books and tracts that I send for, I try to keep going among those who will read them. I think a little money spent in this way may do much good."

C. W. Loney, Fennimore, Wis., writes:

"I do not wish to miss a single number of the Cynosure. I expect to be a subscriber as long as I live, if secret societies exist that long. I am here almost alone on the subject of secret societies, surrounded with Masons, Odd-fellows, grangers, Good (bad) Templars, Mendotas, Red Ribbons."

S. W. Elliott, North Rome, Pa., writes:

"We live in one of the hardest places to make any impression on the subject of secrecy. Cannot even get a congregation to hear an Anti-mason preach. I am an old man seventy-eight years old."

John Collins, Hicksville O., writes:

"I want to oppose what God opposes, and I think if God abhors one sin above another, the doings of secret clans are most abhorred by him, and he will overthrow them in his own good time and pleasure."

Wilson Stewart, New Concord, O., writes of Anti-masonic meetings recently held in that place:

"Our meetings were a grand success. My wish is that every neighborhood could have the same privilege that we had of light on the Masonic question."

J. S. Shock, Leesburg, Ind., writes:

"Your paper has the right ring on the subject of secret societies. Long may it live to oppose, resist and withstand their idolatrous worship, corrupting influence, and professional hypocrisy. Again I say, long may it thus live.

"Permit me to say to the readers of your paper that lately a few things have occurred in our vicinity that show up the good (?) qualities of the Masonic fraternity:

"A few months ago an industrious young man, employed as a laborer in one of the saw mills of Kosciusko county, had a leg torn off by a pully in the mill. His employer brought a Masonic doctor to dress the leg, but he demanded a note of $200 before he would do so. The boy refused to execute the note and the doctor was so full of Masonic charity that he resumed his seat in his carriage and drove away, leaving the poor boy in his blood to be cared for by others

"To-day Bro. John Kimball, an Anti-mason, related a short but very pointed conversation between himself and a Mr. Mock, a Mason, at the conclusion of which Mr Mock said, 'You got Masonry for nothing (meaning from books) while I had to pay for it (of course in the lodge). This is a frank admission that we can learn Masonry correctly from the books we have access to."

LESSON XIX —May 11, 1879.—THE SAVIOUR S CALL.

SCRIPTURE.—Isaiah 55:1-11.

1 Ho, every one that thirsteth,
Come ye to the waters,
And he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat;
Yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price.
2 Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread?
And your labor for that which satisfieth not?
Hearken diligently unto me, and eat that which is good,
And let your soul delight itself in fatness.
3 Incline your ear and come unto me:
Hear, and your soul shall live;
And I will make an everlasting covenant with you,
Even the sure mercies of David.
4 Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people,
A leader and commander to the people.
5 Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not,
And nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee,
Because of the Lord thy God,
And for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee.
6 Seek ye the Lord while he may be found,
Call ye upon him while he is near:
7 Let the wicked forsake his way
And the unrighteous man his thoughts:
And let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him;
And to our God, for he will abundantly pardon
8 For my thoughts are not your thoughts,
Neither are are your ways my ways, saith the Lord.
9 For as the heavens are higher than the earth,
So are my ways higher than your ways,
And my thoughts than your thoughts
10 For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven,
And returneth not thither,
But watereth the earth,
And maketh it bring forth and bud,
That it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater:
11 So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth:
It shall not return unto me void,
But it shall accomplish that which I please,
And it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

DAILY HOME READINGS.

John 4. 7-15 ——Jer. 32:36 41.——Eph 2:11-22 ——Jer. 3 11 15.——Eccl. 5 1-7. Ps. 68 6 14; 119:97 104 ——Isa. 43:1-28; 44:1 28, 49 1 26; 51:1-23; 54:1-17; 55: 1 13, 62:1 12.

This chapter is closely connected in sense with the preceding chapter. It flows from the doctrines stated in chapter 53, and is designed to state what would follow from the coming of the Messiah. The most free and full invitations would be extended to all men to return to God, and to obtain his favor. The main idea of the chapter is, that the effect of the work of the Redeemer would be to lay the foundation for a universal invitation to men to come and be saved.—Barnes.

This chapter breathes forth the very soul of Gospel invitation. The sufferings of Christ (chap. 53), making atonement for sin, really provide this Gospel feast with its living waters, its wine, milk and bread of life, for the needy souls of men, while the joyful change that comes over Zion (chap. 54) breathes new life into her soul, and rouses all her energies to enlarge her tent room for new converts.—Peloubet.

[From International Quarterly.]

THE CONNECTION.—The time of this lesson was the same as the last, and the connection is close and clear. We had "The Coming Saviour," and "The Suffering Saviour," now we have "The Saviour's Call." 1. Who he was. "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." 2. What he did. "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." 3. The result. "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." Or, Jesus came, Jesus died; now "he that believeth hath everlasting life." God gave his Son; man rejected and crucified him, but this, instead of shutting the door of heaven, has opened it wide. In chapter 53 the promise was made to Christ of a reward, and. in chapter 55 he stands as the heavenly herald, and calls aloud to all. It is a universal call—none are exempt. It is a personal call—to you. It is a loving call—all are desired. It is a mighty call—he gives the power to obey. It is a blessed call—to a heavenly feast. It is an immediate call—come now. It is a solemn call—you will perish if you refuse. This is one of the "comes" of the Bible, and they have been compared to a chime of bells ringing from Genesis to Revelation, viz. 1. Come into the ark (Gen. 7:1). 2. Come and reason (Isa. 1:8). 3. Come and hear (55:3). 4. Come and rest (Mat. 11:28) 5. Come to the marriage (Mat. 22:4). 6. Come find grace (Heb. 4:16). 7. Come and inherit all things (25:34) And the whole chime is rung at the end, "Whosoever will, let him come" (Rev. 22:17).

[From S. S Union Advanced Lessons.]

POINTS FOR SPECIAL STUDY —1. The rains and the water supply of the East. 2 The food supply of the East. 3. The needs of the soul, corresponding to hunger and thirst. 4. Christ as the living water and the true bread. 5. How true religion satisfies all man's wants. 6. How to obtain that real satisfaction. 7. The effect of rain and snow. 8. Their analogy to the influence of God's word. 9. The Bible Readings.

INTRODUCTORY —There is no better help to the understanding of this lesson than the study of the Scripture references. With v. 1, read Eph. 2 8; with v 2, read Jer. 2 13; with v. 3 read Jer. 50:5; with v. 4, read Rev. 1.5; with v. 5, read Eph. 2: 13; with v. 6, read Mat. 7:7, 8; with v. 7, read 1 Tim. 1:15, 16; with v. 8, read Rom. 11:32, 33; with v. 9, read Ps. 103:11; with vs 10 11, read Mat. 24:35.

OUTLINE.—I. The call (vs. 1-3). The hot suns of the East make "thirst," a very strong and intelligible figure to denote the craving of the heart for satisfaction. Men need righteousness and peace. They seek in many ways, in vain. They are here called to a water and bread that will satisfy.

II. The person calling (vs. 4, 5). God is in Christ (2 Cor. 5:19), and the needy sinner comes to God through him.

III. The way of coming (vs. 6, 7). He is to be sought. There must be a real and earnest attempt to find Christ.

IV. Reasons for coming (vs. 7-11). God can be found, and he will show mercy and forgive. His word is never taken back.

PRACTICAL TEACHINGS.—1. How truly is Isaiah the evangelical prophet!

2. The gospel has been one and the same from the beginning.

3. Man's follies, errors, and needs were the same in Isaiah's time as now.

4 We cannot make too much of coming to God by Christ with the whole heart. Life depends on this.

5. The value of the divine word is inexpressible.

6. Men never thought out, invented the way of grace. Always men left to themselves are in one way or another on the doing plan, never on the believing plan.

7. How reasonable it is to trust God in Christ! We can defend the step by fitting pleas.

Build your nest on no tree here; for God hath sold the forest to Death, and every tree on which we would rest is ready to be cut down, to the end that we may flee, and mount up, and build upon the Rock.

Our Washington Letter.

"Suceessful" Masonry a Stubborn Foe—A Court room Illustrrtion—What is "Unsuccessful" Masonry—Its Political Phases—A Penpictnre of the office-seeking Freemason — Why successful — Congress—The Colored Exodus.

I was traveling a short time ago, and from a remark made by the party who occupied the seat with me, I judged he was a Mason, and I asked him if he was. He replied, yes. I turned the conversation to the work of the National Christian Association and asked him if he didn't think the days of successful Masonry were drawing to a close. "No, indeed," he replied. "We draw all their fire and never make any reply, so it don't hurt us."

"Well, but," said I, "I don't see how it can help but hurt you when they are exposing you to the public and any one can get for a few cents all your signs and secrets, and if necessary even pass himself off as a No. 1 Mason; and then, as you make no reply, the public can only draw one conclusion, and that is, that what they say is true." "No," says he, "experience shows that when an attacked party draws all the fire of the attacking side and maintains a rigid silence they are successful in the end, because their attacks must cease sometime, and the public will get tired of hearing the same arguments from the same side and will pay no attention to them, if we do not, by replying, furnish them with fresh ammunition."

Now let me show you the counterpart of this. Go into a criminal court room. You will see there a criminal arraigned for trial. He knows he is guilty. He has no witness to prove any thing for him, while he sees all the witnesses to his crime standing before him ready to be called to the stand against him. Now his only chance of escaping is to plead not guilty, or make no plea at all, as do our Masons, either of which forces the prosecution to make a clear case against him while he sits there ready to take advantage of any technicality in the proof. This is his strongest case. He can't plead guilty, for if he does that settles the case at once.

Just so it is with the Masons. They have no defense; they can't plead guilty. So they make no plea at all, trusting to luck that we shall not be able to instruct the people sufficiently well as to the designs and uses of their order but what there will be some little technicality of which they can take advantage. They do not rely upon their innocence; but upon our supposed want of ability to make a clear case against them.

I used the term successful Masonry in the above, and to make myself clearly understood by all, will have to explain. When people find that Masonry is unsuccessful, that is, that they cannot use it as a stepping stone in politics nor as a screen in the courts, within twenty-four hours by the clock, you will find all its vitality gone and every member of it ready and willing to attest its unworthiness in a country where all are guaranteed equal rights and privileges. Suppose, for instance, every candidate for office was made to say publicly whether he was a Mason or belonged to any other secret order, and when it was found that he did, public spirited citizens would say to him: "Well, as you have taken secret and horrible oaths which you regard, and by their terms are compelled to regard as more binding upon upon your conscience than your oath of office; and which you regard, and are compelled to regard more binding to your conscience than your fidelity to the community of which you are are a member; and more binding than your duty to your fellow men with whom you associate daily, and upon whose custom you and your family subsist, we cannot vote for you, or if elected, trust you.

Suppose the honest voters of the country would compel candidates to announce themselves in this way in public? Do you suppose for an instant that the halls of legislation and the ermine of our courts would be in the hands of men who ought, except for Masonry, to be wearing the stripes of the penitentiary?

Now I am not a Mason and never was one. My experience is that of a close observer, a lawyer, who, in endeavoring to account for the inequalities of the law, has sifted a number of cases and every time when there was any inequality or partiality shown, has found himself brought face to face with Masonry in its most hideous form; namely when it sends to the penitentiary a non-Mason committing a crime and screens a Mason, who was a participant in the same crime, from all its consequences.

Pardon me for saying it, but I think you gentlemen of the N. C. A. treat too gently the class of men you have to deal with. You have heard of the respectable farmer who discovered a boy up in his apple tree one fine morning, and endeavored to bring him down and to the stool of repentance by throwing grass at him, and how the boy in return applied his fingers to his nose in a very expressive way. And how the aforesaid respectable farmer went off and got some stones and after throwing a few of them how quickly the aforesaid boy "came to terms."

Now the class of Masons you have to deal with are crafty, cunning and merciless. They use the courts and the halls of legislation against their fellow men and citizens and care naught for the ruin and desolation they bring around them. They receive the custom of their neighbors and thrive upon it, and then deny those same neighbors the right to hold office, the right of justice in the court room. What do you suppose such men care about your hurling Scriptural quotations at them or merely calling the attention of persons to their individual depravity? No more than the boy did for the grass. But now suppose you throw a few stones. Suppose when a man of any prominence is accused of crime you employ some honest person to run his record down, see if he is a Mason and to what lodge he belongs. In what court he is to be tried and if the officers of this court are Masons, and notify the public to watch and see if the man thus accused is to escape simply on the ground that he is a Mason. This would cost some little money and time, but the result would be most gratifying, for it would arm the public against these secret societies and keep it constantly posted and it would not be long before the same public would be furnishing you with all the desired information instead of your having to hunt it up.

My experience teaches me that these secret societies, and Masonry in particular, because the strongest, are simply the depravity of the country organized against the rest of society and they have been so successful hitherto from two causes:

1st. Because the rest of society were loth to believe, and are yet, that men with whom they associated daily, in society, in business, were secretly organized to obtain for members of their own orders all the offices of the country and debauch the courts of justice in screening them from their crimes.

2nd. The greatest part of their success is to be attributed to the fact that before the organization of the National Christian Association there never was any organized effort made to inform and instruct the people as to the diabolical character of their societies. The scattering efforts to this end of a few gentlemen here and there over the country who from practical observation discovered the aims and purposes of these secret orders availed very little because they were organized with a view to perpetuate them, while the unorganized efforts of these gentlemen died with them, thus leaving the depravity victorious because organized. And from the Mason's reply to me, you can see that they yet expect "their organization" to carry them through.

Now I am neither so ignorant as to believe that there are no good men among the Masons (in fact if it were not for the few well known good men among them the people would be gunning for them), nor so bigoted as to deny them their rights under the laws, for a Mason is a man for all that, but I can see very well how necessary it is for me or for others to be protected from men to whom we grant all the rights and privileges of freemen, while they deny us both the right to hold office, the heritage of every one born in this country, and justice in the court room.

Both the Senate and House of Representatives are now ready for business, and although there is a determined effort on the part of a few to prevent both houses from entertaining business of a general character, it is freely expressed now that they will be compelled to go on with the business of the country.

The National Academy of Sciences is now in session in this city and the large number of learned essays read on important scientific subjects has attracted wide-spread attention. Indeed it has been more than usually attractive to me from one cause, and that is that it is the only thing I ever saw in this city that didn't seem to be run in the interest of secret societies.

An item of universal conversation just now is the exodus of the colored people from the South. The cause of it seems to be now reduced to a political and charitable association thoroughly organized to effect the object, namely to get them homes where they would be free from persecution, and where their votes would count. This latter part is very speculative, because they may or may not vote a certain ticket, but one thing is almost certain that their going in such bodies into any section of country is likely to overstock the labor market in that section and a corresponding number of white laborers thrown out of employment, and these latter will be very apt to vote the other way.

One feeling very generally expressed here is the hope that the association moving these poor people will be properly conducted and not made a swindle upon them as have many other organizations.

Our whole community was shocked yesterday by a fearful outrage perpetrated the night before in this vicinity upon a married lady, Mrs. Thomas, by a colored man named Carroll. He was arrested yesterday and his identity established beyond a doubt, by pieces of his clothing torn from him in the struggle and left upon the premises. He was turned over to the Maryland authorities and on his arrival in the neighborhood where the crime was committed, last evening, was taken by the infuriated citizens and hanged.

Sometimes mothers think it is hard to be shut up at home with the care of little children. But she that takes care of little children takes care of great eternities. She that takes care of a little child takes care of an empire that knows no bounds and no dimensions.

Regard hypocrisy as the most odious sin in the sight of God and men. To have no holiness is bad enough; but to pretend it when we have it not, is double impiety.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1879

NEBRASKA.—This week between the time of going to press and the reading of this paper in the homes of our friends, another name will be added, God willing, to the roll of States organized to put down the lodge. The meeting at York, Nebraska, will be duly reported by participants. Bro. Stoddard started for the convention on Saturday expecting to spend the Sabbath either in Morrison, Ill., or Clarence, Iowa. From the latter point he expected the company of Elder Rathbun, who has been engaged by the Nebraska brethren to give a public exposition, in which work he is proving skillful and successful. Bro. Stoddard returns in about a fortnight. With Elders Snyder of the Wesleyans and Spooner of the United Brethren to pilot it this convention will do a great work for reform in Nebraska, and set on foot reformatory enterprises far-reaching in result and blessing all the new communities of the State.

A NEW NAME.—Marco Polo in his sketches of travel says that the word "Jadughar," "a conjuring house," had come to be the common name given to Freemasons' lodges in India in his day. The worshipers of Vishnu and Brahm were right. We cannot do better than adopt it.

THE "LAW" VS. SECRETISM.

An influential minister in the United Brethren denomination, writes us that the conferences in his section of the country are opposed to the lodge and also to the anti-secrecy law; and he thinks that, in the coming General Conference, May, 1881, "The law will be expunged, and then will come the death of the lodge." I cannot coincide with this respected brother's judgment, nor share his hopes. I am certain that the day in which the "law is expunged," will seal the doom of that denomination to a long and trying struggle.

He says the objection to the law is that while it grants a trial to the vilest offences, as theft, lying, etc., it denies a trial to a member of a lodge. But this excellent brother is mistaken. Thieves and liars have no trial "if they plead guilty," and those who join lodges plead guilty and justify the act. The only use of a trial is to find the fact charged. And if there is any doubt about the fact of lodge-membership a trial is expressly provided for "in the manner set forth in sections 19 and 20 of our Discipline." These are the words of the law, which also instructs pastors to labor "to reclaim all who may have joined any such orders." (Sec. 6.)

Now I have been accustomed to consider Christ as the only Lawgiver, and the Bible as the only law of his church; and to regard "all church power" as "ministerial and declarative." If the case was to come up as an original question, therefore, I should prefer the word "testimony" to "law," and to expel Freemasons because they adhere to the lodge against the Word of God, which commands to disfellowship them (Eph. 5: 11), and declares the wrath and curse of God on all strange worships, throughout the inspired Canon.

But it comes to the same thing in practice. The man who worships at a strange altar, or who offers a strange worship, partakes of "the cup" and "table of devils." (1 Cor. 10:21.) And though I think offenders should be cut off in God's name, and not in the name of the church; by the Bible and not by church law, it is certain that incorrigible offenders should be cut off; and the only difference is whether we solemnly declare that God abhors and the Bible condemns and casts out such worshipers, or whether, in the name of Christ, we pass a law to exclude them.

Brethren seem to me to misapprehend this case. It requires no trial. Trial is to find facts, "that in the mouth of two or three witnesses" the facts may be established. But if, as in Sparta, a party declared stealing lawful and honorable, and gloried in it, as Masons do their lodge-memberships, no trial for those thieves would be needed. They try and convict themselves, plead guilty to the charge, but deny criminality. The only thing the church has to do with such offenders is to "withdraw" from them, by reason of their disorderly walk. True, they must be labored with, loved, entreated, and if possible reclaimed. This the law provides for. But to demand a formal trial while confessing the fact charged, and glorying in it, is impertinent and shamelessly wicked. The only object in demanding a trial while pleading guilty to the fact, must be to take advantage of the Masonic sentiment of the country, weaken the church, break down discipline, and strengthen the lodge influence in the church; and the man who does this is either a corrupt man and a hypocrite; or, if a Christian he is deplorably backslidden and unfit to go to the communion table anywhere.

This case is aggravated by the known and conceded fact that from Otterbien to Edwards, the church has held secret societies in abhorence as against the Bible, God, and goodness. And for men to "come in unawares" and seek to turn the church into something else, by tolerating in it the worship of the devil along with the worship of Christ, is the work of traitors and not of Christians; and to profess to do this out of love to the church which they are seeking to throttle and fill with unclean worships, as did Solomon and Ahab, and Manasseh; is to stab the church with a ghastly smile of friendship, as Joab stabbed Abner; and betray it with a kiss as Judas did Christ. And those who cry out against that law as practical injustice, act like those Copperheads who denounced the meek and great-hearted Lincoln, because in a time time of open rebellion he suspended jury trial and habeas corpus. If I belonged to the Brethren church, while I might prefer some change in terms, I would stand by that law till the lodge falls or Christ should take me home.

SABBATH PROFANATION BY METHODIST AND CONGREGATIONAL PREACHERS.

From the Sycamore (Ill.) True Republican, April 19th:

"The Dixon Commandery of Knights Templar celebrated the resurrection of Christ last Sunday, by an appropriate ceremonial. Rev. and Sir Knight G. R. Vanhorne of the M. E. church preached an elegant discourse. Rockford Commandery also celebrated the event, the sermon being delivered by Rev. F. P. Woodbury of the Congregational church."

The Knight Templar of the Crusades, was, at his initiation, "made to understand that he was about to put off the old man and to be regenerated." (Mackey Lex. p. 252).

This impious order or degree was incorporated into the American Rite by Webb, in 1797. It contains the well known "filth libation" in which the candidate drinks wine from the upper portion of a human skull, and invokes a double damnation on his soul if he ever breaks any one of his Masonic obligations. (See Bernard, p. 182). Each Knight if regularly "passed and raised," has taken sixty nine oaths, commencing, "I promise and swear," and ending with "So help me God." Mr. Woodbury, who officiated for them at Rockford, was moderator of the Wheaton ex-parte council, and Rev. Mr. Grassie of Sycamore, is praised by the Masonic article in the Republican as an "intelligent Anti-Mason." What is to be the end of these abominations?

The original Knights Templar vowed "poverty, chastity and championship of the church." The vow was made "to Almighty God, the eternal Virgin Mary, mother of God and St. John the Baptist." Every one of which vows they notoriously violated by accumulating property, and practicing the most shameless vices and crimes. So vile did they become, that the order was suppressed as the enemy of mankind.

As a recognized Masonic degree or order their pretended devotion to Christ stamps the whole system with gross and glaring hypocrisy; for the religion of Masonry excludes Christ and would exclude Knight Templarism if its ceremonial was not a worship of Satan. Think of such a body of men usurping the churches on the Sabbath and shamming the worship of God in Christ!

—Elder Browne visited our office for a few moments last week. His work for the month is to be in Carroll and Jo Daveiss counties. He will go over a large portion of both before the hot weather sets in. As will be seen in the notices he has engaged Elder Rathbun to come across the river to work the degrees of Freemasonry at important points in northwestern Illinois.

—Philo Elzea has been lecturing through Illinois and Iowa on his was way to Nebraska, starting in December last. He has spoken fifty-one times in these States during that time and was on the 22nd ult. about to enter Nebraska. We have heard nothing of Bro. Elzea's work since he left Lostant and Tonica, Illinois. His lecture was well received by the friends in Lostant. From Tonica we received evidences from both sides of a different nature and did not propose to become a party to his disagreement by publishing Bro. Elzea's letter; though at the same time all the facts relating to work actually done appeared. This may explain to him and others the reason of the non-appearance of his letter on the Tonica church.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman, after a month's rest at home, starts for his New England work this week, much invigorated in health. His work will be for two or three months in Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine and Massachusetts. As a Christian brother and laborer in the reform we have yet to learn that Bro. Hinman has fallen in the esteem of any of the New England friends. Let the "Old Guard" of Vermont hail him and rouse the echoes of their Green Mountain valleys for reform as of old. That State has too good a history on the Anti-masonic question to suffer the thought of inaction at such a time as this.

—Awhile since the Tribune of this city had the following editorial comment:

"Another Democratic legislature in disgrace. The North Carolina papers describe the closing scenes in the legislature as disgraceful in every respect. A correspondent writes: 'Mr. Turner, from Orange, objected to legislation after twelve o'clock. The clock was turned back half an hour. Then Turner took his stand under the clock, and defied any person to turn it back again. He was ordered before the bar of the House. He threatened to kill the doorkeeper, who was ordered to arrest him, and dared the Speaker to come down and help to do it.' It is generally conceded that the legislature was incompetent to deal with State affairs, and a disgrace to the State."

Bad enough; but about the same time a lodge dance took place on a Saturday night in Chicago. Twelve o'clock came all too soon for the rioters, and one of them stopped the clock in the hall just before that hour, and with easy consciences these devotees of secretism and its follies danced on till morning.

Men Wanted.

Who can be relied upon because they are true to principle and loyal to Christ? One such man who has grit, grace and other qualifications for the position is wanted as a leader and field agent in each State in this Union, not supplied, to work in the anti-secrecy reform. The State anniversaries will soon be upon us and not one of these should be allowed to pass without putting a competent man in the field and providing for his support. To do this wisely there must be much previous prayer and conference, and it is time the friends were looking around for their man. You need a man of piety and of prayer. He must possess courage, ability and tact. Not every man who can succeed as a pastor or professional man is fitted for the position, but a man of ordinary talent who has a heart in the work need not fear to undertake it. Surely there are such men in every State, and they should be looked up, set to work and sustained. I want the name of every person interested, who is willing to enter the work or to aid in sustaining another who shall be placed in the front. I want to make out a list of men, women and ministers for each State before the fall campaign begins. Who will co-operate as the Lord shall open the way. I want to hear from every man and woman in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Maine, Rhode Island, etc., who is willing to be enrolled as a working member in the anti-lodge work. One cent for a postal card will cover the cost, and be worth a hundred times that amount to the cause. Don't omit or delay to write your name plainly with initials and postoffice address, county and State, and direct it to me at No. 221 West Madison street, Chicago, and it shall be placed on record for reference as required.

J. P. Stoddard, Sec. N. C. A.

Future Greatness.

What is more noble than aspirations of a high and worthy character, for the success of pure principles in the generations yet to live on the earth. Such aspirations to be truly great necessarily develop themselves in noble and telling words and deeds. Every worthy person is in some sense a reformer. This will be true as long as the Golden Rule is violated, and as long as there is sufficient virtue to rebuke sin.

Let me most kindly suggest a closer union of all the moral forces. As the years pass, evil workers approximate more and more toward systematic plans for the overthrow of virtue. The whisky interests of Iowa have united. Their pledges for defence and aggression amount to more than two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The lodge interests have united, not in Iowa alone, but everywhere. Millions of money may be called into requisition at the option of the despotic Grand Master. What means the careful drill in the so-called higher degrees of Masonry, if a crisis be improbable? In a great battle between good and evil, wicked powers unite as certainly as did Pilate and Herod in the condemnation of Christ. Lodgism is systematic selfishness. It will call to its aid, in an extremity, if possible, all organized selfishness, communism, Catholicism, Mormonism, whiskyism and all other infidelisms in existence.

The conflict is truly between Christ and Satan. As to which will ultimately conquer, Christians have no doubts; but in joyous expectation of blessed triumph fight valiantly with weapons, not carnal, until called to their reward. We have suggested united and concentrated efforts to counteract evil. It will take united benevolence to counteract united selfishness.

Let me here make a plea for reform colleges. Western College, Iowa, is one of these now needing help in money and students. Men of money, lovers of truth, can you find a better place to invest the Lord's money? At this college we educate the head and heart to oppose clannishness and strengthen manly independence to defend truth As this college is, by its charter, to be a perpetual institution, and is pledged to maintain the doctrine Christ taught, "That no man can serve two masters," and "that he that doeth the truth cometh to the light," it opens a good place for men of wealth to invest their money. Does not true greatness appear in liberal provisions for the education of this and coming generations? Then let me hear from you in money, notes and bequests. Send your sons and daughters also, and write the Faculty or myself for information to Western College, Iowa.

M. S. Drury, Financial Agt.

Grafts.

The Relgious Telescope speaking with favor of the testimonies of the evangelist Pentecost and Hastings of Boston says: "Thus we see that the tendency of evangelical Christianity to-day is against the abominations of organized secrecy. When men who desire to preach the Gospel in its purity get free from the trammels of time-serving churches, they speak out on this question. The churches are the great bulwark of this evil, and we know not what fate is in store for those who tolerate it."

The Young Reformer, New Rumley, Ohio, has a stirring editorial on the case of the reception of an Oddfellow into full membership in the United Brethren church, after one of the bishops had refused to receive him until he reformed. It closes: "As regards the man thus received we have only to say, If such a man can be honest before God it is hard for us to see how. If we believe that the United Brethren church is owned by God, then we must believe that the member who deceives or in any way abuses the church, is held accountable to God for the same, and must make public confession to the church, or neither God or the church can forgive him. Besides, how can such a man feel at home in a church in which, according to the law of the church, he knows he certainly is not nor can be a member, and is in the way of that portion of the members who denounce secret orders and stand up to the law of the church? Also, how can loyal members recognize such a man as a brother, or what right have they to do so? If such a state of things is permitted to exist in our church then, as Rev. L. Davis said, 'we are surely on the eve of a most disgraceful rupture.'"

The National Reform Association makes its annual appeal once more, in connection with its approaching annual meeting, to the liberality of its friends and supporters. The progress of this movement during the past year, has been such as to gratify and encourage all who have labored in its behalf. Within that time, eleven separate conferences of the Wesleyan Methodist church, the large and influential Philadelphia conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, besides many presbyteries and synods of other bodies, have taken emphatic action in its support. The powerful address of Dr. A. A. Hodge on "Religion and the State," delivered both in Philadelphia and Pittsburg, and the paper of the late Prof. Taylor Lewis in the Princeton Review, on the same theme, the latter containing a powerful argument for the religious amendment of the Constitution, have strongly reinforced the cause. During no similar period has so much been done before in distributing the literature of the subject, or with such evidently beneficial results. This part of the work, moreover, is capable of immediate and almost unlimited expansion. The movement has already produced a great body of arguments and discussions of the highest order, which have been stereotyped and can be multiplied and disseminated at trifling cost. For five cents any four of our eight page tracts can be sent to one address, and one dollar may thus supply twenty influential public men with materials for a thorough examination of our national relation to God, to Christ and to his law. For this part of the work, especially, the appeal for the coming year is made. The friends of the cause are requested to forward their subscriptions to Samuel Agnew, Treasurer, 1126 Arch street, and, as far as possible, before the annual meeting on the 6th of May.—Christ. Statesman.

That any Christian can patronize an institution that, whilst laying claim to be religious, shuts out Christ, is the marvel of this enlightened age. What does the apostle Paul say? "Though an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than that we have preached, let him be accursed." This curse is repeated twice, and it is obvious that it rests on all who substitute Masonry in whole or in part for the spiritual Christianity which Paul preached, and which is so full of Christ that that one loved name is continually repeated in his epistles, of which in fact Christ is almost the only theme. —N. Y. Witness.

Home Circle.

Overruled.

The threads our hands in blindness spin
No self-determined plan weaves in;
The shuttle of the unseen powers
Works out a pattern not as ours.

Ah! small the choice of him who sings
What sound shall leave the smitten strings;
Fate holds and guides the hand of art;
The singer's is the servant's part.

The wind-harp chooses not the tone
That through its trembling threads is blown;
The patient organ cannot guess
What hand its passive keys shall press.

Through wish, resolve, and act, our will
Is moved by unseen forces still;
And no man measures in advance
His strength with untried circumstance.

As streams take hue from shade and sun,
As runs the life the song must run;
But, glad or sad, to his good end
God grant the varying notes may tend!

—J. G. Whittier.

A Word from the Mother of the Wesleys.

Our children were always put into a regular method of living, in such things as they were capable of from their birth. When turned a year old, they were taught to fear the rod and cry softly, by which means they escaped much correction, which they might otherwise have had, and that most odious noise, of the crying of children, was rarely ever heard in the house. As soon as they grew pretty strong, they were confined to three meals a day, and when they could handle a knife and fork they were set to our table. They were never suffered to choose their meat. Eating and drinking between meals were never allowed, unless in case of sickness, which seldom happened. They were so constantly used to eat and drink what was given to them, that when any of them were ill there was no difficulty in making them take the most unpleasant medicines, for they dare not refuse it.

To form the minds of children, the first thing to be done is to conquer their will. To inform the understanding is a work of time, and must, with children, proceed by slow degrees; but the subjecting the will is a thing that must be done at once, and the sooner the better; for by neglecting timely correction, they will contract a stubbornness and obstinacy which are hardly ever after conquered. In the esteem of the world they pass for kind and indulgent, whom I call cruel parents, who permit their children to get habits which they know must be afterward broken. When the will of a child is subdued, it reveres and stands in awe of its parents. I insist upon conquering the will of children betimes, because this is the only strong and rational foundation of a religious education, without which both precept and example will be ineffectual. But when this is done, then the child is capable of being governed by the reason and piety of its parents, till its own understanding comes to maturity, and the principles of religion have taken oot in the mind.

As self-will is the root of all sin and misery, so whatever cherishes this in children, insures their wretchedness and irreligion. Whatever checks and mortifies it, promotes their future happiness and piety. This is still more evident, if we further consider that religion is nothing else than doing the will of God, and not our own; that the one grand impediment to our temporal and eternal happiness being this self-will, no indulgence of it can be trivial, no denial unprofitable. Heaven or hell depends on this alone, so that the parent who studies to subdue it in his child, works together with God in the renewing and saving of a soul; the parent who indulges it, does the devil's work, and makes religion impracticable, salvation unattainable, and does all that in him lies to damn his child, soul and body, forever! Our children were taught the Lord's Prayer as soon as they could speak. They were early taught to distinguish the Sabbath from other days, and to be still at family prayers. They were quickly made to understand they should have nothing they cried for.

The Heathen God Baal.

That worship is due to a Supreme Being, seems to have been an impression with mankind from the beginning. Without a revelation from the "true God" it was impossible to "find him out unto perfection" by fallen men. The nearest approach of idolatry to an elevating view of him who claims all worship, was the substitute of the sun. Hence the idol Baal, Beel or Bel. This approach to deity was probably more extensively known, than even Christianity at the present time. Job said three thousand years ago, "If I beheld the sun (Baal) when it shined, or the moon (Astarte) walking in brightness, and my heart hath been secretly enticed, or my mouth hath kissed my hand, I should have denied the God that is above." Hence we learn the wisdom of the command, "Thou shalt not make to thyself the likeness of anything in heaven above," etc.

The name of the idol Baal was generally diffused over the earth. There are even still more than one thousand places and towns known by the term Baal, or compounded with it. Many persons bear evidence of this worship in the formation of their names: Hannibal, Asdrubal, etc., and even among the Israelites, Ethbal, Jerubbaal, etc.

The worship of Baal was introduced into Ireland by a colony of Phœnicians, or Milesians as they are sometimes called. It is now more than one thousand years since, and still there are relics of this idolatry to be found, especially in the south of Ireland. Rude pillars of from ten to fifteen feet in height, and about fifteen or twenty inches in diameter, are occasionally discovered. They are roughly shaped, with a round top, on which are sculptured something resembling the rays of the sun. These are called by the Celtic nations, Clugh-na-grœin, or Stones of the Sun, and are left as we leave a tree stem on which the cattle clean their coats. These stones are generally on high grounds, thus answering to what are termed in Holy Writ, the high places of Baal or Moloch. The writer has seen one of those high places broken up. Owing to the ruggedness of the place, unfit for tillage, for hundreds of years. The upper crust was an accumulation of stones so light as to be carried in the hand from the fields around.

This upper heap, or cairn, was the result of Romanism. It was, and may be still a religious practice with them, to cast a stone and utter a prayer for the dead, where they supposed that a human being had been killed.

Hundreds of those cairns are still visible in Ireland. When the upper portion of the one mentioned above was removed, it was found to be formed underneath of charred or burned matter to many feet around, perhaps the remains of those sacrificed to Baal or Moloch. This may be inferred from the fact, that near the place was the usual "Clugh-na-grœin," or stone of the sun.

A careful examination of the earth for the moral changes it has undergone, as the geologist pursues his way in search of the natural, would discover to us the proofs of the horrible acts accompanying idolatry on the very surface we tread. Little does the head of the English State church suspect that her Balmoral (Baal murus) summer residence, was the seat of heathen worship in times past. Our females robe themselves in Balmoral tokens of the grossest and most bloody idolatry that ever disgraced this earth. Our beautiful city of Baltimore (Baal-stroid, or troid muir) or Baal of the long strand or stretch or street contracted into Bal-ti-more is but the name of an idolatrous locality transferred to America. That aged person who even now traverses our streets, whose titled family ancestors originated the settlement, knows but little of the idolatrous memorial it presents. If our friend society were aware that idol names were thus attached, they would avoid them as they do the names of the week days.

Blarney, situated about as far north as Baltimore is south of Cork, Ireland, is another of those idolatrous names which rears its head in the midst of Christianity. Bel-arnœs, or Baal of the small hill, gives rise to the saying, "They have licked the blarney stone." The smooth-tongued inhabitants of the south of Ireland have thus perpetuated the error of their worship and of their Phœnician origin.

The worship of Baal far exceeded in cruelty that offered to any other idol this world of sin ever exhibited. It was introduced by the Israelites from the Tyrians, etc. The prophet Micah says, "Shall I give my first-born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul," in reference to the bloody rites that covered the land. It was this practice above all else, that induced the Almighty to drive them off their land. "Blood toucheth blood," he says. As a nation, we ought to fear his judgments when we recollect that this is applicable to the many thousands of embryo and infantile murders of this land. Moloch, if not in name yet in fact, receives its sacrifices until "blood here also touches blood."—Episcopal Methodist.

The Worship of Giving.

We are afraid that "the worship of giving" is not kept prominently before the people. The old bugbear of the "contribution box" occasionally starts up, as if Christ's church was a humble seeker of alms, where people give as to some poor beggar who merely entreated as a favor what he has no right to receive. Giving out of a free heart to God's cause is his appointed method of carrying forward and sustaining the Gospel. "Freely ye have received, freely give." "I never gave to Christ's cause since I was a little girl, but that he always made it up to me within six months," said an old lady to me. "The offertory," we don't exactly like the word, but it is better than contribution, should be one of the most sacred acts of religious homage. We have heard of an Episcopal namesake of ours who had the collection plates all brought and placed on the communion table, and then asked all those persons who had contributed, and none other, to stand up while he returned thanks to God for what had been given. We believe all the people used to stand up.—The Occident.

A lady who was suddenly stricken with a failing of the optic nerve, and was told that she could not retain her sight more than a few days at most, and was liable to be deprived of it any moment, quietly made such arrangements as would occur to any one about to commence so dark a journey of life, and she had her two children attired in their brightest costumes, brought before her, and so, with their little faces lifted to hers, and tears gathering for the great misfortune that they hardly realized, the light faded out of the mother's eyes. This is indeed a sad case, but there is a blindness happening unto a great many persons that is far more sad. Peter says he that lacketh knowledge, temperance, patience, godlinesss, brotherly kindness and charity is blind. That is, he cannot see the the nature and requirements of the Gospel, and as a result is not permitted to see the glory of the Father and realize the joys which the natural eye hath not seen. For this blindness there is a remedy but it can only be had by applying to Jesus the great physician.

Childrens' Corner.

They Didn't Think.

Once a trap was baited
With a piece of cheese;
It tickled so a little mouse,
It almost made him sneeze.
An old rat said, "There's danger;
Be careful where you go!"
"Nonsense!" said the other;
"I don't think that you know."
So he walked in boldly—
Nobody in sight;
First he took a nibble,
Then he took a bite.
Close the trap together
Snapped as quick as wink,
Catching "mousey" fast there,
'Cause he didn't think!

Once a little turkey,
Fond of her own way,
Wouldn't ask the old ones
Where to go or stray.
She said, "I'm not a baby:
Here I am half grown;
Surely I am big enough
To run about alone?"
Off she went; but Mister Fox,
Hiding, saw her pass;
Soon, like snow, her feathers
Covered all the grass,
So she was a supper
Ere the sun did sink,
'Cause she was so headstrong
That she wouldn't think!

Once there was a robin
Lived outside the door,
Who wanted to go inside,
And hop upon the floor.
"O no!" said the mother;
"You must stay here with me;
Little birds are safest
Sitting in a tree."
"I don't care," said Robin,
And gave his tail a fling;
"I don't think the old folks
Know quite everything"
Down he flew, and Kitty seized him
'Fore he'd time to blink;
"O!" he cried, "I'm sorry,
But I didn't think!"

Now, my little children,
You who read this song,
Don't you see what trouble
Comes of thinking wrong?
And can't you take a warning
From their dreadful fate,
Who began their thinking
When it was too late?
Don't think there's always safety
Where no danger shows;
Don't suppose you know more
Than anybody knows
But when you're warned of ruin,
Pause upon the brink,
And don't go over headlong,
'Cause you didn't think!

"God Can't Wait."

A bright little four-year-old boy in the family of a friend, was feeling tired as the day drew to a close, and came to his mother that he might say his evening prayer before going to bed.

"Wait a little while, Ernie," said his mother, "I am busy writing a letter. When that is done you may say your prayer."

The little fellow waited a minute or two very patiently, and then coming back to his mother, said, "Mamma, don't you think prayer is more precious than writing letters? God can't wait."

Ernie's mother quietly laid aside her letter at the gentle rebuke, and the evening prayer took its right place first.—Ex.

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued.)

I was delighted to do that, and as well as I could speak, told her we must have a light, and I would run to the kitchen and bring one, together with a large umbrella. Soon returning, we went into the court, the kind young lady holding my hand. First I showed her the rabbit that had brought about everything by running into the hole. Sam found it the next day out in the court and afterwards said he should keep it as long as he lived; he wouldn't allow it to be killed on any account, as it had done such a service. When we came to the dungeon, Miss Barlow looked down into it greatly frightened at its darkness.

"Oh Gatty!" she said, "how could you go into this horrid place by yourself? If I am to come into it, you must please lead the way, little woman, with your lantern." So I went in before her, very slowly, holding up the light that she might see each step.

"Let me have hold of your hand Gatty," she exclaimed; "it will help to steady me at least."

And I gave it her, feeling very proud to be of so much use to such a lady.

"Oh, what a dreadful place!" she said in a low voice as we reached the bottom, and she stood staring round, still grasping my hand tightly in hers; "what could it have ever have been intended for in olden times, I wonder? some horrid cruelties I make no doubt; either to murder people in, or shut them up perhaps for life. Poor creatures! what an awful place to be confined even for an hour! but for years! Oh, let us get out of it, Gatty, I am beginning to feel so nervous!"

"There's another over the other side; please ma'am, wouldn't you like to see that too," I asked.

"See it? why my dear little woman, do you call this seeing?" she cried with a good-natured laugh. "I don't know what your practised eyes can do, but for my part I see nothing but darkness everywhere, but just for one foot's space round your lantern! Oh, I should like to have the whole place lit up brightly, to try and discover whether there mightn't be the remains of some writings on the wall that would throw a little light upon the original use it was put to—but come, Gatty, help me up these steep steps again, I long for the fresh air!" We were soon out, and Miss Barlow drew a deep breath of relief.

In the hall we found mother and the doctor standing together; he was speaking very earnestly to her, while mother held her apron up in her hands and often wiped her eyes.

Miss Barlow went to him, and putting her hand on his arm, said in a very anxious voice, "Is her case a hopeless one, doctor?"

"No, by no means," he answered quietly.

"Then, God willing, you think your skill can restore her again in health to her family?" She went on—"You know, doctor, how anxious I am—indeed, we all are, so you will excuse my questions."

"I see no reason at present," he said gravely, "why she should not recover under proper treatment. Strength of constitution is what, it appears to me, is principally needed; her health—her energies are so reduced, she can make no head against illness; but I think, and I have scarce any doubt, she will perfectly recover."

"You hear that, Gatty?" said the kind young lady, turning to me with her eyes full of tears, and such a bright happy look in her face. Oh how my heart beat with joy! but I could not say a word. "Everything the doctor orders for your daughter Elsie shall be sent from the Court to you, so make yourself quite easy on that point, Mrs. Millar," she added, going up to mother; "medicines and all, for they will perhaps be of an expensive kind."

"May God bless and reward you, madam," mother said in a low voice; "and he assuredly will do so"—she could not say any more, for her words became choked.

"And now we must leave you," the young lady said. "Good bye, Gatty"—coming to me and kissing my forehead—"in about a week I will come and see how Dr. Woodville's prescriptions succeed; I do not ask to see poor Elsie to-day, because she has already been much agitated; but the next time I shall, and then I will write a full account of everything to our kind doctor. "When do you think"—and she turned to him—"it may be possible for you to run down here and see your patient again?"

"Well, at present it's not in my power to say; but, I hope, before the end of the month," he said, as he stood with his two hands thrust into his coat pockets; stooping his head very much, and looking from one to the other of us with his sharp bright yet kind black eyes.

"Oh, I was forgetting," cried Miss Barlow, "you return by the three o'clock train; and if we don't run away at once, you will not have time to take any luncheon."

Upon which the doctor, wishing mother good morning, walked quickly out of the house; and the sweet young lady, again telling mother that anything required for Elsie should be sent from Barlow Court or from London for her, shook hands with me, and nodding with a sweet smile to mother, hurried after him; and then they both got into the carriage and drove away.

I stood at the door looking after them and curtysing humbly, as mother had taught us; and then Miss Barlow put her face out of the window and nodded to me once more. The carriage was soon out of sight, and I went back to the hall. Mother was sitting down and with her apron up to her eyes crying, I knew, for joy and gratitude. Just stopping to throw my arms round her and kiss her wet cheek, I turned and scampered up stairs to Elsie.

CHAPTER IX.

I saw a change had come over Elsie since last I was in her room, yes, a happy change, although the tears were filling her soft eyes; and her face was, oh, so white! all the whiter, I thought, because of a burning red spot in each cheek. I do not mean to say she did not look happy before, for she did; but it was that look which would have made me at once believe then, if any one had told me, angels often came down from heaven to talk with her about those joys "which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive of," and which would be her's in that world they had just come from. She still had the same sweet look; but with it there was something more now.

She held out her thin hand to me as I ran into the room, scarcely able to see for the water in my eyes or breathe because of the almost painful bumping of my heart; and when I put my hand into hers, she grasped it tightly as she had not done for—oh, such a long time. It seemed to say to me, "Oh, Gatty, my dear little Gatty! the merciful God has heard your prayers and will not part us yet awhile." Then she spoke: "Gatty, for the last year I had made up my mind I should never more leave this room till I was borne from it in my coffin. The Almighty knows I did not repine when I believed such to be his will. A sparrow does not fall from the housetop without his knowledge—the very hairs on our head are all numbered—I was certain, therefore, though so lowly—though nothing as I am, God did not overlook me; and that whatever was my lot, the disposing of it was in his all-wise hands; but now oh, Gatty! my darling, kind, little, careful, tender nurse, am I to be once more amongst you all in health and strength? That is what the doctor promises me! and I wonder—I can't help wondering—whether he is a messenger sent by our heavenly Father to comfort me by his words, and raise me up by his skill. Oh! my heart is brimming over with thoughts of those beloved ones who would welcome me amongst them again as if I were restored to them from the grave!"

CHAPTER X.

But now it is high time my story should come to an end. Elsie—through the mercy and will of the great God who from first to last, had been the anchor of her hope, the stay and support of her suffering body and sinking soul, and without whom she would have been of all creatures one of the most miserable—recovered. Again she was amongst us; at first, of course, weak and obliged to be very, very careful of herself. Poor father, when at home would watch her if she moved from her chair, or did anything, with as much fear as though she were made of spun glass—so she one day said to him—putting her arms round his neck and kissing him, as only Elsie did kiss him, with all the love, and gratitude, and holy joy of one who was, as it were, and as she said, restored to him from the edge of the grave. And she was with us on the next wedding day. Oh how glad we all were to see her sweet, bright, happy face looking on at the fun and sport around her, though as yet she could not join with the rest in their play.

Miss Barlow had come the week after as she promised, and saw and liked Elsie from that day. She often came—sometimes by herself, and sometimes the other young lady, her sister, came with her; and she always wrote and told the great doctor how Elsie was going on; and he too came twice more; and all his directions about her were strictly followed, every word of them. And the good, kind ladies at the Court sent lots of rich nice things to strengthen her—wines and all sorts of dainties; and got the medicines ordered by Dr. Woodville down from London, that they might be quite good, they said. And so Elsie became better every week; and the first day she was able to be carried down stairs, and laid on a kind of bed in the kitchen, Harry, and Sam, and Tom lit a great bonfire on the top of the hill, and while it was burning hurrahed several times as loudly as they could.

So many people who loved father and Elsie came to ask how she was, and to see her, that she was obliged to stay up in her bed-room evenings when they called—father feared she would be made too tired by their talking—and all who could brought her nice things to eat, and do her good; so there was no fear of her not getting strong, if good feeding could make so.

Before I quite finish, I must tell you what I forgot to say before. One of the young ladies told me all the robbers were of course found guilty and banished for life, or for a great many years, I forget which.

Sir Henry Barlow had a door with a strong lock put to the dungeon for father, and advised him to keep it always fastened up—which he did.

I must also add that the kindness of the Barlows did not end with what they did for Elsie. They asked leave to have me sent to a boarding school, where I remained for three years, coming home at holiday times. I have said more than enough about myself already, and only mention this to explain how I have been able to write this narrative. I would not now publish it, but that I think a knowledge of Elsie's character, of her patience in suffering, her constant trust in her heavenly Father, and her truly Christian spirit, may be of use to some young readers. Those weary weeks of waiting left an impression on me which I never wished to shake off; and years after, it was wonderful with what vividness every little incident remained in my mind. Elsie carried the blessing of her example wherever she went, but she would often refer to her long affliction with thankfulness, and delighted to trace the steps by which God had shown his care for us all.

THE END.

OBITUARY.

ABRAHAM SHOWALTER was born in Beaver county, Penn., March 24, 1806, and died near the town of Vermillion, Edgar county, Ill., March 24, 1879, aged 73 years.

Father Showalter was one of the first inhabitants of Vermillion, emigrating from Lawrenceburg, Ind., in the year 1856; was a successful business man, but this is not the portion of Father Showalter's life I wish to speak of at this time, however, success in business is a prime factor in the Christian character. He was a successful Christian and a member of the U. B. church.

As a father he succeeded in training his children, teaching them practical Christianity by precept and example. Whatever may be the future career of his children, certainly they will be frank to acknowledge that Father Showalter's ways were the ways of the Lord.

He succeeded in helping to bring about one great national reform (freedom of the slaves) and planted the seed in his own community for another. He was among the first, if not the very first, to lift the banner of the anti secrecy reform in this community. What the result will be time alone will reveal. He was one of the many constant subscribers for the Christian Cynosure. He succeeded in circulating much anti-secret literature.

He succeeded in living down the dreaded fears and pangs of death. He was fully ready for the great event when it approached him, and one of the most important lines that can be written in honor of his memory is, that he left a bright evidence of his acceptance with the Master. —P.

FROM THE SOUTHERN MISSION FIELD.

COLUMBUS, Miss., Apr. 1879.

PRESIDENT BLANCHARD,

Revered Father and Brother in Christ:—I hope you will excuse me for addressing you a few lines of Christian sympathy and encouragement in your arduous labors in the vineyard of the Lord. I know you have been a man of war; so was my venerated father. On his death bed away from home, he looked and longed to see you, but that meeting was postponed by an overruling Providence until you meet in your Father's house, after your battles are all fought and the victory won. We, his children, have been a united and happy band, endeavoring to follow our father's example in laboring for the colored race, but just before brother Paul Feemster visited us last, it seemed as if some of Job's storms were sent upon us. A colored man, a son of one and related to others of our church members, not only broke into the houses of four of our white families when at church, but also burnt one family out of house and home. This caused suspicions and many reports, some true and many false, and church trials that have not yet ended; although what Father Shedd says I know to be true. He, a Northern Congregational minister, whose labors and encouragements we rejoiced in for a season, said that our labors amongst the colored people would certainly be blessed, for he had been among them enough to know the truth of his assertion when he said that he knew our colored congregation was fifty per cent better than those of other places. This burning and the consequent difficulties alienated and almost discouraged our white laborers, with the exception of two families who continued to labor as before and who feel that they have not labored in vain. Brother Paul Feemster remarked in a letter recently that he had noticed a growing difference between the letters of those who had lost confidence in their mission and those who had not; that while one class seemed discouraged the other seemed enthusiastic over their work, and said their faith would affect their labors.

Right here I wish to say to you, dear brother, that the Lord stirred you and your people up to help Bro. Tapley, who had labored long and faithfully in teaching Sabbath schools and preaching to the colored people without any prospect of pecuniary aid. Also he has been and still is a constant laborer in the anti-secret society cause both among the white and colored, and his wife has assisted him in both. Your encouragement and assistance has not been in vain and the Lord is not unmindful of your labor of love. Bro. Tapley is going on still as he has time, regardless of all difficulties. The colored people of one of the churches that had recently by vote united with the Associated Churches of Christ and by their own secretary reported the same to the Cynosure, requested him Sabbath before last, to go and answer a Scotchman who by report was to preach in reply to a former address of Bro. Tapley's against secret societies. He therefore went to reply if it should prove true. The Scotchman preached, but did not refer to that subject. We do not know whether the report was unwarranted or not.

Last summer or spring, I do not remember which, Bro. Tapley and sister Martha, knowing that I believed that the Lord would "Lead me into the strong city," (Columbus) and give me a public colored school there, on learning the opposition of the board of city trustees and the board of aldermen, both pleading that the school they already had wholly under colored teachers was sufficient for that race, advised me to let them try if the A. M. A. would not again assist that place as they did not believe that the colored people there could otherwise obtain proper religious training. I did not forbid them to make the experiment but I still believed I would and I did succeed in the other way by the help of Providence. Those who opposed my request and that of the school which desired my services, were not re-elected and at the closing months of the year, after the danger of yellow fever was over I succeeded; and this year the county superintendent has promised me as many colored schools as I can teach this year, as he desires to have teachers for them that he can trust. Both my Caledonia and Columbus schools have petitioned for my services again.

I need no assistance, but thank you all very much indeed for your kindness to Bro. Tapley. He assisted me by coming to preach to my Sabbath school a few times, and had you seen the change his labors made in the people about behavior and seriousness at church you would have felt that your encouragement and assistance had not been misapplied. You cannot imagine the terrible ignorance and inefficiency of the colored minister I heard there; and Bro. Tapley has a talent for making them understand and to be interested in his teachings. I think that I am not mistaken in witnessing to you that the Spirit accompanied his labors, both there and other places that I was present.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

The Evangelical Repository, the sterling monthly review of the U. P. church, closes its 55th volume with the May number. At the same time it changes hands, Rev. W. W. Barr, D.D., the editor, and Geo. S. Ferguson, publisher, giving way to Rev. R. Stewart, D.D., late of the Theological Seminary at Newburg, N. Y.

—Wm. Getty, who has long filled the office of treasurer of the Foreign Missionary Society, being about to remove from Philadelphia to Kansas City, has resigned. Dr. J. B. Dales, former editor of the Christian Instructor, has been temporarily appointed.

—New missionaries are much needed in India and Egypt, but no one volunteers and the Mission Board is at a loss to interpret the lack of zeal for the conversion of the heathen.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—The young wife of Rev. A. B. Peters died at Vermillion, Ill., on the 18th of March, lamented by a large circle of friends among whom her Christian character will be long hallowed in memory.

—The anniversary exercises of the Union Biblical Seminary, Dayton, begin May 1st with examinations; trustees meeting May 6th; Bishops Weaver and Glossbrenner give addresses during the week.

—Rev. W. C. Sheperd of Woodland, Iowa, reports a remarkable case to the Telescope. At a protracted meeting near Smyrna, Clark county, sixteen were converted. The report says:

"We had the devil to fight under the head of secret societies; but thank God, we gained the victory over him. The most powerful man among them, Bro. John Carlton, their Most Worshipful Grand Master, joined our church and made the following remarks:

'Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, I feel as if God has something for me to say for the benefit of this church upon the subject of Masonry. Gentlemen of the Masonic order, I here renounce the order of Masonry, and do say, calling on God to witness, that Masonry is soul-damning in its nature. You men that are here to-night well know that you have bound yourselves to me as your most worshipful grand master, Christ not excepted; and I have come to the conclusion that where Christ cannot be called upon in prayer I will never go. I do here affirm that I never heard Christ's name mentioned in the order, and you Masons know that this is so. You all well know that I know whereof I speak. The reason that I renounce Masonry and join the United Brethren church is just this: My Bible tells me that "he that committeth sin is of the devil" (1 John 3: 8); and I know that I was a sinner, and did commit sin daily. Therefore I was of the devil. And I know that ministers of the Gospel have bowed to me as their worshipful master and I a child of the devil, according to the Bible. Professors have taken me by the hand and called me brother, and I a child of hell. How can Christians do this? There may be some Christians that belong to the Masonic order, but I do not think so. God only knows. I do not believe that a man can be a Christian and worship idols; and you know that Masons do this. I could talk here all night, and show the error of this order, but I will close by saying, Young men and boys, take my advice and shun this society of men; for there is no Christ there, and it never will help you to do good."

BAPTIST.

—The American and English Baptists are about to establish a theological school in Paris for the training of such of their young French members as desire to enter the ministry. Rev. Dr. E. C. Mitchell, of Chicago, has been chosen president of the enterprise, and among the councillors are Dr. M. B. Anderson of New York, and Charles H. Spurgeon of London. A building is already obtained suitable for a school which can be conducted at an expense of about $3,000 a year.

—It is proposed by B. F. Jacobs, the eminent Sunday-school worker of this city, to secure permanent quarters for the Tabernacle of which he is Superintendent. The plan is to lease the lot corner Wabash avenue and Harrison street, formerly the Methodist church corner, and put a suitable building thereon One proposal is to build a $4 000 house and another a $7 500 house. The Tabernacle services will in the meantime be conducted in the Wabash Avenue M. E. church.

WESLEYAN.

—Rev. W. S. May, conference evangelist, residing at Clarence, Iowa, has been engaged in revival work ever since the first of October last.

—Rev. H. W. Hampe, a minister of the Allegheny Conference, formerly of Linesville, Crawford county, has removed to Burlingame, Kansas. He preached for the United Presbyterian congregation in Sandy Lake, Pennsylvania, a couple of months ago in English, though he frequently preaches in his native German language.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—A correspondent of the Young Reformer, whom we suspect to be Bro. David Yant of Bolivar, O., writes:

"A deeply interesting meeting has been held in the Bolivar M. E. church by Rev. L. K. Warner, the pastor, resulting in the saving of souls, and the general quickening of professors. A number of the membership profess entire consecration, and the enjoyment of perfect love. Three leading members of the Odd-fellows' lodge embraced the doctrine of holiness and have withdrawn from the Baal worship of the lodge. Scriptural Christianity is death to the lodge. Praise God."

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. W. I. Phillips, late of College Springs, Iowa, has accepted the invitation of the church at Lindenwood, Ill., to begin the pastoral work with them.

—The church at Prospect Park, Ill., Rev. L. Taylor of Wheaton, acting pastor, was opened on Saturday evening for the Odd-fellows annual celebration.

—The Triennial Convention of the churches of the Northwest was held in connection with the Theological Seminary anniversary last week. This is the twenty-first anniversary, and ten young men graduated. The endowments of the institution amount to over $217,000. The Convention voted to raise an endowment by an additional $150,-000.

News of the Week.

—The sum of $1200 was raised one day last week on the Chicago Board of Trade for the emigrating negroes. All the express companies will send goods free.

—Last week while Edwin Booth, the celebrated actor, and brother of the assassin of Abraham Lincoln, was performing in McVicker's theater in this city, a young man in the audience fired twice at him, fortunately missing. It is believed the young fellow is insane.

—On Saturday the jury in the case of Stevens, the Chicago wife murderer, agreed on a verdict of manslaughter with fourteen years imprisonment. There is much indignation expressed at the lenity of the sentence. As the prisoner was being taken out of the court-room the mother of the murdered snapped a revolver within six inches of his head, but her handkerchief becoming entangled in the hammer of the weapon prevented its explosion.

—The floodgates were opened in the House last Monday and about 1,500 bills were introduced, relating to every subject with which Congress can possibly have anything to do.

—Senator Logan was challenged to fight by Lowe of Alabama last Friday.

—Mayor Stockton, of Wyandotte, Kansas, had a conference with the St. Louis colored relief board last week regarding the condition of the refugees from the South now at Wyandotte, and the sending of more of them to that point. He stated that the people of Wyandotte were already overburdened, and could do no more, and urged that whenever emigrants arrived here in future the Executive Committee of the Freedman's State Committee of Kansas be communicated with, and that refugees be sent to such point or points as may be designated by that committee. This suggestion was favorably considered, and a resolution adopted that hereafter the Relief Board here will be guided by the Kansas Committee as to the distribution of refugees.

—At the last day's session of the colored convention in New Orleans last week, Mr. Ruby read a resolution adopting the report and spoke at some length. He suggested organized and systematic emigration. He explained that the reason for turbulence in the convention was due to the presence of politicians, who interfered with the proceedings, and it was trusted that this fact would be appreciated. Colored men last year produced $35 000 000 in wealth, and now it is proposed to let the white man raise sugar, cotton and rice. It was an organized movement of colonists. A negro exodus means the loss of thirty five members of Congress, and the present Democratic majority.

—The first public school in Philadelphia for colored children, with colored teachers, was dedicated last week. The school is called Catto, in honor of a young colored teacher murdered in Philadelphia on the day when negroes first exercised the right to vote.

—The arrival in Manhattan, Kan., of a couple of hundred colored refugees has had the effect of setting the people to work providing for them. They are well sheltered and cared for and arrangements are being made to procure them work on farms and in families. A meeting of citizens was held and a committee appointed to solicit aid. Resolutions were also adopted to the effect that "we would be untrue to our former history and the dictates of humanity if we did not extend to them a cordial welcome, and pledge ourselves, as far as we are able, to relieve their distress and aid them in finding employment and homes."

—General John A. Dix died in New York on the 21st full of years and honors. The President issued an order requesting proper respect to the memory of a man who has held in civil and military life such high position with such integrity.

—At the execution of Richards at Minden, Kearney county, Neb., last week a crowd of $25,000 assembled from all the country around and tore down the high fence built to secure the privacy required by law. The execution proceeded in the midst of the crowd.

—The New York Herald prints a complete description of the results of Edison's latest researches and experiments on the subject of illumination by electricity, and says it begins to look as if the vast capital of the gas companies of all the cities of the world is to be annihilated by this new invention. The burning of coal gas vitiates the air of an apartment, whereas the electric light does not impair its purity. It has no other effect on the atmosphere of a room than that of heating it. The problem of expense having been completely solved, it is demonstrated that electric light can produced at a mere fraction of the cost of illuminating with gas.

—There was a great Catholic demonstration and display of sacred relics last week in Rome in honor of the Virgin Mary, as a protest against the alleged sacrilegious teachings of the Protestant minister, Dr. Bibeiti, who had posted handbills announcing a discourse entitled "Glory to God only." The pilgrimages to the three great basilicas of Santa Maria Maggiore, Saint John Lateran and Santa Croce in Gierusalemme, in response to the special invitation of the Cardinal Vicar, were very numerous and enthusiastic, embracing all classes of society. The demonstration is described as most imposing in its proportions and solemnity.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN EUROPE.

—The Post of Berlin declares that widespread conspiracy exists between Russian, French and German revolutionists, and suggests common defensive action

—Simultaneously with Solovieff's attempt on the Czar's life three policemen were shot in Kazan. Among the assassins was an educated girl, aged 17 years, and a nobleman.

—General Gourko, the newly appointed Governor-general of St. Petersburg, ordered all gun-makers to send lists of their stock to the city commandant, and sell only to persons presenting special authorization, under penalty of the confiscation of their stock and prohibition of trade. Private persons possessing arms can only retain them by special permission. Porters must be kept at the doors at all hours, day and night, to prevent the posting of placards and scattering explosives in the street.

—Dispatches from St. Petersburg dated the 25th ult. state that the military tribunal assembled to pass judgment on an officer of the army who fired at a gen d'arme who had been ordered to search the officer's house. Three students will be tried to-morrow for high treason. One house after another is searched at night, and every occupant whose passport is found irregular is arrested. The Russian Ambassador at Constantinople has asked permission to open all letters leaving for Russia.

—Monday's dispatches say that porters to guard the doors of houses and prevent the pasting of placards in St. Petersburg, as required by General Gourko's regulations, cannot be obtained because the Nihilists threaten all who undertake the service with death. General Gourko has apparently been removed from the dictatorship of St. Petersburg on account of impracticability of his orders, and a peasant has been arrested with a letter in his possession containing a detailed plan of attack upon the Winter Palace and the prison in which Solovieff is confined. Although the letter is probably a hoax, the entire garrison was called out. The Czarowitz has received anonymous letters warning him to go abroad. Murders continue to be reported.

—Dr. Wiede, of Zurich, Switzerland, editor of the Neue Gesellschaft, was arrested a few days ago in Milan on an accusation of engaging in the plot to assassinate the Queen of England, now traveling in Italy, and the King and Queen of Italy. His friends declare he is incapable of such design.

ANOTHER STORY OF LINCOLN.

While I was in Congress, during four years, I had frequent interviews with President Lincoln, and never, during all that time, did I hear him utter an unkind sentiment. I was told by Secretary Stanton that at the first cabinet meeting after the surrender, the question as to what should be done with the confederate leaders was under discussion. Some of the cabinet were for hanging, some for imprisonment, and so on. During the discussion the President sat at the end of the table with his legs twisted up, and said not a word. At last some one appealed to him for his views. The President's reply was: "Gentlemen, there has been blood enough spilled; not another drop shall be shed, if I can help it." Said Mr. Stanton, "This reply was like a thunderbolt thrown into the cabinet, and not a word of opposition was offered." A man who could use such language as that at such a time could truly subscribe himself, "With malice toward none and charity for all."—Green Clay Smith

Protection against Lightning.

Mr. Nahum Capen has contributed once more to the Boston Post a communication concerning lightning rods, received by him several years ago from Professor Henry, of the Smithsonian Institute, whom he believes to be the highest authority on this subject. Professor Henry makes suggestions as follows:

1. The rod should consist of round iron of about one inch in diameter; its parts, throughout the whole length, should be in perfect metallic continuity, by being secured together by coupling ferrules.

2. To secure it from rust, the rod should be coated with black paint, itself a good conductor.

3 It should terminate in a single platinum point.

4 The shorter and more direct the course of the rod to the earth the better; bendings should be rounded and not formed in acute angles.

5. It should be fastened to the building by iron eyes, and may be insulated from these by cylinders of glass (I don't, however, consider the latter of much importance).

6. The rod should be connected with the earth in the most perfect manner possible, and nothing is better for this purpose than to place it in metallic contact with the gas pipes, or better, the water pipes of the city. The connection may be made by a ribbon of copper or iron soldered to the end of the rod at one of its extremities, and wrapped around the pipe at the other. If a connection of this kind is impracticable the rod should be continued horizontally to the nearest well and then turned vertically downward until the end enters the water as deep as its lowest level. The horizontal part of the rod may be buried in a stratum of pounded charcoal and ashes. The rod should be placed, in preference, on the west side of the building. A rod of this kind may be put up by an ordinary blacksmith. The rod in question is in accordance with our latest knowledge of all the facts of electricity. Attempted improvements on it are worthless, and, as a general thing, are proposed by those who are but slightly acquainted with the subject.

Mr. Capen says: "He speaks only of iron rods, probably because least expensive. Rods of one third the size, made of copper and put up in the same way, would answer the same purpose," and he also makes some suggestions as follows: "When any building is struck by lightning, let all the phenomena following the event be particularly stated. The size and situation of the building, and how occupied and surrounded. If a house, what part. If a stable, how occupied. If protected by a rod, of whose make, how large in diameter, and of what metal, and how extended to the parts of the building, and how deeply set in the ground. The phenomena of electricity cannot be too carefully described, and if such descriptions are generally made to the press the public will soon acquire such practical information that would not only be useful to all, but do much to remove a common skepticism in respect to the importance of well-adjusted lightning rods."

We would amend the fifth direction of Prof. Henry. A better fastening is made of wood made like a letter A very much spread out and allow the rod to pass through a hole near the point, so as to keep the rod at least two inches from the building. The wood is a non-conductor, while the iron is not, and it has also the additional merit of being cheaper.—Inter ocean.

Our Allies against Insects.

I had a plant dreadfully infested with wood-lice, almost destroyed by them, and a toad located himself close by as its protector, and in order to be ready in an emergency, he made in the mold a hole all but deep enough to hide himself in, but not deep enough to prevent his having a thorough good view of the plant: and when a wood-louse, beetle, or anything of the kind appeared near him or the plant, out he came and pounced upon it—"You are mine!" This was wholly his work. I only watched him sometimes, greatly pleased at the success. Another time, as I was one day walking along a path in the garden, I saw a toad approaching; the pace was quick for a toad, but I soon saw what he was after. Just on before him was a beetle which I expected to see caught, but ere there was apparently time for them to meet, the beetle had disappeared, so quickly that my eye was not quick enough to see it taken, but no doubt it was in the toad's mouth, for I heard a click which told a tale of capture. Two other toads seem to have concerted between them how to act one evening so as to take a border regularly, and in order to do their work well it appeared to be arranged that one of them should go on the border and the other stay outside, having the box edging between them; and so they did their work of clearing, keeping just opposite the one to the other, though they could not see each other, and I was watching from the window above. I wish we could all act with good feeling toward such useful creatures. They do much good and no harm.—London Gardener's Chronicle.

A sick person can be sustained by this when nothing else can be taken: Make a strong cup of coffee, adding boiling milk as usual, only sweetening rather more; take an egg, beat yolk and white thoroughly together; boil the coffee, milk and sugar together, and pour it over the beaten egg in the cup you are going to serve it in. This is often used in hospital service.

"What is the usual definition of conscience?" asked a man of his pastor. "A man's rule for his neighbor's conduct is about the way it comes out practically," was the reply.

Butter can be kept in warm weather by setting it under a dish containing an unglazed earthenware crock inverted. Wrap a wet cloth around the covering vessel and place the whole where there is a draft of air.

There is a vast difference in the flavor of eggs. Hens fed on clear, sound grain and kept on a clear grass run, give much finer flavored eggs than hens that have access to stable and manure heaps, and eat all kinds of filthy food. Hens feeding on fish and onions flavor their eggs accordingly, the same as cows eating onions or cabbage, or drinking offensive water; imparts a bad taste to the milk and butter. The richer the food the higher the color of the eggs. Wheat and corn give eggs the best color, while feeding on buckwheat makes them colorless, rendering them unfit for some confectionery purposes.

LITERARY.

AN-AS TAR-TA; OR, A trip to Ould Nick's Land, is the title of a readable little book of eighty-two pages, opposed to secret societies, recently published at Washington, D. C., by Maurice Langhorne, No. 708 E St. The price, $1 00 per copy, seems high unless the binding is much superior to that of the copy we have. Still we hope the book may be extensively circulated. We may publish a more extended notice next week.

CHAMBERS'S CYCLOPEDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.—Volume 1 of the new and beautiful ACME edition of this excellent work, just received from the AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE, 55 Beekman street, New York, embraces the history of our literature from the earliest period to the time of Queen Elizabeth, with lives of all noted authors, and choice specimens from the writings of each. All who are interested in the higher class of literature will welcome this newly revised edition, with its clear tpye and handy form; and all who have been longing for the era of cheap and good books will be more than pleased with its wonderfully low price. The entire work in eight volumes, numbering nearly 3 500 pages, elegantly bound in cloth, gilt title, is offered to those who order this month for the price of $2.50. Specimen pages are sent free on request, or a sample volume, complete in itself, postpaid for 43 cents. The publishers sell only to subscribers direct, instead of giving to agents or dealers the usual 50 or 60 per cent. discount to sell for them, and this, with the fact that the actual cost of making books has decreased fully one-half within a few years, accounts in a measure for the remarkable low prices.

Topics of the Time.

The intentions of the Romish church in this country are understood from the reports just received that the Pope has resolved to complete the organization of hierachy in the United States and make a more intimate connection between it and Rome. The progress of papistic doctrines here have led to this important step. New bishops will therefore be appointed and the formidable Jesuits will be reinforced and re-organized. While popular attention is given to the colored race at the West, in Richmond, Virginia, the Romish bishop proposes to open his cathedral Sabbath evenings to display to the colored people the mass and other grand ceremonies. At the same time he will cause to be delivered before them lectures on the advantages of Romanism over Protestantism from his standpoint. Thus attracted by the display they will more easily fall into the net of the priests.

Chicago preachers recall few so large gatherings of their number as came together last week to consider the Sabbath question. Speeches were made and resolutions passed, and arrangements made for a united effort on the part of all citizens without respect to religious convictions. Those present realized that they had opened a war which might be a long one and want every man to enlist. It is a matter of great interest that a similar movement is springing up in other cities. Dayton, Ohio, is organizing in defense of the day of rest. Newark, N. J., has begun in earnest to enforce the law for Sabbath observance. Saloons, cigar stores and Sunday papers have to retire. In Springfield, Ohio, the Christian people have formed a law-and order association for the suppression of Sabbath desecration. The effort of the Chicago meeting is to secure simply a day of rest, a Sunday and not a Sabbath. They cannot therefore hope for that success from an appeal to a secular ordinance as might be gained from standing firmly by the law of God. But the movement is a noble one and will result in good to our city.

The Sailors' Union gave an exhibition of lodge tactics in this city last week. This secret order has demanded $2 00 per day for sailors' rates. The vessel owners could do nothing but lose money at such wages, and offered $1 50, with plenty of willing hands to take it. The strike has been for some weeks brewing, but at length came to a brutal assault upon an old man alone with his boat, and a day or two later, a vessel putting out into the lake was found scuttled and filling. Such methods of securing privileges promised by the lodge are not an unusual illustration of the character trained by secretism.

The President's veto of the army appropriation bill was a review at length of the reasons why the political additions to that bill should not pass. The argument had its effect and the Democratic caucus, which is supreme in Congress, was considering all the week how to disentangle the interests of the party and prevent further loss of prestige in the country. It is finally reported that the arrangement for this week is the passage of a bill relating to the use of troops in elections that the President cannot object to. This will be rushed through both houses before any other appropriation bills are passed. Should the majority abide by this programme the extra session may be able to conclude its labors in a week. The nation is becoming disgusted with the management in Congress, and no party could long endure under the unpopular tide now steadily rising.

The colored exodus is causing no one any serious alarm except the Southern planters from whose exaction and oppression they are fleeing. Conventions of these men are gathering to look over the ground together, and an arrangement has been made, it is said, to send from three to five hundred Chinamen from California on a day's notice. There is, however, another movement of settlers of not so peaceful a character. Two or three railroads have been built through the Indian Territory within a few years. They naturally want more business, and propose to add another Black Hills seizure to our crimes against the Indian. A few unscrupulous agents were ready to do the business, and have collected large companies in southern Kansas, which are perhaps already pouring across the line and seizing upon whatever land they can find. The Cabinet at Washington has had a consultation and the President issued a proclamation on the 26th ult. against the squatters. Threats of the army do not stop the movement. Its participants know how every such encroachment on Indian rights has resulted, and are made bold in their crime. We shall see whether our present executive will manage this case more successfully than his predecessor did the Black Hills seizure.

The condition of Russia does not improve; and how this battle between the despotism of an autocrat and the despotism of a secret lodge will end no one dares predict. Private letters from different parts of Russia furnish accounts which are said to be almost incredible. A London telegram says that the terror which exists is extreme. The members of secret associations, so far as can be ascertained, have no control over the general head, but exist independently of each other. Each distrusts the other, and many of them have proved traitors. In all these cases, however, treachry has been followed by the punishment of death. One of the letters states that several members of associations have also been giving information to the police, and have been secretly sent to London, but that the vengeance of their comrades will follow them there.

The general situation of the South as seen by Mr. Edward Atkinson of Boston, a political economist of some note, is not hopeless, though desperate. After an extended journey through several of the Southern States he says: "The South has sent to Washington men who think they are still representative men, but they are only the galvanized corpses of the dead past, and they are hanging themselves with their own ropes and digging their own graves. The new wealth that is accumulating in new hands, the new education that is pervading the land, the new industry that is building up States, will soon assert their power. What a sublime absurdity for Virginia to contend against common schools and yet assume to control the nation even in a minute degree. The representative of a party that opposes common schools may well ponder the saying of the negro in Columbia, S C., who said to me 'that it was useless to put ignorance over intelligence and expect it to stay.'" If it be true that the revolutionary forces so long prevailing in the South are disintegrating its political power there is surely hope that there may be the resurrection of a new life in harmony with the better and more progressive ideas held by a majority of the nation.

—Bro. Williams of Warren, Ill., writes that Elder Browne is doing a good work in that vicinity, and the agent's monthly report shows that the work does not lag with him. Let northwestern Illinois respond nobly to the invitation extended, and greet Elders Browne and Rathbun with good cheer and crowded houses.

—There are now thirty-five colored students in the theological department at Harvard University in training for the ministry. They represent five different denominations.

Assassination in Politics.

According to the New York Tribune, more than thirty attempts have been made on the lives of kings and rulers during the last thirty years. The Tribune gives names and dates, so that there can be no doubt about the facts. All these attempts, or almost all, have been made by Freemasons, or instigated by them. We use the term Freemasons in its generic sense implying every body who has bound himself to a secret organization. Among these assassinations is included that of our own President Lincoln, whose assassin, Booth, is said to have stood high in the Masonic lodge.

What was the object of these attempts upon the lives of men whose chief offence consisted in being the regularly constituted heads of the people? The object was a political one: It was to make way with rulers established by the people, and put others in their places who would represent the Masonic lodge. It was for the purpose of furthering those vague schemes that are framed and fashioned, like those of bandits and robbers, in secret and in the dark, being too criminal to bear the light. It is pretty evident what the idea of Booth was in his assassination of President Lincoln. It was, by a coup de theatre, by a sudden surprise, to give a complete turn to the tables, theater fashion; wrest the victory from the government, and turn it over to the rebels. Of course the idea was preposterous and impracticable as it was criminally vile (and nothing could be viler); but such, precisely, are the ideas nurtured by secret organizations. The very fact of men meeting and concerting together in secret and in the dark, gives a criminal direction to their thoughts and feelings. A man thus trained, and habituated to believe the falsehood that Freemasonry is honorable, charitable, pious, etc, needs but the added stimulus of play-acting and rum-drinking to lead him to commit any crime however abominable.

Freemasonry was invented about one hundred and sixty years ago, apparently by a set of grog-shop, infidel politicians, as an engine for defeating Jesuitry. Previous to that time the attempts on the lives of rulers were usually made in the interest of the Romish religion, either by Jesuits or at their instigation. But now, Freemasonry has so far gained the ascendancy, that it is no longer the Jesuit who strikes at kings for the glory of God, but it is your Freemason who strikes at them for the glory of the people. It is not now in the name of religion that men commit assassination; but it is in the name of politics, in the name of fraternity and equality. A man, by being king, president, or ruler, sins against fraternity and equality, and ought therefore, according to the ideas of Freemasons, to forfeit his life. The assassin who kills him is deemed worthy of immortal glory, or, in the phraseology of the craft, is to have "a place amidst the pantheon of gods."

We Anti-masons have always contended that Freemasonry is a revolt from Christianity, and a deliberate return to paganism. The Masonic books teach pagan ideas and practices, slyly inculcating them under specious terms and lofty pretensions. There could not be a better education for making assassins, and the tools of assassins, out of ignorant, vicious men. It is calculated to undo the teachings of Christianity, which would make saints, martyrs, and philosophers of men, who could not murder for hardly any purpose whatever, and make pagan Brutuses of them in every thing except the deep enthusiastic patriotism and the elevated character of Brutus.

What did the poor, blind, pagan Brutus gain by assassinating his friend Cæsar? Nothing whatever. His base deed done, like that of Freemasons, under the loftiest pretences, only served to confirm men's minds in the need of a dictator, and reconcile them to the dictation of the most extraordinary succession of brutal despots that ever disgraced humanity. The very acts of Freemasons themselves, are the strongest arguments in favor of those kings and emperors whom Freemasons assassinate. People would prefer to be under the control of one single despot, rather than under that of a den of secret assassins.

It is not necessary that the assassin should himself be a Freemason; for wherever Masonry prevails, assassins can always be found to do its work. The man who struck down President Lincoln did an act which he doubtless felt would be acceptable to the rebel leaders, nine-tenths of whom, according to received ideas, were Freemasons. Folly, conceit, idiocy, drunkenness, crime, poverty, always stand ready to carry out the "charity" and "brotherly love" of the Masonic lodge. It is not the person that does the deed, so much as it is the education of the lodge that drives him to it. Fitter still does the tool become for murderous purposes if he is trained up in the lodge. Once educate a depraved character to such a mixture of solemn prayers, murderous oaths, maudlin songs, frivolous ceremonies, criminal hopes, sly intimidations, revolting blasphemies, lofty pretentions, and false assertions, as go to make up the Masonic religion, and you have as fit an instrument for destroying human life and reputation as ever obeyed the commands of the "Old Man of the Mountain," from whose secret organization the ancient and honorable Order of Assassins took its rise.

In conclusion, let us say a word or two with regard to the newspaper press. If there is a paper in the United States, religious or political, that refuses its columns to aid in the abolition of such an unchristian and unrepublican institution as Freemasonry, then that paper is in collusion with that institution. It expects to derive a benefit, at the expense of the Christian religion and the republican government of the United States, by helping forward an institution that is destructive to them both.

The American people must prove treacherous to such newspapers by withholding patronage, or those papers will prove treacherous to them. We leave it to the American people to decide whether they will sustain clergymen who, by belonging to the Masonic lodge, give aid and comfort to a band of assassins.

AMERICAN.

Non-affiliating.

BY REV. JOEL H. AUSTIN.

"He has left the lodge. He don't attend any more. He's quit them." Or, "He has taken his demit, and left them. He has not been in a lodge for years." Now what does all such language mean? Does it not mean to very considerable extent, "being deceived, and deceiving?" I know that people are often misled by it. And even non-affiliating and demitted Masons themselves are to a great extent misguided, and comfort themselves in a wrong conclusion by those deceptive terms.

What is the real relation or situation of such Masons to the lodge? Are they out? Are they free? Certainly not. When they entered the lodge and bound themselves by the terrible oath and awful death penalty, it was an obligation intended to be forever binding upon them. According to Masonic law it was irrevocable. By the same Masonic law it reaches to their grand lodge above; it is equally binding upon soul and body. Truly an awful making over of one's self, and especially where the promiser has to do all the performing. And it is not entered into as a business transaction during the pleasure of the parties, that may be cast off at pleasure. But once a Mason, always a Mason.

What is the effect or benefit of non-affiliation? What does it amount to for the soul of man? What relief or aid is gained to the Mason? Where does it leave him? If I mistake not, it leaves him just where a man is left, that having been a joint partner in sin and crime with others, when his conscience, pecuniary circumstances, policy, or social relations move him to non-affiliation, to no more attend their meetings; though he has sworn to and bound himself under the most fearful death penalties not to forsake the assembling together. But conscience and other reasons induce him to stay away. After a while charges are made against him for this unmasonic conduct. But he pays no attention to it. In process of time he is suspended for non-payment of dues. Now does he thereby cease to be a Mason? Certainly if the oath was ever binding, it is still binding. Then what advantage from non-affiliation. Very much certainly, let the sinner cease from committing actual transgressions. This is best for himself and for society. But we should endeavor to forcibly impress upon the mind of all such the difference between ceasing from actual transgression and repentance for past sins. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts." That is, let him stop sinning at once, and let him turn unto the Lord. Now that is it. Let him be so sorrowful for his past sins, and see their wickedness so clearly that, repenting of them, he will turn from them; not simply stop continuing in sin, but turn from it and away from it.

Now non-affiliating Masons are very careful to be quiet on the subject of the lodge, and are often found the greatest opposers of agitation; this is positive evidence that the lodge yet exercises dominion over them, and that they still regard their oath binding. They are not free. They keep quiet for their oath's sake, and the fear of the terrible penalties they have invoked upon themselves. There seems but one remedy for this unfortunate class; and that is to renounce, disown and break their covenant with these powers of darkness, and then it becomes their imperative duty to warn others. Confessing their sins, they cannot be silent; for with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. To cease from attending the lodge is not enough; there must be a confession. He that confesseth and forsaketh shall be forgiven.

Now let us have the Bible order, and not reverse it, and say it will do just as well. For the experience of thousands of Masons is that the terrible oaths and penalties hang over them like the nightmare of death's stupor. Oh! be free, confess, forsake and be forgiven. Lift up your voice of warning to others. Tell your experience like Paul, and oh! what a cloud it would lift from the thousands of aching hearts.

To you, non-affiliating Masons, hoping for salvation through Jesus Christ, to you is this word sent. May God help you to arise from among the dead, and Christ will give you light. Let God have an opportunity to use your testimony. If the non-affiliating Masons would do this it would move this whole nation in moral reform. Will you, as an individual, do your duty? Resist the devil and his works.

Many in their church covenant have taken this solemn avowal (in many instances, especially to Masonic ministers, let it be remembered): "Dost thou renounce the devil and all his works so that thou wilt not follow or be led by them?" Let this be obeyed, and think not in thine heart that God will hold him guiltless, who professedly says with his lips, "I renounce them all," and still holds any allegiance to the carnal fellowship of the lodge, which in precept and practice denies Christ.

If the above quotations were obeyed it would take every member of the church out of the lodges, and out of all secret societies. Now this is not a small thing. It was for acting the lie that Ananias and Sapphira were blotted out of the church. Lie not in thy heart. God the judge of the whole earth is looking on.

I tremble for those around whom Satan has wound his cable tow. Your obligation made you a Mason. That obligation must be broken, that oath must be disannulled, it must be renounced. The Scripture has pointed out the remedy. "Come out from among them," renouncing the hidden things of darkness. Publish them to the light, and thus make your experience useful in warning others. Having no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. That is it, and as soon as you begin to reprove them, rebuke them sharply before all men that others may learn and fear to sin. Use the "Sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God, piercing to the dividing assunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow." Make God's truth to be felt.

It is then, and not till then, that Masonry will let go of you, or that you will fully realize that you are freed from its obligations. Satan will perhaps try to throw down your character, and wound you, but Christ will be near to heal you. He that confesseth and forsaketh shall be forgiven.

May God help all non-affiliating Masons to confess, and forsake and come to Jesus for pardon, that they may receive remission of their sins, and grace for days to come.

Nearly all men who, in any department, have achieved success have been noted for their intensity of purpose. "Never do anything by halves" should be the motto of every man who would rise above the common level. To resolve, and fail to keep a resolution should be the exception to the rule of any man's life, admissable only when the resolution is found to conflict with the higher rule of right. A vacillating man is like a football at the mercy of circumstances. A man of firm resolutions is like a ship anchored in safe moorings, he will outride adverse gales, and when favoring ones blow, hoist all sail and find a quick voyage to the harbor of success. Resolute, not obstinate, he carries his points (while seeming to yield) by the force of his purpose, and the strength which a fixed purpose always imparts to character.—Sel.

Those who, from the desire of our perfection, have the keenest eye for our faults, generally compensate for it by taking a higher view of our crimts than we deserve.—J. E. Boyes.

Secret Societies.

The Southern States have been, in times past, cursed with secret societies, associations and vigilance committees. They attained proportions and power there that they never gained in the free North, where the tendency was stronger to individual independence and freedom of action. The Knights of the Golden Circle, and other like secret political societies, found a congenial home in the South, and exercised a powerful influence in precipitating the people into revolution and civil war.

We observe that an effort is being made to revive these pestilential organizations in Georgia and in parts of Alabama, styled "The Regulators." While its ostensible object is to preserve domestic tranquility, and repress crime and social disorder, it has other and more questionable objects in view, and they will be developed in time. Similar organizations have sprung up in Louisiana, and have already grown to such dimensions as to call for special notice from the State authorities. Governor Wells says they are being revived in New Orleans, and have their affiliations in the parishes throughout the State. He says, with great force of truth:

"I regard all such combinations and associations as dangerous to society, opposed to freedom, hostile to equal and just laws, enlightened progress and national unity. Whether sought to be revived with the intention to commence anew a wicked war upon our naturalized population and to repel immigrants, or to keep alive any smoldering elements of disaffection that may exist to the national authority, or for both objects combined, I care not; I consider all persons in communion with them public enemies."

He invokes legislative aid to assist in their suppression and extirpation, and it is to be hoped he may not appeal in vain. Nothing could be more fatal to the hopes of our influx of thrifty and industrious population from other parts of the world than the knowledge that a powerful secret organization existed in the State, inimical to immigration, and organized for mischievous political purposes. No man will feel his life or property secure where it exists; for he has no assurance that he may not be made the victim of its hatred at any time. Secret political societies rarely accomplish any good, and they are fruitful of evil. They invariably fall into the hands of ambitious leaders, who use them to secure either their own private ends or advance measures so objectionable in their character that they are afraid to expose them to the daylight. Public opinion should be educated to suppress these associations everywhere throughout the country. They are opposed to the genius of free governments and institutions, and should not be tolerated.

Sermon.

Preached in the College church, Wheaton, Ill., Sabbath morning, April 27, 1879, by Prof. C. A. Blanchard.

TEXT, MATT. 8: 10, 12.

Faith rests upon knowledge as its only foundation. Without some knowledge of the character and attributes of a person or being any faith whatever is an impossibility. Our knowledge may be imperfect and we may give faith where it were wiser to doubt, but we must have some information before faith can begin in the heart.

We are sometimes treated to discussions of the relations between these two as though it was a mystery very difficult of solution. To me it seems very simple. If a man is worthy of confidence and I become acquainted with him, I shall trust him, have faith in him. If a man is untrustworthy and unreliable, I shall not trust him, or have faith in him, provided I become acquainted. The traveler along the passes of the Andes or the Alps, finds now and then some slender bridge thrown from side to side of some vast chasm whose dark depths are scarcely to be measured by the eye. At first he starts back in horror and refuses to put foot upon it. His guide assures him that it has hung there for years, that it has been repeatedly tested and that of his own personal knowledge it is safe and sure. He gains a little faith and tremblingly takes step after step until he has passed the footway in safety. He sees others pass and repass; he uses the bridge repeatedly himself, and after his knowledge is considerable his faith is firm. Just so a man is asked to trust God. He says the Being whom I am asked to trust is out of sight. The risk is great. A friend says, I have trusted him and he has helped me, delivered me in danger, comforted me in sorrow, strengthened me in temptation, been a very present help in every time of need.

Induced by this testimony the man fearfully steps out on the promises of the Almighty and finds that they bear him up. Time after time he does this until at last he walks confidently and joyously where at first he crept with tears and fears. He gets where he can say, "I will run in the way of thy commands when thou dost enlarge my heart." He who knows God well, who has meditated much on his attributes, providences and words, will confide much in him. He who knows but little about God, who neglects his word, and who studies carelessly or not at all his works, will be full of fearfulness.

If, then, knowledge is the foundation of faith, and faith is proportioned to knowledge, how are we to account for the fact that this Gentile had a stronger faith than Jew that our Saviour had met? The Jew had much the advantage every way, chiefly because that unto him were committed the oracles of God. From his birth he was trained in the service of Jehovah. The words of the Scriptures were written on door posts in the house and on the borders of his garments. This Roman, on the other hand, was, by training, an idolater and a butcher. His religion was false and his trade was to kill men. If faith is proportioned to knowledge how is it that his faith was such as the Lord had failed to find among his own people.

The reason of it is not difficult to find. Men do not learn by looking, but by applying the mind. The boy who sits in the schoolhouse listening to the twitter of birds, the fluttering of leaf and the babbling of brook: or who watches the great piles of white clouds sailing like snow mountains through the sky, will not learn in twenty years of such study as much as an earnest man will in half an hour. So the Jew who was trained to religion became used to it. Its awful truths became dulled by constant repetition to a disobedient ear and the more intent and earnest Gentile caught up and stored away the precious truths which the Jew, swine-like, trampled under foot.

Nor was this a solitary instance. Would God it were! But at the present time and in all ages past we not unfrequently find men out of the church who seem to know more of God than do some of those who are in it. There are men who profess the holy religion of Christ, and vote other men license to sell rum; who profess to be honest and import voters to carry an election; who profess to be Protestants, and aid Catholicism; who would drink the heart's blood of their own kindred for gain. Now outside of the church there are men who, professing no religion whatever, would cut off a right hand or pluck out a right eye before they would be guilty of such criminal trifling with the interests of Christ's kingdom and the souls of men. They may have had less opportunity to learn but they have better improved the opportunity which they have had. They are Gentiles but they have a larger faith than is found in Israel.

We are not to understand that men are saved by works. Men are saved by faith but men's faith is judged by the works which they do. Men do not gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can an evil tree bring forth good fruit.

HUMILITY THE PEARL OF CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

Let us observe in the second place that we find here a wonderful example of humility. God plants his flowers in the strangest places. The cactus opens its crimson flowers amid the sands of the desert. The mountain lily pushes its way up through hard, flinty rocks and the modest violet hides under some rotting rail or log. So here we find a most marvelous example of lowliness in one who represented the most powerful government then upon the face of the earth.

Humility is the mark of a great mind. The child who has learned his alphabet thinks himself at the summit of human knowledge. When he gets through college he is convinced that there are several things, if not more, which he has not learned, but it is only Newton who sadly says, "I am like a little child playing with pebbles on the beach while the great ocean of truth lies unexplored before me."

Pride and arrogance are the index of weakness and stupidity. He knows nothing, who comprehends not his own folly and sinfulness. This teaches us clearly that the man before us was no common man. He was a soldier accustomed to strains of martial music, to the golden eagles and victorious banners of Rome. He was in a conquered province and there as master of these Jews. The one to whom he came was poorly clad, was frowned upon and cast out by the little great men of his own nation and church; but recognizing his kingly nature in spite of the servant's dress the soldier bowed to the Saviour and said I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof.

This was all true, but it was equally true of all other men whose hospitality he shared. Yet he was spit upon and buffeted in the hall of Caiaphas; insulted by the Pharisee who asked him to dine; received gladly by Zaccheus; entertained joyfully by Martha, Mary and Lazarus. It was only this Roman officer who said: Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof.

Blessed are they who know God well enough to trust him; who can, in the midst of strife and confusion, hear ever the sweet love tones of that one who said: "Lo it is I, be not afraid."

Thrice-blessed are they who are humble and lowly in heart, for the humble bear no yoke and no burden but Christ's, and his yoke is easy, his burden light.

GOD THE RULER OF NATIONS.

It remains only to glance at God's method of dealing with nations, as indicated in the Scripture before us. Passing from the individuals before him, and comprehending in one glance all ages and all climes, he said, Many shall come from the east and the west and sit down with Abraham, but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out. That is, when God entrusts a nation with great privileges and opportunities, he exacts corresponding labors. Where much is given, much will be required. And, if those who have the vineyard fail to return to him the fruits, he will cast them out and commit it to others.

So the Jews, after a trial extending through hundreds of years, proved themselves unworthy of their privileges, and were scattered like the chaff before the autumn winds. Driven out of their city and the Holy land to wander upon the face of the earth, a peculiar people, distinguished now by the curse, as once by the blessing of God.

But if we content ourselves with a sight of the past, we shall be very unwise. This nation, of which we are a part, has been the recipient of Divine favor, as was the Jewish. We were planted wholly of a right seed. Men who loved property, home, friends, office, ease, life itself, less than what they thought to be truth, laid, amid New England's snows, amid storm and danger and sickness and death, the foundation stones of our glorious temple of liberty. How have we carried on the work they begun? We are putting the word of God out of our public schools; we are running railroad trains over the law of the Sabbath; we are stoning the Chinaman out of California; driving the Indians from pillar to post, breaking more treaties than there are Indians in the country; and, as if to sound the very depths of infamy, allowing the representatives of free principles to be gagged, beaten or murderered in ten or eleven States without a shadow of protection from the United States authority.

Paul was hundreds of miles from Rome but his single question: "Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman?" struck the whip from the soldier's hand and brought a chief captain to his knees. But in our free America, Americans may be scourged, or shot, or hanged, or burned within sight of the dome of the Capitol, and there is not power enough in the United States to punish the scourgers or throttle the murderers. As a nation we plundered the black man of all that he had. We did this for two hundred years. At last as a means of national salvation we struck the fetter from his wrist and put a gun into his hand. The war closed and we sent him out penniless. He was poor, of course, for he had been a slave. He was ignorant, for it had been a crime to teach him to read. He was immoral, for the whole South was full of children whose color was prima facie evidence of white and black parents. We turned these poor people out without a dollar, without a foot of land, without a schoolhouse erected by Government, without a church, and what was worse than all, without protection from the rage of the whites who thought it a disgrace to work and an honor to be thieves and murderers.

For fourteen years the black man suffered and at last took refuge in flight. Gathering together the scanty results of a lifetime of toil he undertook to escape from the States where his life was conditioned on submission to the brutality and knavery of whites. But quick to obey the behests of the ex-lords of the lash, the present lords of the shot gun, the boats refuse to carry them to the North, and hundreds, yes, thousands of them are this hour camped by the great river praying God for means to escape from the living hell where they so long have suffered. All this in the year of grace 1879 and not a United States official to lift a finger or say a word.

Think you, brethren and sisters that we can continue to prosper and thus permit the poor to be trampled under foot? I tell you, Nay. A nation of savages in Central Africa who should do as we have done would be pointed at as a frightful example of the evils of idolatry and savagism. We must return to God, humble ourselves before him, put away this iniquity, purify our churches, defend the poor and oppressed or when many come from east and west and north and south to sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, we ourselves shall be cast out.

GRAFTS.

The Catholic Review says of the sermon preached by Dr. Joseph P. Thompson, the correspondent of the Independent in Berlin, at the funeral of Bayard Taylor: "The sermon concluded with the following sentence: 'Into the hands of the Great Master and Architect, therefore, we reverently and lovingly commit this life and its work,' a form of phraseology that seems to belong to the Trowel rather than the Cross, and which was probably intended as a graceful compliment to the Jewish Freemason, Berthold Auerbach, with whom Dr. Thompson was mingling his tears over Taylor's grave."

The law-making body of this church [United Brethren] was composed of men of piety, wisdom and brains. They believed and still believe that organized secrecy is an evil; hence they legislate against it. The great body of the church are loyal to this legislation, but there a few who want this law modified so as to let this evil into the church. They may be honest in their views. With this I will not dispute; but is it not disloyalty for them to oppose the enforcement of law that they knew existed when they united with the church. From this class of preachers the church suffers more than from all outside influences brought against it. They poison every field of labor they serve, by talking their sentiments to everybody. They have a right to do this as men, but they have no right to do this as ministers of the United Brethren church, for in doing so they link arms with the worst foes the church of Christ has, namely, Masonry—Cor. Christian Radical.

Matthew 23: 10: "Neither be ye called master for one is your master even Christ." Masons do not only have their masters, but worshipful and most worshipful masters and most excellent grand high priests and grand kings. (Moores' Guide, p. 172.) I was personally acquainted with an avowed infidel (deist) who was one of their most worshipful masters, and I am acquainted with one of their most worshipful masters who bears the name of a hard swearing man. Reader, how does that sound for professors of Christianity to call hard swearing men and infidels most worshipful masters? According to the teachings of Masonry it is superior to state and church. (Rob. Morris, p. 240) The covenant is irrevocable even though a Mason may be suspended or expelled, though he may withdraw from the lodge or journey into countries where Masons cannot be found, or become a subject of despotic government that persecutes, or a communicant of "bigoted churches" that denounce Masonry, he cannot cast off nullify his Masonic covenant. "No law can affect it, no anathema of the church weaken it; it is irrevocable." These claims are false and prove that the institution is dangerous to state and church. It claims to be a charitable institution, which is also false.—G. W. Studebaker in Primitive Christian.

Reform News.

ON THE WAY TO NEBRASKA.

COUNCIL BLUFFS. Iowa, April 29, 1879.

DEAR K.—In company with Bro. D. P. Rathbun, I have just reached this once frontier city and find every accommodation which a reasonable man could ask at the Ogden House. From Clarence to this point our route has been through one of the finest farming regions I ever saw. The season is much in advance of the Chicago region. Our meeting at Clarence last evening was well attended, and I trust good results will follow. On the train to-day I met the former husband of a lady whom I knew in Galesburg. He gave me a sad account of his domestic life, and told me of the recent death of a lady graduate of Knox College whose parents still live in this city. The man joined the Freemasons some years ago under the impression that it would be a help to him if he should ever need assistance; but when losses of property and domestic trouble had nearly crushed him, it was the old and oft-repeated story of neglect and refused assistance. He made up his mind that it was a cheat and a fraud and so left the order to return no more.

We are obliged to remain here until 9:30 to-morrow for York via Lincoln, which we hope and expect to reach in time for the evening meeting. Bro. R. is to work the first degree and we are arranging a programme for the fall and winter campaign so that he can attend as many of the State meetings as possible where his services are desired in working the degrees. I hope to hear from a large number of friends respecting the fall meetings when I reach Chicago in eight or ten days.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

YORK, Neb., May 1, 1879.

"Come disappointments, come! not in thy terrors clad,
Thy chast'ning rod but terrifies the restless and the bad."

To say that I felt no degree of disappointment, when 8 P. M. last evening I stepped from the cars at this place and learned that nothing had been done substantially towards working up our State meeting, would not be quite true. I had hoped to meet a few of the earnest workers of this State, but only two were present to meet and greet us on our arrival. Bro. Austin, a U. B. minister, living fourteen miles in the country, and Bro. Ross, who had come sixty-five miles with his team, were the only ones to extend us a welcome. These brethren made very commendable efforts, and securing a hall, a fair audience was soon gathered to whom I spoke for about an hour on the religion and some of the ceremonies of Freemasonry. The discussions to be heard on the streets and in public places indicates to-day that some at least of the nails were driven in a sure place. Bro. Rathbun felt even more disheartened than myself, but we each soon found relief by casting our burdens on Him who careth for us. Feeling that it was God's cause and work that had brought us to this land of strangers, and that we have only to "obey our marching orders," we sought and are still striving to enter every door he shall open before us.

The brethren at whose frequent and repeated solicitations we came, have neither appeared in person or written, so far as known, any explanation of their absence. Should they fail in future to make satisfactory explanations, they can hardly expect to escape the censure of their brethren, or enjoy their confidence until exhibiting fruit meet for repentance. To consume a week's time of two men and entail upon them an expense of from $50 to $60 is no trifling matter, when men and money are so much needed to carry on our reform where the people are ready to work. I trust for the good of the cause that whoever is responsible for this disappointment will be careful that it is never repeated, and that others will see the necessity of using due diligence in preparing for meetings, especially when they wish help from abroad which is necessarily attended with considerable expense.

We have found here in the community a number of friends, and are being entertained at the house of one who takes some interest, but who is free from all these "entangling alliances."

It is now nearly twelve M. and neither Bro. Spooner or Bro. Snyder, whose names appear to the call, or any other, has appeared, but possibly they may yet come and we may in the end be cheered, strengthened and helped on in the Master's work in a way we now but little dream of.

This place contains about 1,000 inhabitants, is new and really beautiful, while the surrounding country surpasses anything I ever saw in breadth, fertility and general adaptation to purposes of agriculture.

MONTHLY REPORT OF THE ILLINOIS STATE AGENT.

LECTURES — ODD FELLOW SALOONS — EXPOSITIONS AND COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On April 18th I lectured in the McKay schoolhouse, Salem, Carroll county, Ill. When Riley Corning and I got there we found the house locked against us. Mr. John McKay, an old citizen, told us that door hadn't been locked before for four years to his knowledge. But we got in and had a very fair meeting.

Saturday evening, the 19th, I preached to the church of Christ in Ustick, Whiteside Co. Lords's day, the 20th, was a day of rejoicing with us. I preached at noon and then went to a stream near Bro. B. P. Baker's where I baptized six converts "into the name of Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." In the evening we observed the ordinances of feet-washing and the Lord's Supper.

Going to Chicago and thence to Wheaton on the 21st, I found my wife and her sister, Maggie Drew, just getting over an old-fashioned time with the measles.

Returning to Carroll county, I spoke in the Cridler school-house, township of Wysox, on the 23rd. Spent the 24th and 25th in engaging halls and preparing the way for Bro. Rathbun. On the 26th I went to Warren. There being a "noble grand" celebration in Freeport on that day in glorification of Odd-fellowship, I rode to that city from Mt. Carroll with a crowd of three-link brethren. As I had to wait some time in Freeport, I went to see the show. I very soon noticed that the saloons were all decorated. Only the day before I had been talking with a gentleman in Thompson, Carroll county, who thought he should join the Odd-fellows because, amongst other things, the order strictly required of its members the practice of temperance. And yet as I passed one drinking saloon after another I saw that these ante-rooms of hell without a single exception as far as I saw, were decorated in honor of Odd-fellowship. How is it that rum-sellers join so heartily in glorifying Odd-fellowship, if the order, as it claims, is engaged in enticing men from the saloons and breaking up the business of liquor-selling? Would a gathering in Freeport of genuine temperance workers find the saloons decorated in their honor? To be sure a part of the other buildings and places of business were decorated, but every saloon that I noticed (I went through two principal streets and counted twenty) joined in the Odd-fellow demonstration. Many of these drinking dens illustrated the harmony that exists between their work and the real character of Odd-fellowship by a conspicuous display of the pretended mottoes of the order, such as "Educate the Orphan," "Care for the Widow," "Visit the Sick," "Bury the Dead." Here is a large saloon which displays all those mottoes, and from the building in which it carries on its hellish work there is stretched across the street a large rope from which hangs the motto "Friendship, Love and Truth." How beautifully this illustrates the claim that Odd-fellowship is a temperance organization!

Here is another big saloon bedecked with flags, evergreen, mottoes, symbols, etc. In the large window on one side of the entrance we read "Billiards and Pool"—"Care for the Widow;" in the other window, "Billiards and Pool"—"Bury the Dead;" over the entrance worked in evergreen, are the three links of Odd-fellowship, and on the screen inside "Milwaukee Lager Beer."

BILLIARDS AND POOL.	OOO MILWAUKEE LAGER BEER.	BILLIARDS AND POOL.
CARE FOR THE WIDOW.		BURY THE DEAD.

How beautiful, appropriate and harmonious is this! The lodge and the licensed murder den married; joined in the hell-riveted bands of link-lock! You've heard perhaps of the Irish citizen who joined the mottoes of Ireland and the United States so as to make "Erin go Unum E Pluribus Bragh." Well here is another union, "Friendship, Whisky and Truth; License, Love and Lager."

Arriving in Warren, Father Williams took me to Chelsea, a country place five miles south, where I lectured in a Wesleyan church Saturday evening and preached Lord's Day morning to good and appreciative congregations. P. M. I preached at Library Hall, Warren, and later at the Spring Valley schoolhouse, just over the line in LaFayette county, Wis. During the week so far, I've been writing and arranging for future work. This evening, Friday, May 2, I am to lecture in Stockton Center, and also to-morrow evening. Lord's Day, the 4th, I am to preach, D. V., in Chelsea, Stockton Center and Warren. Next week I expect to work in Stephenson county. Lord's Day, May 11th, expect to preach in Ustick, Whiteside county, and from the 11th to the 24th work in Carroll county, mostly with Bro. Rathbun.

We should be glad to welcome friends from abroad to Bro. Rathbun's meetings, especially to the meetings at Mt. Carroll on Friday and Saturday May, 23rd and 24th. On Saturday, the 24th, we hope to hold a county convention at Mt. Carroll. Come on friends and help us make it a true success. Mt. Carroll is terribly lodge-ridden; come over and help us, friends from Whiteside, Ogle, Stephenson and Jo Daviess counties, and from wherever there is a true man or woman that can come.

J. F. BROWNE.

REFORMERS OF MICHIGAN, ATTENTION.

The cause of reform is on the wane in our State, brethren. We have no lecturer, and a great many counties are without organizations. These things ought not so to be. The powers of darkness are well and systematically arranged; are hard at work, both in public and private, and have their treasuries well filled.

Shall we prove recreant to our trust? Shall we allow the banner to drag, when now, if ever, it ought to be waving in the breeze? Shall we flinch and falter, after having fought so long and so well? God forbid. Come forward, brethren, and listen a moment. Five Hundred Dollars, we think, will secure the services of an able man, whose sole business it shall be to go from place to place, all through this State, presenting before you and your neighbors the evils of secret combinations and associations. Are you interested in public morals and religion? Have you a child to whom you wish to leave a legacy? Freedom is a great boon. Before you die assist us in freeing our State and other States from the tyranny of lodge power, and from the blood-stains which must come from the infliction of barbarous death penalties taken in dark upper rooms. You are not free, your children are in bondage, and must continue so, so long as Church and State are under the control of a secret empire. Now, what we ask is simply this:

We want ONE HUNDRED NAMES, WITH FIVE DOLLAR SHARES, in our State work. Send your name and postoffice directly to me, as Secretary of the State Association, and do it immediately. Send the money or the pledge. I will keep a list of all names forwarded, and will forward money to the treasury as fast as received. If any are able—and we know some are—to take two or more shares, let them do so, and let us get ready for a lecturer. Send on your names to H. A. Day, Secretary M. C. A., Jackson, Mich.

SHARP WORK IN MICHIGAN.

ST. LOUIS, Mich., April 22, '79.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been to Salt River. I think I will name it "Saltpetre and Brimstone river," for I very seriously doubt whether 'salt' alone will save it; so I gave it three doses, mixed with "Grandfather Wildey" and "The Widow's Son," which produced black-vomit, accompanied with spasms, with horrible breaking out around the mouth, which became quite contagious. The "cowans" had a better view of the "true inwardness" of the lodge than they had any conception or before.

One Odd-fellow trustee put the Baptist church (or its key) in his pocket, and refused me the house, and we negotiated all winter for the school-room, which was finally granted. I sounded the "alarum" on Friday night. You must remember that Salt river is in complete possession of Masonic and Odd-fellow lodges. On Saturday night the interest increased. I had progressed half way, when I thought all the teams hitched around had broken loose and were coming up stairs; but it proved to be the Odd-fellow lodge, which had hastily adjourned and came in.

At my closing, it was a question whether I should have the room any longer; when the Odd-fellows made a demand for it, and invited me to return on Monday evening and go for Odd-fellowship, which I consented to do, a leader promising to correct if I made any mistakes. But when the time came and I held him to his promise, he said, "As far as was allowable"—of course by his masters. I cannot tell it all, but for two hours I threw bomb-shells and hot shot, which was met almost constantly by guerrilla rifle (or squib) practice.

When I dismissed, they were so warmed up to the work, they wanted me to stay and answer questions; so the people sat down, and for near an hour the pot boiled as sons of the "mystic tie," or "cowans" either, seldom ever saw it.

Some friends gave me a collection of over ten dollars and I proposed that we go home, when a dozen or two of the "widow's sons" and children of grandfather Wildey, gathered around me, some hanging on to me and all talking at once.

It was the most disorderly crowd I ever addressed, for there was a crowd each evening. The subject was new to them and it is thought the work will bear a good harvest.

Notes from New England.

THE COLORED EXODUS.

There is a growing interest in this city and vicinity in the present exodus, I should rather say compulsory flight from oppression, of Southern freedmen. A public meeting was called here by colored men on the 22d at which speeches were made and resolutions adopted declaring that substantial sympathy in their suffering condition—flying in crowds under the stress of dire necessity from their Egypt of bondage—is both the duty and privilege of humanity. A responsible committee of five was appointed to raise and transmit donations in money and clothing.

Rev. Mr. Cheever is reported to have significantly said at this meeting that twenty years ago in the spring of 1859, he met John Brown on the platform of the Church Anti-slavery Society at Tremont Temple, Boston, then meditating his raid into Virginia; and he heard him grimly say he was tired of talk—he wanted business—the way to smite slavery was to help the slaves to be free. So now he (Mr. Cheever) would say, looking at the present aspect of affairs in Mississippi and Louisiana, the way to smite the South into sense and reason and a show of fairness to the colored population, was to help the spontaneous exodus of its laboring class to lands and tools in Kansas, which our national Congress ought to have given freely out of the confiscated lands of rebels, in the name of the United States, victorious over the bloody rebellion of slave-holders, to every freed family in the South. And because he (Mr. Cheever) thought this was the Christian way of succor to the needy and to heap coals of fire on the head of the South, after the manner we did last year under the visitation of pestilence, he would pledge and pay $20 for himself and another to the committee raised for the purpose contemplated in the resolution.

Mr. Wendell Phillips, unable to attend in person a similar meeting at Cooper Union, New York, said in writing: "Only two paths are open to the colored men of the South: one is to resist, and protect themselves against intolerable oppression by arms; the other is to leave, one-half of them, their homes, and teach their oppressors justice by the severe lesson of suffering. Leave the tyrants and bullies to till their own soil or starve while they do nothing but wrong and rob their laborers. Without laborers the Southern acres are worth nothing. Even a Southerner will come to his senses, or, if he never had any senses, obtain some, when he is starved. I trust the North will, as in Kansas days, organize and help open channels and contribute means for a large emigration from States ruled by thieves and cut-throats, who know no means of getting their bread except by robbing their neighbors."

Mr. Garrison true to his life-long friendship for the colored man and to his instincts of humanity and justice, said: "The spectacle of thousands of half-naked, empty-handed, despairing men, women and children fleeing as for their lives from one part of the country to another, preferring to risk starvation and death by the way rather than remain where they naturally belong, is one calculated to move pitying Heaven and to awaken all that is sympathetic and generous in the human breast. Their claims for immediate charitable relief are equally just and imperative. In these Southern States conspiracy and usurpation successfully bear sway. In all the late rebel States there scarcely exists a single legitimate State administration; for no election has been permitted without being controlled more or less by fraud, intimidation and lawlessness. It is clear that the battle of liberty and equal rights is to be fought over again, not in a party sense in the ordinary use of that term, but by the uprising and consolidating of a loyal, freedom-loving North, overwhelming in numbers, determined in purpose, invincible in action and supreme in patriotism based upon impartial justice and an all-embracing citizenship. While, therefore, grave, exciting and relatively important as the present exodus of a few thousands of colored refugees from Mississippi and Louisiana may be, it is only an incident of the hour, demanding succor and aid in various forms until they have time to select their dwelling-places. But what of the four millions of colored people in the entire South? Their exilement is a question not to be seriously entertained for a moment, either as a desirable or possible event. The American government is but a mockery and deserves to be overthrown, if they are to be left without protection as sheep in the midst of wolves. Let the edict go forth, trumpet-tongued, that there shall be a speedy end put to all this bloody misrule; and let the rallying cry be heard from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast: 'Liberty and equal rights for each, for all, and forever, wherever the lot of man is cast, within our broad domains.'"

In a like enthusiastic gathering at Fanieul Hall, Boston, last evening ex-Senator Boutwell reviewed the causes of the passing exodus from the South—this enforced expatriation of American citizens—and declared that the Republican party had latterly tendered concessions to the oppressors when it should have searched the Constitution for power to protect the oppressed. He closed an able speech in these words: "My friends, you are summoned now to a work of charity—present, pressing, urgent need demands your aid. The helpless men, women and children who implore your charity, are the victims of a great crime. It is not enough that you aid the victims, you must rebuke the criminals and render a repetition of the crimes impossible."

A series of able resolutions adopted at this meeting express indignation at the injustice which has compelled loyal citizens to flee from the land of their birth, deplore the failure of the Government to protect them in the exercise of their constitutional rights, welcome the exodus as proof of the negro's determination to breathe only the air of freedom, declare that this movement promises the peaceful solution of a troublesome national question, that it should be disconnected as far as possible from party politics, and encouraged on account of its more important industrial relations as tending to better the condition of the diligent emigrants; appeal to the people of Boston and New England to aid the movement by generous contributions of money, and bespeak for the long suffering people fleeing from unbearable oppression a kind welcome from the prosperous inhabitants of the West.

While a loud call is thus being made upon the well-to-do and comfortable for aid to the destitute refugee freedmen, money continues to be spent like water upon the flummeries of Freemasonry. Yesterday the sixtieth anniversary of the introduction of Odd-fellowship—the present most popular and extensive form of Masonry, was celebrated here by processions, feasting, music and song. The means so squandered would have furnished mules, tools and land to scores of swarthy, stalwart settlers in Kansas, who are aching to work fair and square, as one of them said, so that they can get just a little patch o' ground for their own. Why do they Object?

Chase City, Va., Apr. 24, 1879.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I have been a much interested reader of your truly Christian paper ever since it had an existence. It is with pleasure I have noted the continuously increasing light with which it is penetrating the dark abodes of secrecy, and it is my earnest wish that it may extend its circulation throughout the length and breadth of our beloved land. But I very much fear that the frequent, and I must say often uncalled for allusions to slavery, will very much tend to decrease its circulation in those States that were at one time burdened with that peculiar institution. A few years ago I had an opportunity to read for one year the Planter and Farmer, published at Richmond, Va. As an agricultural paper adapted to this particular region, it cannot be excelled, but so full was it of the venom of secession, so mixed in with almost every article were its bitter attacks on the government, as well as the public school system, and indeed anything which tended to the enlightening of the masses, that much as I liked the paper in so far as it stuck to its legitimate business, much as I felt the need of informing myself in regard to methods best adapted to this agricultural section, I could not stomach that publication. I have often thought of handing the Cynosure around among my Southern friends, and as often have tried to find a number that would not conflict with views in which they were educated, and allusions to which would naturally be offensive to them, but I do not remember having come across a number in which there was not some allusion which would counteract the good impression which the Cynosure would otherwise be likely to make. I care not where you strike at secretism, whether the Ku-klux in the South, or the Molly Maguires in the North; whether the Knights of the Golden Circle or the Union League, let it be done fairly and squarely, but let us be careful not to unnecessarily stir up bad feelings or do anything which would hinder the great work in which we are engaged.

I received a copy of the "Master's Carpet" some weeks since, but it has been out from home so much of the time that I have not been able to more than glance through it. It is now at the third place since it started out as I hope doing good.

"Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace and things wherewith we may edify another." Yours for the cause,

D. H. King.

Note.—We thought the Cynosure very considerate in referring to the past history of the country, especially as with hardly an exception the supporters of our reform were active Abolitionists. There is one question on which we should be glad to know Bro. King's experience: From whence proceeds this aversion to any allusion to the removal of slavery? Is it from honest minds who in a Christian spirit accept the work of God in putting away that national sin, or comes the complaint from men unrepenting and rebellious against the ways of Providence?—Ed.

One More from Darkness to Light.

Editor Cynosure:—The works of darkness have received another hard knock here. Last Saturday morning the senior warden of Unity Lodge, No. 191, F. & A. M., sent in the following notice to the lodge:

To the members of Unity Lodge: Henceforth I do not wish to be considered a member of your lodge nor of the whole fraternity. Resp'y yours, John Vaupell.

Dated Holland, Mich., April 26, 1879.

Mr. Vaupell is our present city marshal. Last December the lodge, noticing his growing lukewarmness, offered to elect him master of the lodge, as he was their best posted working member. But he peremtorily declined, and becoming fully convinced of the wickedness of the institution, severed his membership and renounced it forever, even declining to ask for a demit, or to address them by the usual title of "Worshipful Master, Wardens and Brethren." He has found peace in his Saviour, and feels happy in having obeyed the injunction: "Come out from among them, and touch not the unclean thing."

In publishing your list of seceders add his and my name, and may the Lord soon enable us to report more of them. To him alone is all the glory! J. O. DOESBURG.

THE WOMEN OF INDIANA.

In the last Christian Ensign, published at Bedford, Indiana, I noticed several articles written by women against Masonry. I also observed that the publication of the Ensign is to be discontinued.

Now it seems to us that a State which can produce several lady writers against Freemasonry, ought to be able and willing to sustain a paper that is devoted to the opposition of Masonry. Why do not the ladies of Indiana, by themselves, take up this Anti-masonic, anti-communist reform, and maintain a journal of their own? They would, by so doing, render an infinitely greater service to the cause of religion and morals than the women of Ohio have done by opposing liquor-selling. Bad as liquor-selling is, it is infinitely less injurious to the American people than this soul-killing poison which is sold from Masonic lodges.

It would be a great honor to the ladies of Indiana to continue the lead which they have taken against this greatest evil of the day, this corrupt religion called Freemasonry. The ladies of Lawrence county alone might sustain the Ensign and keep its colors flying until the day is won. REFORMER.

OUR MAIL.

Lewis Kellogg, Lake Ridge, Mich., writes:

"My father lived in York State, Niagara county, and was twenty-six old when poor Morgan met his fate. He says he saw the carriage, closed, bearing him to his death; saw it stop at Wright's tavern, drive in, and the doors hastily shut, but did not know what it all meant at the time. Early in life I heerd my father talk so much on this subject, that i learned to hate secrecy. So I have grown up a strong Anti mason I take the Cynosure and like it much. I have sold quite a number of your publications. I hope I have done some good. One Odd-fellow, a dead member of the lodge, says I do more good than a preacher. He bought of me Bernard's Light on Masonry with an appendix of Odd-fellowship. He says he would not take ten dollars for it and not have another."

David Thompson, Arkansas City, Kan., orders the paper sent to a zealous seceding Mason, whom the members or the craft are anxious to reclaim, and writes:

"I hope their efforts will be in vain. They have a lodge here and their hall I see illuminated about five times a week, but I understand it is occupied by members of different degrees on different nights. I know not an exemplary Christian among them here. Wishing manifold the present number of your subscribers, I am yours in the cause of truth and right."

Albert C. Hepburn, Salem, Oregon, writes:

"The Good Templars are not thought much of here, and are known as the 'sparking society.' There is not much reform in this part of the world. So the Masons and Odd-fellows have very near their own way. There is good chance here for some lectures."

William Thompson, Senecaville, O., writes:

"I remember well the Anti-masonic excitement of 1826 to 1834. I was then taught by my parents that Masonry was a rival and an enemy to the Christian religion, and my observation of the effects of the institution during my life confirming me that the teaching I received was correct and no institution within my knowledge keeps as many men from the blood of atonement. If the Masonic preachers of the present day were as honest as the preachers and elders were who attended the Leroy convention they would desert the lodge as rats would leave a burning barn. Secret societies are the foxes that destroy the vines. I like the Cynosure. It is the best paper I take. God bless the National Christian Association."

Thos. Johnston, Dickson, Tenn., wishes us to "advocate about three-fourths reduction of all our public officers' pay. That big, enormous pay is what makes Masonry. Cut it down and Masonry would die immediately."

Lyman Gilbert, Pope's Mills, N. Y., writes:

"I lately saw a notice in the Cynosure of 'Good Templarism Exposed.' I have been very anxious to get hold of one for this reason: The order is said to be a temperance institution. I'm a radical Prohibitionist. Just before town meeting, three years ago, I traveled five miles and went through the silly form of initiation in the lodge; was very much disappointed and never went near them again. I think if your party and mine could unite they might in time succeed in eradicating two great evils."

Robt. F. Comstock, Worcester, Mass., writes:

"I thank the Lord that I have been kept free. A Baptist church member is the extent of my connection with any body of individuals. I have no sympathy with any secret organization."

L. B. Lathrop, Hollister, Cal., writes of the "Master's Carpet:"

"It will be a power in our work. Each man should supply himself with one for study and reference; some for presents to his friends, several to lend, and sell all he can, and get them read any how. If money is short take it out of the Masonic minister's salary. I have thirty dollars to use in those ways. I keep a book account of all I sell, lend or give away. I expect to sink money on them. All I ask for any of them is cost. O, if men would only go after reform as they go after money! If they would be as wise in serving Christ as worldly men are in pursuit of the world, the work would move."

C. C. Foote, Detroit, Mich., writes:

"I fear there is an awful avalanche overhanging this nation, suspended as by a hair. So manifold and shameful are our sins."

A friend at Morrison, Ill., writes:

"I have labored long and hard. The result is now gloriously appearing. Prayer, faith and work is still needed. You shall reap if you faint not. I am working in a quiet way, but perseveringly. Have not much means, but some faith which increases."

Ira Remington, Mundy, Mich., writes:

"Our State meeting should be held at Flint next time we have one, I think. The Masons and their relatives have pretty much their own way there. Being so long without an anti-secret lecture, the good that was done by Mr. Ronayne is almost forgotten."

Wm. Mathews, Ambrose, Pa., writes:

"I feel much interested in the valiant lecturers God has raised and is raising up for the work and pray God's richest blessing on them all. I am sure the word of the Lord will prosper in their hands. * * I would suggest that every subscriber who can't do more, send the Cynosure to some minister If we had the ministers right the work would soon be done. I believe the ministry was the strongest support that the wicked abominable system of slavery had, and it is about the same with secretists."

John K. Glassford, Carthage, Mo., writes:

"I am doing some work for the good cause of reform in these parts, and scattering the seed of reform as far I as can. If had the means I would put books and papers in the hands of every young man in this nation. But I thank God I live in a free country and can talk and pray and cry aloud against this worst of all abominations, and I pray that the books and papers may be read and believed, and then will we see the fruit of our labor."

LESSON XX —May 18, 1879.—THE SAVIOUR'S KINGDOM.

SCRIPTURE.—Micah 4:1-8.

1 But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and the people shall flow unto it.

2 And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

3 And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

4 But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it.

5 For all people will walk every one in the name of his god, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever.

6 In that day saith the Lord, will I assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted;

7 And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation: and the Lord shall reign over them in mount Zion from henceforth even forever.

8 And thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob.—Micah 4:2.

DAILY HOME READINGS.

(1) Isa. 2:1-5; (2) John 6:44-58; (3) Ps. 72; (4) Jer. 23:5-8; (5) Rev. 7:9-17; (6) Ezek. 34:11-16; (7) Dan. 7:9-28.

POINTS FOR SPECIAL STUDY.

1. The names of the twelve minor prophets. 2. Time and circumstances of Micah's prophecy. 3. The mountains of Jerusalem 4. The spiritual meaning of "Zion" 5. Oriental weapons and methods of warfare. 6. Evils of war. 7. Methods of promoting peace. 8. Extent to which this prophecy has been already fulfilled. 9. Condition of the world when it has been completely fulfilled. 10. How the church may hasten its fulfillment. 11. What each Christian may do to promote peace.

OUTLINE.

I. The establishment of the kingdom (vs. 1, 2). The time is "the last days," which is identified with the Christian dispensation in Heb. 1:2; 1 Pet. 1:20; 1 John 2:18; Jude 18. The "mountain of the Lord's house" stands for Christ's church.

II. Characteristics of the kingdom. There is a personal reign, "He." There shall be justice, power, peace. War is the great waster and scourge. Peace brings plenty, security, happiness.

III. Continuance of the kingdom. Messiah does not repeal the Old Testament, but fills out "the law and the prophets" (Mat. 5:17, 18). The church shall be the refuge and stronghold of the people.

PRACTICAL TEACHINGS

1. This prophecy is being fulfilled, but Christians have done their part only feebly and unfaithfully.

2. This kingdom we inherit and enjoy. We are to diffuse its benefits. All missionary effort is included.

3. It deserves our allegiance, which is rendered as in v 5.

4. It is high honor to be in it. (See Heb. 12:22, 23.)

5. It has a glorious future. Here or in heaven it lasts forever.

6 It is meantime adapted to all (vs. 2, 3), and brings great personal blessings (vs. 3, 4).

The book of Micah was written by the prophet, probably during the last years of his ministry, as we find his words quoted as spoken in the time of Hezekiah (Jer. 26:18). The book is divided into three parts, viz, chaps. 1-3, the sins and miseries of Israel; chaps 4-5, the political or national recovery of Israel; and chaps. 6-7, their experience or moral recovery. Our lesson falls within the middle portion and is a comforting picture.

The period during which Micah exercised the prophetical office is stated in the superscription to his prophecies, to have extended over the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah giving thus a maximum limit of fifty nine years (B. C. 758-698) from the accession of Jotham to the death of Hezekiah, and a minimum limit of sixteen years (B C. 742-726) from the death of Jotham to the accession of Hezekiah —William Smith.

We may assume with the title that the various contents of the book arose before the vision of the prophet between the years 758 and 752 B. C. in the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah; but, with Jeremiah, that under Hezekiah, somewhere near the close of his labors, he wrote out what was of permanent value in his several discourses, and published it as a perpetual testimony —Paul Kleinert.

[From International Quarterly.]

The Prophet Micah came from Moresheth, a town in the southwestern part of Judah, near to Gath (chap. 1:1, 14) in the maratime plain of Judah, called Shapelah. He prophesied during the reign of three kings, from 758 to 698 B. C. (chap. 1:1). Hosea and Nahum were his cotempories in Israel, and Isaiah in Judah. The history of this period may be found in 2 Kings chapter 17. The wickedness was very great, and God, through his prophets, denounced the sins and pronounced judgment upon the people, promising also their recovery and blessing. The restoration from Babylon was but a type, and the prophet goes on to speak of the coming of the Babe of Bethlehem, and his rejection, and also his subsequent reign and their deliverance. The name "Micah" is the shortened form of Micaiah, which signifies "who is like Jehovah."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO. THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1879

"The Churchless."

The Independent, April 24th, has an able article on "reaching the churchless" thousands, who are the vast majority in our cities. The writer praises Moody and Sankey's work as a specialty, but impossible to make permanent. He finds two halls filled weekly to hear laymen preach, and a full weekly prayer-meeting in connection, and thinks there may be light and hope for the masses growing up heathen, in the method of these meetings.

Let us suggest another method. Let Mr. Moody come to Chicago and preach in Chicago Avenue church a whole sermon on the lodge-system of this country and the world. Let his sub-evangelists, Whittle and others, do likewise. They will be sure to have large audiences for a time at least. Let them go on as Christ and the apostles did, telling the people plainly what coming out and being separate from the world means, and since the Bridegroom is evidently and confessedly departing from the churches, let us all fiulfil the Scripture: "Then shall they fast in those days;" and when the Holy Ghost is poured out, "the multitude" always did and always will "come together."

Sixteen hundred able bodied men attended the Illinois Grand Lodge meeting for days in McCormick Hall, Chicago; and danced with Masonic women from all parts of the State at night. How many of these men are "churchless" we have no means of knowing. But a report awhile since, given at a mission school of the First Congregational church, Chicago, stated that the committee had found forty-five women ready to join a mission church whose husbands were unconverted. They probably attended the lodges; and men "cannot partake of the cup of of the Lord and the cup of devils" at the same time, and as a rule will not attempt it.

New "Willows by the Water Courses."

I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground. * * And they shall spring up as among the grass, as willows by the water courses. One shall say, I am the Lord's. * * Another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord.—Isa. 44: 3-5.

Rev. J. T. Michael, New Jersey, sends us two printed tracts with request to print or notice them. The first is entitled "A Call for Reform" of the M. E. church, in which the writer is a minister, and consists of a forcible statement of the "Difference between the Discipline and practice of the M. E. church." In this tract of eight pages, besides other discrepancies between the Discipline and practice, put with clearness and force, the writer says: "Freemasons may be bishops, presiding elders, and preachers in charge, but it is impossible for them to act according to the doctrines of Holy Scriptures as set forth in the articles of religion of the M. E. church," and at the same time to "conform to all the ancient usages and established customs of the fraternity. All Masonic Methodist Episcopal ministers, however, have promised to do so."

Rev. Mr. Michael's second tract of like size and form is entitled, "The Methodist Episcopal church and Freemasonry," and is written with clearness, ability and in a Christian spirit.

The above news will come to the hearts of Bro. Geo. W. Needles of Albany, Gentry county, Missouri, and his M. E. coadjutors in that State, like cold waters to a thirsty soul, while the veterans Woodruff Post, Hard, Jordan, Yant and others will hail it with equal delight. We know not when the promise of God given by Isaiah 4: 3, 4, has been so forcibly and joyously brought to our minds, as by the reception of these tracts and the letter accompanying them, in which Bro. Michael says: "I am trying to bring the subject of reform before the people of New Jersey," and he asks for our subscribers' names and post offices in that State. As yet little has been done in New Jersey against the lodge.

The tracts above noticed can be bought at the rate of ten pages for one cent by forwarding money or postal order to the writer, Rev. J. T. Michael, Milford, N. J.

Bro. Michael adds a foot note saying he is willing to lecture on "Freemasonry and the Christian Church," whenever the way is opened. We would suggest that Dr. McCosh of Princeton College, New Jersey, and some of the professors under him might lend aid to a Methodist minister wishing to lecture in that State; and, if desired, we will communicate with him on the subject. Meantime let brethren Hard, Burch, Yant, Needles and others write to this brother and give him their God speed.

A Life of Rare Christian Excellence.

Mrs. Roby T. Merrill, wife of Rev. David F. Newton, was born in the city of Hartford, Connecticut, in June, 1800, and died March 1, 1879. Seldom has a life so diversified been so constantly filled with all goodness as that of this excellent woman. She became a Christian in early life, and, by the death of her mother, was called to the supervision of the family of five children, in which station she blended the characteristics of sister and mother with admirable constancy, good judgment and success. All the children became and continued consistent Christians. They were connected with the Sixth Presbyterian church of Cincinnati while I was its pastor, at the time when Christian opposition to slavery made its professers objects of persecution from many, and of aversion to almost all the American people. It never seemed to this family that a Christian could be any thing else than an Abolitionist, and their candor and intelligence challenged and secured for them the respect of those who hated their principles.

Roby was engaged in teaching for several years, and regardless of opposition or aversion she always opened her schools with reading the Bible and prayer. She believed with the Duke of Wellington that "To educate men without religion is but to make them clever devils." While teaching in Canada, in addition to week-day instructions, she taught Sabbath school, and a work of grace commenced in her rooms thrown open to religious worship, which spread throughout the region and brought a multitude into the service of Christ.

At Cincinnati she was married to Rev. David F. Newton, and they opened a seminary in Covington, Kentucky; and though at that time hatred of abolition and Abolitionists was at its height they seemed blessed with success as if they bore a charmed existence. While in Covington they buried their twin infants, the only children they ever had. Here also they started the Christian paper, the Golden Rule, which was kept up by seeming miracle for seventeen years. Reformatory in everything; against slavery, yet issued in a slave State; opposed to sects or denominations, and consequently having no sect to lean on; severe on extravagance in dress, yet unlike the early Quakers, without the power of a uniform; and without ridiculous extremes and oddities of attire, how such a paper could live as it did, where it did, and when it did is still an unsolved mystery to those of us who knew Mr. and Mrs. Newton at that time. Covington was about the last spot on earth which human wisdom would have chosen for such a purpose. Yet the paper lived, did good, and still lives united with the Earnest Christian. The wrath of the slave-power, however, was finally aroused, and their lives and property threatened by mobs. But they came out of the furnace unsinged; loving each other all the better for the sickness and trials they had passed through. They went out, knelt together beside the graves of their twin babes and bid adieu to Covington.

They lived afterward on Twentieth street, New York city, where they kept a "Christian boarding-house" remembered by multitudes of God's children for its agreeable and hallowed associations. During all this time her husband kept at work with his pen. He published a variety of small volumes and an almost countless number of tracts, which Mrs. Newton distributed in her missionary labors. Her husband still survives this excellent saint, and still writes as he has done through his long life, as though every word written was winged for the day of judgment.

Mrs. Newton's sorest trials were her last. Paralyzed by a fall on the sidewalk in New York, she lost even her power to read her blessed Bible; and she who had through a long life ministered to others felt a pang at being compelled to be ministered to by others. But her soul became calm when she thought of and repeated the words: "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" And so she fell asleep. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

United Brethren.

We are in receipt of the pamphlet minutes of East Pennsylvania conference which met in Lebanon county, Pa., March 12, 1879, containing the following marks of incipient disunion within this denomination:

1. These minutes were printed, not at the Telescope office, on the press owned by the church, but at the Itinerant office, Harrisburg, Pa.

2. While the Telescope is barely once mentioned in a list with other matters in the report on publishing interests, the Itinerant has given to it a whole paragraph and is lauded as "furnishing an excellent medium of communication for the furtherance of our church, educational and conference interests, and deserves our unanimous support." This is the paper which the Dayton nullification convention proposed to remove to Dayton and issue by the side (outside) of the Telescope and church printing house.

3. Besides this fulsome laudation of the small monthly Itinerant, as in reality, the organ of the church and its interests, one whole page of the cover is devoted to the same sheet which is there called, "Our paper." Yet if the Cynosure should say, what all unbiased people see, that they are endeavoring to supplant the Telescope and revolutionize the church, men guilty of attempting such a thing in the interest of the lodge would have cheek enough to deny it!

4. While there were special reports on the Sabbath, temperance, etc., not a resolution, sentence or syllable was given to the reform from secret societies, with which the church is now struggling. "Our not-doings are our darkest deeds." In the present state of sentiment, the leaders of that conference know very well that they are taking the strongest possible course to shield, strengthen and support the lodge.

Last, but not least, we find adopted the following:

"We have good reasons to regard the Christian Cynosure, published at Chicago, Ill., and edited by Rev. J. Blanchard, as unreliable, and as exerting an influence that is detrimental to the peace and harmony of our beloved Zion. We would therefore express our disapprobation of United Brethren giving it their support, and would ignore its pretended friendship to our church."

This is cool wickedness. While holding and approving a nullification convention, and defying the authority and rules of their "beloved Zion," they censure the Cynosure for disturbing its peace and harmony by sustaining the anti-secrecy rule! And while uttering no word to keep their members out of the lodges, they censure their members for taking the Cynosure! If they could silence or supplant the Telescope and exclude the Cynosure, they would have the Brethren church turned into a graveyard of discussion and it would not be long before the lodge would reign without a rival over that denomination. But there is too much light and love of Christ in that body to allow him to be thus "wounded in the house of his friends."

—We learn with pleasure that in a thriving railroad village some twenty-nine miles from this city no lodge exists, though at times its organization has been threatened This is largely the result of the quiet but persistent efforts of a reader of the Cynosure, who has wisely used his opportunities to dissuade his neighbors from having any participation in Freemasonry. An example that might be followed in many places.

—Bro. A. M. Paull of Providence, R. I., has sent a paper of great value on the Templars of Honor and Temperance, a temperance order a trifle more Masonic than the "Sons" or "Good Templars." It will duly appear. An exposition of this order is needed.

—Elder Austin discusses a most important topic on our second page. In the year 1876 there were 17,000 Masons reported who were in the condition of non-affiliation, under suspension for non-payment of dues and neglect of the order. This number is not growing smaller; but what is needed is the Spirit of God with power to incline these friends and neighbors disgusted with Masonry to take up the cross and follow Jesus in the way of self-denial and of victory. This should be more directly sought after. Pray for it, talk about it in prayer meeting. Let us have a movement akin to that inaugurated by Mr. Moody, for the rescue and salvation of men from the sin of drunkenness. So let us by God's grace help men to forsake the alars of Baal, to confess and renounce the sin of lodgery.

—Bro. J V. Baker shows in the American Freeman how the Grand Lodge of Missouri falsifies its reports in order to show an increase in the number of Freemasons in the State. The total footings showed in 1878 a gain of 1,076; but a careful examination shows that the actual number was only 66. He also shows from the Grand Lodge reports how two applications for relief were refused by the Grand Lodge in 1877, because "of the financial state of the Grand Lodge"; when they were paying $1200 for printing their proceedings, $600 for office rent for the Grand Secretary and $3,000 for the salary of that official, and had beside $3,743 in the treasury.

—In the last issue of the Christian Ensign, Bro. J. T. Hobson, its editor and publisher, announces its discontinuance. We shall be sorry to lose this bright and earnest monthly from our table and hope the suggestion of a correspondent on another page will be carried out. Bro. Hobson is ready for the lecture work, and as the Indiana State Association recommended him as an assistant State Lecturer, let the Indiana friends see to it that he be kept at work.

—A card from Bro. Stoddard a day later than his letter says he hopes this week to arrange for a meeting and complete the State organization, but of course a strong State meeting with a general representation is more than he expects at present.

—The younger members of the Faculty at Wheaton are arranging to hold a summer Normal School in the College during the long vacation beginning June 19th. They have issued very attractive circulars to which we would call the attention of teachers and those expecting to teach. Nowhere, it is believed, can so much useful and valuable information be obtained for proficiency in the work of teaching and at so small an expense as at Wheaton. Prof. E D. Bailey will answer any inquiries.

"FREEMASONRY ILLUSTRATED."

This work of which 500 pages are now electrotyped, the publishers expect to have completed in June.

The complete volume, comprising the seven degrees of the lodge and chapter, will contain about 600 pages, with some 400 foot notes consisting of extracts from the standard published works of Mackey, Sickels, Chase and other Sovereign Grand Inspectors General, 331 degree, the supreme rulers of the lodge in this country, confirming the truthfulness of the exposition as well as giving an accurate statement of Masonic doctrine. The accuracy of the exposition is legally attested by competent witnesses and the work will be profusely illustrated. The historical sketch, introduction and analysis of the degrees by Pres. Blanchard are an important feature of the work.

The first three degrees can be had separately.

Those who send orders with cash before the book is issued will receive them at the following remarkably low rates, post paid:

Complete Volume (about 600 pages)	Cloth	75 cts.
" " " " " "	Paper	40 "
First Three Degrees (nearly 400 pages)	Cloth	50 "
" " " " " "	Paper	30 "

After July first the price will be higher.

As a specimen of the work the analysis of the Opening Ceremonies of the Second and Third Degrees is given herewith; and in future numbers of the paper other portions will be given showing how effectively, as notes, extracts from standard Masonic works may be used in confirming the exposition:

As we have already said on page 32, in the brief space of six or eight years, from 1826 to 1832–4, 2,000 Masonic lodges fell into popular contempt. Of these, fifteen hundred went down, and of fifty or sixty thousand Masons, some forty-five thousand left their lodges forever. The system has arisen in silence, and returned to power without noise. It has trebled or quadrupled the number of its lodges, and multiplied its members tenfold. It has conquered reason without argument, and monopolized office without a party. It has formed no parties of its own, for its purpose is to control all parties; and it has thus been enabled to set aside the laws enacted for its suppression, without even asking their repeal. It has left them dead on the statute book; and like the upas tree of Malay, it now covers the soil of the United States with its shoots, and darkens both religion and politics with its shadows.

If the considerate reader will pause and ponder the three lodge openings here accurately given, he will be able at least to begin the solution of the questions perpetually recurring, What is Freemasonry; and where is "the hiding of its power?" For a system of such fearful energy must be self-consistent, and contain, in its opening, the key-note of its tune.

The careful reader of these openings has noticed that the Masonic building is considered a temple, and the Master Mason's lodge-room the "holy of holies." The first prayer proclaims that they are met in the name of their god, and desire to do all in his name that they do while together. He has further noticed, that all uninitiated people, however worthy, are, in lodge language "profane," which means, outside of their temple; that the Bible, or some book deemed holy, lies on an altar in their midst; and that four of their officers' names, viz: Wardens and Deacons, are taken from a modern church, centuries since Solomon; that the Senior Warden says he came "from a lodge of a holy Saints John at Jerusalem" (which lodge never had any existence); and the prayer asks admission for lodge men to the temple "eternal in the heavens," as a result of their "discordant passions" being subdued by "the sublime principles of Freemasonry." Thus, before the candidate enters the lodge "in the name of the Lord," and before he declares his trust to be "in God," the opening ceremonies declare Freemasonry to be a system of religion, invented by men, and so anti-Christ.

The reader will also observe, in the openings, a careful exclusion of Christ, the only Mediator and "Way" of access for a human being to his God. He will observe, too, the studied, systematic and persevering concealment, practiced in the lodge; excluding even brethren of a lower degree, which is against Christ's example, who taught nothing in secret, (John 18:20) and against his precept (Matt. 10: 27); and as every heathen god and shrine had its secret instruction, while Christ had none, the openings declare Masonry to be heathen, and not Christian.

Notice, too, the incessant appeals to terror from the first act to the last. No brother can leave the lodge, or go to the door of an errand and return, without twice going to the altar and making his sign, which is a repetition of his consent to have his "throat cut," his "left breast torn open," or his "body cut asunder" through his bowels, the philosophy of which is this: As the lodge is to divorce men from God and goodness and ally them to Satan, in whose realm there is no motive but terror to bind men (i. e. no moral obligation), the lodge supplies and perpetually appeals to that motive. Thus the propellant underlying motive which keeps the lodge together and supports its economy, is a heathen and not a Christian motive, which is not terror, but love. By this, too, the openings proclaim the lodge to be heathenism, simple and pure.

Finally, as thieves, burglars, pickpockets, seducers, and murderers, practice tricks and inventions to disarm caution and put their victims off their guard; and as Satan's object and end are morally the same with those of other liars and murderers; his methods are the same. Hence the multitude of stupid and meaningless ceremonies which make up the routine of all false religions, these lodge openings included. These answer three main ends, viz: 1st, They disarm caution and suspicion by giving the appearance of harmless frivolity and superstition. 2d, They put the minds of the victims in an attitude of receptivity for spirit influence; and 3d, They put the victims off their guard and keep them busy while their natures are defiled by the mesmerism of Satan; their consciences debauched; their minds slowly blinded, and their hearts gradually hardened and sealed to Satan. See 2 Cor. 4:4: "In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not" (that is, by idolatry); and also Rom 1; 21: "Their foolish heart was darkened," by the same means, viz: idolatrous worships, as above. In every act of idolatrous worship there is the touch of a moral torpedo.

Thus, not dimly or doubtfully, but obviously and plainly, these opening ceremonies, being spiritually soul prostitution like literal harlotry their scripture emblem and type, are a way to hell, leading to the chambers of death (Prov. 7; 27). And the whole history of idolatry shows that these acts of spurious worship create a craving, and leave a benumbing and foul sediment in the soul which nothing but the blood of Christ can wash out.

And this craving causes that "penchant for more degrees," lamented by older and more rational Masons, as C. Moore, Esq., in the Voice of Masonry, February, 1879, Art. "Parasite Degrees." Hence, also, the almost literal fulfillment of the symbolic flood which the Dragon casts out of his mouth in the deluge of new secret orders now infesting Christendom, to drown out the sun-clothed, star crowned woman, who is the symbol of Christian religion. (Rev. 12: 15.)

THE REFINER.

'Tis sweet to think that he who tries
The silver takes his seat
Beside the fire which purifies,
Lest too intense a heat,
Raised to consume the base alloy,
The precious metal, too, destroy.

'Tis good to think how well he knows
The silver's power to bear
The ordeal through which it goes;
And that with skill and care
He'll take it from the fire when fit,
With his own hands to polish it.

'Tis blessedness to know that he
The piece he has begun
Will not forsake till he can see
The gracious work well done—
An image by its brightness shown,
The perfect likeness of his own.

But ah! how much of earthly mold,
Dark relics of the mine,
Lost from the ore, must be beheld!
How long must he refine,
Ere in the silver he can trace
The faint resemblance of his face!

Thou great Refiner! sit thou by
Thy purpose to fulfill;
Moved by thine hand, beneath thine eye,
And melted at thy will.
Oh may thy work forever shine,
Reflecting beauty pure as thine.

THE COVENANTER'S BAPTISM.

The rite of baptism had not been performed for several months in the kirk of Lanark. It was now the hottest time of persecution; and the inhabitants of that parish found other places in which to worship God, and celebrate the ordinances of religion. It was now the Sabbath day,—and a small congregation of about a hundred souls, had met for divine service, in a place more magnificent than any temple that human hands had ever built to Deity. The congregation had not assembled to the toll of the bell,—but each heart knew the hour and observed it; for there are a hundred sun-dials among the hill, woods, moors, and fields; and the shepherd and the peasant see the hours passing by them, in sunshine and shadow.

The church in which they were assembled was hewn by God's hand, out of the eternal rock. A river rolled its way through a mighty chasm of cliffs, several hundred feet high, of which the one side presented enormous masses, and the other corresponding recesses, as if the great stone girdle had been rent by convulsion. The channel was overspread with prodigious fragments of rocks or large loose stone, some of them smooth and bare, others containing soil and verdure in their their rents and fissures, and here and there, crowned with shrubs and trees. The eye could at once command a long-stretching vista, seemingly closed and shut up at both extremities by the coalescing cliffs. This majestic reach of river contained pools, streams, and water-falls innumerable; and when the water was low—which was now the case, in the common drought—it was easy to walk up this scene with the calm, blue sky overhead, an utter and sublime solitude.

On looking up, the soul was bowed down by the feeling of that prodigious height unscalable, and often overhanging cliff. Between the channel and the summit of the far extended precipices, were perpetually flying rooks and wood pigeons, and now and then a hawk, filling the profound abyss with their wild cawing, deep murmur, or shrilly shriek. Sometimes a heron would stand erect and still, on some little stone island, or rise up like a white cloud along the black walls of the chasm and disappear. Winged creatures alone could inhabit this region. The fox and the wild-cat chose more accessible haunts. Yet, here came the persecuted Christians and worshiped God, whose hand hung over their head those magnificent pillars and arches, scooped out those galleries from the solid rock, and laid at their feet the calm water, in its transparent beauty, in which they could see themselves sitting in reflected groups, with their Bibles in their hands.

Here upon a semi-circular ledge of rocks, over a narrow chasm of which the tiny stream played in a murmuring waterfall and divided the congregation into two equal parts, sat about one hundred persons, all devoutly listening to their minister, who stood before them on what might well be called a small natural pulpit of living stone. Up to it there led a short flight of steps, and over it waved the canopy of a tall, graceful birch tree. The pulpit stood in the middle of the channel, directly facing the congregation, and separated from them by the clear, deep, sparkling pool, into which the scarce heard water poured over the blackened rock. The water, as it left the pool, separated into two streams, and flowed on each side of that altar, thus placing it in an island, whose large mossy stones were richly embowered under the golden blossoms and green tresses of the broom.

Divine service was closed, and a row of maidens, all clothed in purest white, came gliding off from the congregation, and crossing the stream on some stepping stones, arranged themselves at the foot of the pulpit, with the infants about to be baptized. The fathers of the infants, just as if they had been in their own kirk, had been sitting there during worship, and now stood up before the minister. The baptismal water, taken from the pellucid pool, was lying, consecrated, in a small hollow of one of the upright stones that formed one side of the pulpit, and the holy rite proceeded. Some of the younger ones in that semi-circle, kept gazing down into the pool, in which the whole scene was reflected; and now and then, in spite of the grave looks, and admonishing whispers of their elders, letting fall a pebble into the water, that they might judge of its depth, from the length of time that elapsed before the clear air-bells lay sparkling on the agitated surface. The rite was over, and the religious service of the day closed by a psalm. The mighty rocks hemmed in the holy sound, and sent it in a more compact volume, clear, sweet, and strong up to heaven. When the psalm ceased, an echo, like a spirit's voice, was heard dying away, high up among the magnificent architecture of the cliff; and once more might be noticed in the silence, the reviving voice of the waterfall.

Just then, a large stone fell from the top of the cliff into the pool, a loud voice was heard, and a plaid was hung over on the point of a shepherd's staff. Their wakeful sentinel had descried danger, and this was his warning. Forthwith the congregation rose. There were paths, dangerous to unpracticed feet, along the ledges of the rocks, leading up to several caves and places of concealment. The more active and young assisted the elder—more especially the old pastor and the women with the infants; and many minutes had not elapsed, till not a living creature was visible in the channel of the stream, but all of them were hidden, or nearly so, in the clefts and caverns.

The shepherd, who had given the alarm, had lain down again instantly in his plaid on the green-sward, upon the summit of these precipices. A party of soldiers was immediately upon him, and demanded what signals he had been making and to whom; when one of them looking over the edge of the cliff, exclaimed, "See, see! Humphrey, we have caught the whole tabernacle of the Lord in a net, at last. There they are, praising God among the stones of the river Mouss. These are the Cartland Craigs. By my soul's salvation, a noble cathedral!" "Fling the lying sentinel over the cliffs. Here is a canting Covenanter for you, deceiving honest soldiers on the very Sabbath day. Over with him, over with him; out of the gallery into the pit." But the shepherd had vanished like a shadow, and mixing with the tall, green broom and bushes, was making his unseen way toward a wood. "Satan has saved his servant; but come my lads; follow me, I know the way down into the bed of the stream, and the steps up to Wallace's cave. They are called 'kittle nine stanes' The hunt's up. We'll all be in at the death. Halloo—my boys—halloo!"

The soldiers dashed down a less precipitious part of the wooded bank, a little below the "Craigs," and hurried up the channel. But when they reached the altar where the old gray-haired minister had been seen standing, and the rocks that had been covered with people, all was silent and solitary—not a creature to be seen. "Here is a Bible dropped by some of them," cried a soldier, and with his foot, spun it away into the pool. "A bonnet—a bonnet," cried another, "now for the pretty, sanctified face, that rolled its demure eyes below it." But after a few jests and oaths, the soldiers stood still, eyeing with a kind of mysterious dread, the black and silent walls of the rocks that hemmed them in, and hearing only the small voice of the stream that sent a profounder stillness through the heart of that majestic solitude.

"Curse these cowardly Covenanters—what if they should tumble down upon our heads pieces of rock, from their hiding places? Advance? or retreat?" There was no reply; for a slight fear was upon every man. Musket or bayonet could be of little use to men obliged to clamber up rocks, along slender paths, leading they know not where. And they were aware that armed men, now-a-days, worshiped God; men of iron hearts, who feared not the glitter of the soldier's arms—neither barrel nor bayonet; men of long stride, firm step, and broad breast, who on the open field, would have overthrown the marshalled line, and gone first and foremost, if a city had to be taken by storm.

As the soldiers were standing together irresolute, a noise came upon their ears like distant thunder, but even more appalling: and a slight current of air, as if propelled by it, passed whispering along the sweet briers, and the broom, and the tresses of the birch trees.

It came deepening and rolling and roaring on; and the very Cartland Craigs shook to their foundations, as if in an earthquake. "The Lord have mercy upon us—what is this?" And down fell many of the miserable wretches on their knees, and some on their faces, upon the sharp-pointed rocks. Now, it was like the sound of myriads of chariots rolling on their iron axles, down the strong channel of the torrent. The old, gray-haired minister issued from the mouth of Wallace's cave, and said in a loud voice, "The Lord God terrible reigneth!" A waterspout had burst up among the moorlands and the river, in its power, was at hand. There it came—tumbling along into that long reach of cliffs, and in a moment filled it with one mass of waves. Huge, agitated clouds of foam rode on the surface of a blood-red torrent.

An army must have been swept off by that flood. The soldiers perished in a moment—but high up in the cliffs above the sweep of destruction, were the Covenanters—men, women and children, uttering prayers to God, unheard by themselves, in the raging thunder.—Wilson.

BRITISH AND AMERICAN DRINKING.

Mr. William Saunders writes to an English journal that he has put to the test of actual comparison the statement that the use of intoxicating liquors is much less frequent in the United States than in England. According to a detailed statement supplied to Mr. Nimmo, the Chief of the Statistics at Washington, the consumption of alcoholic liquors in the United States during the year 1877 represents, quoting the prices at the average retail cost, in the States, a sum of £113 256 958, more than $500 000,000. From the recently issued excise returns for the United Kingdom last year, quoting the prices at the average retail cost, was £142,008,231. Reckoning, however, the American quantities at English prices. Mr. Saunders finds that the £113,256,958 is reduced to £93,114,278. Taking, says the writer, the population of the United States at 45 000 000, and the consumption at £93 000 000 sterling, we see that a pro rata consumption of the United Kingdom, with a population of 33 000 000 would amount to £68 000,000 sterling, whereas the consumption is actually £142,000 000 sterling, more than $700 000 000, showing an excess of £74,000,000, and that the consumption of alcoholic liquors in the United Kingdom is more than double that of the same population in the United States. Since 1878 the consumption in the United States has diminished, whereas during the same period of time that of the United Kingdom has grown from £118 000 000 to 142 000 000. These facts have an important bearing upon severe international competition which is now taking place, and may with advantage be considered in connection with the necessitous condition of a large proportion of our population.

Kossuth's Presence of Mind.

Mr. Emerson compares Taylor with Kossuth in this gift of natural and unchecked oratory. I remember an incident that happened during the great Hungarian's progress through this country. In Madison, Indiana, he spoke in the church in which my step-father was the pastor. After his address in English the Americans were all turned out to make room for the Germans, but I climbed, boy like, from the parsonage yard through the church window and got a place on the steps of the high, old-fashioned pulpit, where, hanging over the balusters, I saw, rather than understood the wonderful oratory of Kossuth. The Germans were wrought up into a frenzy of excitement, but just as the speaker, depicting the coming liberty of Germany, had reached the summit of his tremendous declamation, and while the throng of Germans crowding every inch of the floor and galleries was swayed to and fro in excitement as by wind, a child held in the arms of a woman in the very middle of the church, took fright at the applause and began to scream so frantically as to render any further speaking impossible. It took some minutes to get the mother and child out of the jam; the break was depressing, and I felt very sure the speech was spoiled. As the child's voice at length went out into the open air, the disappointed and depressed audience turned to the orator, who swept his hand through the air and said vehemently in German:

"He may now cry for Germany but when he is old he will laugh!"

The lost ground was recovered by this single dash, and the audience was at white heat gain.

Childrens' Corner.

The Blind Boy.

It was blessed summer day,
The flowers bloomed—the air was mild,
The little birds poured forth their lay,
And everything in nature smiled.

In pleasant thought I wandered on
Beneath the deep wood's ample shade
Till suddenly I came upon
Two children who had thither strayed.

Just at an aged birch tree's foot
A little boy and girl reclined;
His hand in hers she kindly put,
And then I saw the boy was blind.

The children knew not I was near,
A tree concealed me from their view;
But all they said I well could hear,
And I could see all they might do.

"Dear Mary," said the poor blind boy,
"That little bird sings very long;
Say, do you see him in his joy,
And is he pretty as his song?"

"Yes, Edward, yes," replied the maid,
"I see the bird on yonder tree;"
The poor boy sighed, and gently said
"Sister, I wish that I could see!

"The flowers, you say, are very fair,
And bright green leaves are on the trees,
And pretty birds are singing there—
How beautiful for one who sees!

"Yet I the fragrant flower can smell,
And I can feel the green leaf's shade,
And I can hear the notes that swell
From those dear birds that God has made.

"So, sister, God to me is kind,
Though sight, alas! he has not given;
But tell me are there any blind
Among the children up in heaven?"

"No, dearest Edward, there all see—
But why ask me a thing so odd?"
"O, Mary, he's so good to me,
I thought I'd like to look at God!"

Ere long, disease his hand had laid
On that dear boy, so meek and mild;
His widowed mother wept and prayed
That God would spare her sightless child.

He felt her warm tears on his face,
And said, "O, never weep for me,
I'm going to a bright, bright place,
Where Mary says I God shall see!

"And you'll be there, dear Mary, too;
But, mother, when you get up there,
Tell Edward, mother, that 'tis you—
You know I never saw you here!"

He spoke no more, but sweetly smiled
Until the final blow was given—
When God took up the poor blind child,
And opened first his eyes in heaven!

"Jesus Wouldn't do it."

It was Sabbath morning, and as was our custom, the missionary-box was placed upon the breakfast table, for servants and children to give in their weekly offerings.

My little Blanch had tripped away to her nursery to fetch nurse's forgotten penny, and she lingered on the way down again.

I was wondering a little what could have delayed her, when a flushed little face appeared in the doorway, and two tear-filled eyes looked imploringly into my face.

"Come here, Blanch," said. "Where have you been? What has made you so long?"

"Oh mamma," said the little penitent, coming and standing before me in an attitude of deepest humility—"mamma, I went into your room to steal some pennies from your table to put into the missionary box, and—and—then I thought Jesus wouldn't do it, so I came running away, and I am so 'shamed to to think I thought of it!"

Dear little woman! Her chest was heaving, and the tears rained down her cheeks now as she buried her head on my shoulder, and I answered soothingly:

"I am so glad you thought of Jesus, darling. If you never do anything you do not think Jesus would do, you will be such a happy little girl. It was the Holy Spirit who made you think of Jesus."

Jesus wouldn't do it. What a lesson for all who love the Lord Jesus Christ! If Christian lives were regulated by this principle, how many things would be left undone that are now done; how clear and definite would be the life utterances of believers!

Reader, pause, and put a question in place of a statement—not "Jesus wouldn't do it," but, "What would Jesus do?" Are there not many times in the day when, thus bringing your deeds to the light that they may be made manifest that they are wrought in God, you would feel obliged to exclaim with my little daughter, "I'm so 'shamed to think I thought of it."—The Christian.

Thunder.

We could not remark the difference observable in the conduct of some children at the fashionable hotel recently, during a heavy thunder storm. The little ones, who with their nurses, had been enjoying the shade of the broad and cool piazza in the afternoon, still remained after the heavy drops came pouring down, and the heavens were rent asunder, as it would seem, by the artillery of the sudden storm. Many of the little children ran to their mammas or nurses, begged to go indoors, cried lustily and were evidently frightened "within an inch of their lives." But one group of brothers and sisters kept on at their play, seemingly indifferent to, or unconscious of, the state of the weather. They were engaged in "playing horse," and paid not the slightest attention to the lightning or thunder, until two little boys broke away from them and with white, scared faces, hid their faces in their mother's lap. One little girl followed them, evidently much aggrieved. "Why don't you tum and play?" she said, pulling the little fellow's jacket. "I can't, I'm afraid! Oh, hark at that!" with an expression of horror, as an unusually large bolt broke over our heads. The little girl gazed at his head with an indescribable mixture of expression which indicates astonishment, annoyance and contempt and said: "What you 'fraid of? Don't you know it's Dod does it!"—walking off with an injured air, to again join in the merry play. We smiled as we thought what a sensible and wise and good mother that child must have had. How infinitely superior was her simple faith to the boy's useless fear. She was happy and free and contented in the most fearful thunder storm of the season, and no doubt it was greatly owing to the manner in which she had been taught. To her dying day she will probably experience no timidity during a shower, and is thus relieved, beforehand, of those unpleasant and fruitless terrors which render people, even in old age, an annoyance to themselves and every less timid person about them. Golden Rule.

Boys Carrying Pistols.

A pistol is a very peculiar firearm; it is made for a very peculiar purpose. It is quite natural for some boys to want rifles or shot-guns, with which they may kill game; but a pistol is intended to kill human beings, and this is about all it is good for. There are very few boys in this country who could shoot a bird or a rabbit with a pistol, and any one who should go out hunting with a pistol would be laughed at. This being the case, why should a boy want a pistol? What human beings would he like to kill?

It is useless to say that he may need his pistol for purposes of defense. Not one boy in a thousand is ever placed in such a position that he may need defend himself with a pistol. But it often has happened that boys who carried loaded pistols thought that it would be a manly thing, under certain circumstances, to use them, and yet, when the time came and they killed somebody, they only brought down misery upon themselves and their families. And this, too, in many a case where, if no one present had had a pistol the affair would have passed off harmlessly and been soon forgotten.

But the way in which boys generally take human life with pistols is some accidental way. They do not kill highwaymen and robbers, but they kill their schoolmates, or their brothers, or their sisters, or, in many cases, themselves. There is no school where boys are taught to properly handle and carry loaded pistols, so they usually have to learn these things by long practice. And while they are learning, it is very likely that some one will be shot. I saw in a newspaper, not long ago, accounts of three fatal accidents, all of which happened on the same day, from careless use of fire-arms. And one of these dreadful mishaps was occasioned by a lad who carried a loaded pistol in his overcoat pocket, and who carelessly threw down the coat.

And then, again, a boy ought to be ashamed to carry a pistol, especially a loaded one. The possession of such a thing is a proof that he expects to go among vicious people. If he goes into good society, and has honest, manly fellows for his companions, he will not need a pistol. A loaded pistol in a boy's pocket is not only useless and dangerous, but also it almost always stamps him as a bad boy, or one who wishes to associate with bad boys and vicious men.—St. Nicholas

Can Dogs Read?

Some years ago a man named Walker was the post-rider between New Haven and Naugatuck. Every Thursday he carried the New Haven weekly papers on his route and left them to subscribers on the way. At Woodbridge he had been in the habit of leaving the Palladium for one family whose dog always stood ready by the side of the road to receive the paper as he drove by, thus rendering it wholly unnecessary for the driver to leave his seat. One day all the Palladiums had been sold before Woodbridge was reached, so, supposing it would make no difference with the subscriber, Mr. Walker threw a Register to the dog. The brute grabbed it, but instantly dropped it, shook his head, barked, and jumped over the fence into his yard, as much as to say "you can't put off any such paper on me," nor could he be induced to go back after the paper. Of course in the neighborhood there was a great laugh at the Register's expense, for it was declared that its politics were so abominable that even a dog wouldn't touch it; but the explanation may not be difficult. The heading of the two papers were very different, and plainly to be seen, and it may be that in that way the dog knew the wrong paper had been given him.—New Milford Ray.

THE CHURCH AT COLLEGE SPRINGS, IOWA, PROVOKE A RESOLUTION.

COLLEGE SPRINGS, Iowa, April 29, 1879.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The Congregational Church at this place has, since its organization, borne testimony against secrecy. It is the fourth one in your list of free mission churches. It retains its membership in the Council Bluffs Association. This association, like most others, is divided in opinion on the anti-secret reform. It has, however, once at least, in past years, borne a mild testimony, under the influence of father Barker, who fought a good fight on this question, as well as others. Recently this association held its annual meeting at Shenandoah, in this county. A memorial was sent by this church, reciting our declaration, and asking an expression from the body, whether it was right or wrong. The response is given below. It is not altogether what we desired. It is not a full answer to our question. We wished them to approve our position, or point out a more excellent way. Yet, on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread, we are glad that so much has been said. It should be said that the "secondly" passed by a mere majority of one, the others were passed by a nearly unanimous vote. May the right prevail.

H. AVERY.

RESPONSE.

Resolved, That the following be entered upon the minutes of the Association:

1. That we sympathize with the devotion of the brethren at Amity to a cherished principle.

2. That we are in substantial accord with them in objecting to secret oath bound orders.

3. We recommend that ministers and Christians generally bear testimony against the evils of secret societies, in the ways best calculated, in their judgment, in each case, to create a right sentiment upon the subject.

—On Sabbath at the regular communion service in the College church, in Wheaton, two Armenian converts were received into membership on profession of their faith. That nationality has now four young men and women connected with this church.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Wilmington, Delaware, Methodist Conference passed, by a unanimous vote, resolutions condemning trafficking on camp grounds on Sunday. One of the ministers stated that attending a holiness camp-meeting not long ago, he found ice-cream and photographic saloons and barber shops in full blast on the Sabbath, and that, too, with the permit of the manager, who was a professor of holiness. His defense was that he wanted to raise some money to add to preachers' salaries.

—The Philadelphia M. E. Conference at its late meeting adopted strong resolutions of sympathy with the great work of the National Reform Association.

—The New England Methodist Episcopal Conference has voted 85 to 49 against holding camp-meetings on Sunday.

—The Methodist Society have made arrangements for missionary work in the interior of Africa. Mr. Osgood, who is now in Africa, will locate a mission-post somewhere in the interior, and Miss Mary A. Sharp will soon leave this country for work there.

—Rev. J. T. Michael has lately removed to Milford, New Jersey, where he may be addressed for lectures on the secret orders and their relation to Christianity. He has also prepared two tracts showing that the M. E church is by its discipline opposed to the lodge. Send for them.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

— A correspondent of the American Freeman, writes from Avalon, Mo., that the U. B. pastor and the principal of Avalon Academy have taken a decided stand for right and truth. He says:

"Recently Rev. Wm. Beauchamp read the secrecy clause to a good-sized audience in the academy chapel. He not only read with emphasis, but he proceeded to comment on the Christless nature and evil influence of secret societies. I am truly glad that one of Avalon's stationed preachers has had the courage to stand up for the principles of the U. B. church. However, the jacks and lodge had scarcely ceased to rail at brother Beauchamp before another shell was exploded in their already disturbed camp. On the eve of March the 30th Rev. C. J. Kephart, during his discourse, boldly and firmly arraigned the evil element and denounced it as unchristian and injurious to society and the Christian churches. He accused the ministry of gross sin in that many ministers enter these orders and thereby use their influence in behalf of the devil instead of using it for God and his cause. He also affirmed his belief that were all professing Christians to withdraw their influence from this element it would not survive more than a year."

—Bro. Wm. Dillon of Ohio was severely injured on a late Sabbath by being thrown from his buggy while returning from an appointment.

—The East Nebraska Conference met at Palo, York county, April 31, Bishop Wright presiding. The conference passed the following:

"Resolved, That we heartily indorse the action of the late General Conference on the question of secret societies, and hereby pledge ourselves to be true to our law and book of discipline, believing its principles to be founded upon the Word of God.

"Resolved, That we do most unqualifiedly disapprove of the course of our book agent in sending out circulars to secure pledges from our ministers against our present law on secrecy."

Rev. W. J. Shuey, the publishing agent at Dayton, has a card in the last Telescope regretting that his intention is misconstrued by the Nebraska brethren. The tract referred to contains a form of law which he wishes to lay before the next General Conference in 1881, and asks an opinion as to the plan. The brethren have a right, however, to question this method of changing a law adopted in a general meeting of the church after long discussion. What if every minister of the church should send out similar circulars, as they have as much right to do?

—The Board of Missions of the U. B church meets at Westerville, O., May 9th. Rev. J. L. Luttrell of Fort Wayne, preaches the annual sermon. All the bishops but Bishop Castle of California, are expected.

—The Cedar Rapids, Iowa, church, M. R. Drury, pastor, hope to build a new house of worship this summer. Since conference 59 have been received.

WESLEYAN.

—Rev. T. P. Stevenson, editor of the Christian Statesman attended the Syracuse Conference and presented the claims of the National Reform Association. The Conference voted to recommend the next General Conference to place a testimony on this reform in the book of discipline.

—Rev. R. J. George of the Covenanter church, Beaver Falls, Pa., presented the same at the Allegheny Conference, meeting at Damascus, O The recommendation of the Syracuse Conference was endorsed.

—Rev. G. M. Hardy, for some years pastor of the church at Seneca Falls, N. Y., has determined to leave pastoral work for the present for that of a missionary and evangelist. He is expecting to journey South.

—Rev. C. F. Hawley, now located at Wheaton, Ill., writes to the Wesleyan that he is now ready for work, and his purpose is "if the Lord will, to continue to labor in the Gospel as an evangelist. I mean to labor as God has ordained for the perfecting of the saints; for the conversion of the world and for the edifying of the church of Christ. I will work in quarterly meetings, or in four-day or ten-day holiness meetings, in church or grove. I will endeavor in all holiness meetings to prepare the way for successful revival effort. I will also, when the way is opened, lecture on the 'Religion of Masonry.' In these lectures I shall aim to show that friendship to Masonry is enmity to Christ, and therefore, whosoever will be the friend of Masonry is the enemy of Christ. I wish to aid the pastors in destroying the works of the devil and in building up the kingdom of Jesus."

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—At the late anniversary of the Theological Seminary at Allegheny City, Pa., five young men completed their course of preparation for the Gospel ministry. The whole attendance has been eighteen during the year. Professors Sproull, Sloane and Willson reported the favorable condition of the Seminary. An interesting incident of the anniversary was the presentation to the Seminary board by the students of a fine portrait of the late Dr. Willson for many years connected with the institution. An oration on the life and character of Dr. Willson was given by Dr. A. M. Milligan. Besides the portrait four companion pictures representing striking passages in the history of the Covenanter church were presented by Rev. David McFall of Boston and Mr. J. A. McKee of Pittsburgh.

—The location of Geneva College is yet an open question. The friends of the institution at Northwood, Ohio, where it is now located, have made a fine subscription to retain it, but the committee appointed by the annual Synod will leave the question open till the 20th of this month.

GENERAL.

—Major Whittle, who has been laboring in the East for the past year, has returned to Chicago. With Mr. McGranahan, his assistant in singing, he intends to commence work next Sabbath at the Moody church on the North Side, and will continue during the summer, or until such time as a pastor shall be chosen. Major Whittle and Mr. Moody are elders of the church.

—A mission-hall has been opened at Marseilles, France, in a district where thousands of workingmen meet every night. The religious meetings have been crowded.

—The Presbyterians of Australia propose to erect a church at Dillon's Bay, on the island of Eramanga, in memorial of John Williams and others who have fallen by violence in the South Seas, to be called the Martyr Memorial church of Eramanga.

—The council of the Evangelical Alliance announces that it is now definitely settled that the next, which will be the seventh, General Conference of Christians of all nations, will be held during the present year at Basle, Switzerland, beginning on August 31st, and continuing until September 7th.

—The American Missionary Association has decided to accept Mr. Arthington's proposition, accompanied with an offer of $15,000, to occupy a district in Central Africa. It is in a region accessible by the Nile, and steamers can be used on the Nile and its tributaries, so as to facilitate communications. The Association believes the opening to be a providential one, and it calls for a contribution of $35,000, which, added to the donation of Mr. Arthington, would make $50,000 to start the mission with. A force of about 10 missionaries would, it is thought, be required.

—Mr. Moody's sermons on restitution have more than once been like sharp arrows. The last instance is that of a Baltimore burglar. The office of a lawyer was recently broken into and robbed of a cash-box containing $60. Mr. Moody, about that time, preached a sermon on restitution, and the thief happened to hear it. He picked not a pocket; he took not a drink. He went to the lawyer's house and left with the servant a spool-cotton box carefully tied up and containing $40, accompanied by a letter stating that he had been seized with remorse, and would pay back the remaining $20 as soon as possible.

The Nihilists are a secret revolutionary society of Russia. One of their recent victims was a schoolboy—a lad of seventeen—studying in the Odessa Gymnasium, the son of a Polish gentleman named Zalewski, residing on his estate in Volnynia. This youth had been urged repeatedly by his fellow students to join the local Nihilist organization. Not only did he steadfastly refuse to do so, but, as threats were employed to extort his consent, he wrote to his father informing him of the persecution to which he was being subjected, and imploring him in the most piteous terms to take him away from Odessa, where his life was in peril from one hour to another. On receiving this despairing letter the father hastened to Odessa, intending to remove his son; but he arrived too late to save the boy's life Young Zalewski had been assassinated, and his corpse was awaiting burial when it was claimed by the distracted parent.—Telescope.

OBITUARY.

Stephen Bayles of Morning Sun, Iowa, died March 2, 1879, in his 78th year. Rev. C. D. Trumbull, his pastor, contributes the following sketch to the Reformed Presbyterian of Pittsburgh:

"He united in early life with the Associate Reformed church, in which he was brought up, and was chosen while still a young man to the office of ruling elder in a large congregation of that body. In middle life he became convinced that the position of the Reformed Presbyterian church on civil government and discipline was Scriptural and right. First he ceased to vote, then in 1842, though his pastor used every argument to dissuade him, he left the large and flourishing congregation in the midst of which he resided, of which nearly all his family connections were members and went nine miles to connect with a small congregation of Covenanters —the congregation of Brush Creek. Soon after he was chosen to bear rule in that congregation. He was subsequently connected with the congregations of First Miami, Second Miami, Hopkinton, Sharon, Lind Grove and lastly with Morning Sun. He was chosen elder in all these congregations except Second Miami and Sharon; in these there was no election of elders while he was a member. Very often he sat as a member of Synods and Presbyteries. From early life he was a strong anti-slavery man. Often at great risk he harbored the fleeing slave and helped him on his way to Canada. He was all his life opposed to secret societies. His testimonies against these and his efforts to advance the anti-secresy cause will not soon be forgotten by those who knew him."

News of the Week.

—Complaints from the Indian Territory of an invasion by the whites has reached such proportions that the matter was considered in the Cabinet meeting at Washington last Friday. In the history of that Territory there has been no such influx of white immigrants as this showing. The main stream comes down through Kansas. Secretary Schurz has information that hundreds of ready-made frame houses have been shipped from Chicago down into this Territory and put up by squatters, who propose to occupy and possess the surrounding lands as settlers. He also has a map showing the routes by which they get into the Territory, and in what sections most of the intruders are settling. The government has determined to put a stop to the invasion, and orders have been issued for stationing troops at points where the largest tide of travel enters the Territory. Such as have already entered and squatted will be expelled by force if necessary.

—The London Spectator says of the troubles in Egypt: "The people are simply being stripped of everything by the tax gatherers and this often under the bastinado. Men, women and children have been taken from their distant homes, and compelled on the cotton and sugar estates, to work in the mill-horse grind of compulsory labor, without pay, often almost without food" The present Viceroy has burdened his country with a debt of $400 000,000, being thirteen times as much as existed on his accession.

—Four years ago capital punishment was abolished in Switzerland. Crime has increased and especially that of murder, to such a degree that there has been a great reaction in public sentiment and a petition signed by over 30.000 persons, begs the Federal Council to re-enact the death penalty. The Council, after full investigation, have resolved that four years was insufficient to fully test the law. They account for the increase of crime not so much upon the fact that the law was changed as upon the large increase of poverty and wretchedness of the last four years.

—The Bulgarian nobles on Tuesday last elected Prince Alexander of Battenberg to the throne of Bulgaria. Prince Alexander is now about 56 years of age, and ranks as Field Marshal Lieutenant in the Austrian army; his sister, Maria, is the Empress of Russia. Both England and Russia had secretly a friendly interest in the candidacy of Prince Alexander, and he received the unanimous vote of the Assembly. He will take the title of Alexander I. of Bulgaria.

—A feeling of gloom prevails in St. Petersburg. The rigorous police regulations respecting the watching of houses and the visits and searches by night are to be made still more stringent. After 9 in the evening nobody will be at liberty to show himself in the street without a certificate, upon which must be written and attested the place from which the bearer comes, and to which he is going. General Gourka, Governor General, planned this ordinance. Soon it will not be necessary to light a candle before half past 9. Yet at 9 every one must be in-doors and after 10, as in barracks, every light must be out. Notwithstanding all this, insecurity in St. Petersburg increases every day. Grenades are exploded in the streets. The intention of the Nihilists is believed to be to keep the police in a state of constant excitement, tire them out, or lull them to sleep, with the idea that the danger has been exaggerated. They also reckon on the harsh measures and arrests producing discontent among many people, who, when the time comes for a grand attack on the government, would join the revolutionists.

—A dispatch from Calcutta says nearly a million pilgrims who assembled at the Hurdwar fair have carried cholera in different directions. Outbreaks of the disease are reported from Delhi, Wrumitzar, Rawulpendee, and elsewhere. Some cases have occurred among the European troops. It is asserted that of 80 000 persons who went to the fair from Cumaton, a quarter are missing. This mortality has been caused by the police forcing them to travel the desert tracks. It is probable the story is much exaggerated.

—The Bombay Government reports great distress imminent in the Deccan, because of the failure of the crops. Five thousand famine-stricken refugees from Kuttywar have entered Bombay.

THE EXODUS.

—It is estimated that, altogether, 8 600 colored immigrants have come to St. Louis from the South since the beginning of the exodus. Only 2 400 of that number have been able to pay their own fare to Kansas. The others have been furnished with free transportation by the Colored Immigrant Relief Committee.

—The Colored People's National Board of Immigration of St. Louis, of which Moses Dickson is President, has received information that several thousand negroes are now at different places along the banks of the Mississippi River, below Memphis, either ready to start North as soon as transportation can be procured, or preparing to leave their homes for St. Louis and beyond. One party of nearly one hundred is now at Lakeport Landing, Chicot county, Ark., almost destitute. It is said the steamers refused to take them on board and the whites in the vicinity refuse to sell them provisions. The committee here will endeavor to make arrangements for their removal. About two hundred refugees have been sent West since Saturday last. It is understood that Jay Gould has offered free transportation for them west of Kansas City, and they will probably go right on to Lawrence, Kansas.

—An Atchison, Kansas, dispatch of Friday, says: "Over 300 colored refugees from the South landed here to-day in a generally destitute condition. There being no vacant building in the city great difficulty was experienced getting them under shelter, but they were finally housed in colored houses. It is questionable whether many of them can be furnished with employment, as the demand for unskilled labor in this State is very limited. Their arrival was entirely unexpected, as they were originally destined for Leavenworth, but the authorities of that city paid their fare to this point and sent them on. Our citizens have provided for their temporary wants, but great suffering must result if this influx of totally destitute people to Kansas does not soon stop.

Home and Farm.

Farm Notes.

—Hatch your goslings early, in order that they may get the first bite of fresh grass.

—Evergreens look better when allowed to assume natural form, only using the shears to make the foliage more dense and to lop off irregularities. Artificial forms are stiff and ungraceful.

—The farmer who makes a large quantity of rich manure and applies it properly, cannot and will not fail of being successful. Per contra, the man who is careless on this point, though he may rise early and labor assiduously, is destined to failure and disappointment.

—Some attention is attracted to the cultivation of Egyptian corn in California. It is almost as heavy as wheat, and in the raw state is as palatable as hulled barley, which the white variety closely resembles. It is said to be much hardier than Indian corn.

—Thirty-five years ago a countryman left for Australia, taking with him all our popular hardy fruits and vegetables, but the produce was yearly destroyed, until the English sparrow was introduced, after which there was plenty of fruit. Waterton calculated that a single pair of sparrows destroyed as many grubs in one day as would have eaten up half an acre of young corn in a week.

—Mr McAfee, superintendent of the University of Wisconsin Experimental Farm, informs us that for three years past he has grown Lima beans without poles or stakes, by persistent pinching back after they reach the desired height—about that of common bunch beans. He is confident the crop is very perceptibly earlier and thinks it is increased in quantity—the plant being checked in growth of vine, expending its energy in fruit production. On the farm we saw some so treated that were well loaded.

A Good Word for the Pig.

Dr. Ballard, in a report which he sometime ago presented to an English Government Board on the "Effluvium Nuisances Arising in Connection with the Keeping of Animals," bears the following testimony in favor of the pig:

"When the pig wallows in mire he merely follows an instinct implanted in him in common with some other pachydermatous creatures, the object of which is cutaneous cleansing. The mud stands to him in the relation of soap to a human being, but instead of washing it off with water he allows it to cake and dry upon the skin, and then rubs it all off, mud and cutaneous debris together, upon some sufficiently rough surface. Loose hair and cutaneous scurf irritate him, and he takes his own way of cleansing his skin from them. Cleanse his skin for him and he will rest in contentment, without offending the eyes of his supercilious betters, often less scrupulous in this matter than he is, by his wallowings, scratchings and scrubbings. It has long been known that a pig thus cleaned with soap and water not only becomes less objectionable, but grows fat more speedily than if left to clean himself in his own way. Similarly as respects his own food. Garbage is not the food the pig selects by preference. In fact, a pig which has been fed for any time upon sweet food will turn away from sour and disgusting food. If left to pick up his living where he can find it, he will eat anything that he can find that is eatable, but even will eat acorns, fallen fruit, or roots, in preference to garbage; and human beings in similar straits will act precisely in the same way. It may be economical, and perhaps even desirable, to convert into pork matter which can in no other way, or in no way more convenient, be made subservient to the subsistence of mankind, and the pig is perhaps properly utilized in this manner. Our only desire is to vindicate his character as a cleanly feeder, if only he has the chance of cleanly feeding vouchsafed him."

Whitewashing Trees.—This old fashion probably originated with some tidy, thrifty Hollander whose stiff taste was pleased with the uniform whiteness. It is not, however, to be commended on the score of productiveness, and many a beautiful orchard is spoiled by the staring, unnatural appearance of its whitewashed trunks. The Germantown Telegraph says: "What we do know about it ourselves is that we do not think it makes much difference, so far as the health and productiveness of the trees are concerned whether they are whitewashed or not. In other words, we do not think it pays. It certainly has a tendency to close up the pores of the trunks, as well as that it also has an unnatural appearance. So far as it is declared that the whitewash causes the old bark to scale off and the hiding places of insects to be disturbed—and this is about all that is claimed for it—how much better for every farmer having an orchard to scrape the trees once a year or every other year, and follow it with a washing of whale oil soap or carbolic soap and water, applied with a short broom. This would be sure to dislodge the insects, open the pores of the trees and give them a natural, healthy appearance. This would do the work effectually, and leave no room for doubt or discussion. Whatever aid the whitewashing of trees may be to their health and productiveness, the best orchards we ever saw, which bore full crops for a generation, were not whitewashed, but scraped and washed with soft soap."

Neatness in Farming.—Nothing gives evidence of thrift and enterprise in farming better than keeping everything in order. There are times when even the most painstaking men are compelled to let things go somewhat at loose ends, but upon the first occasion of spare time and due diligence thereafter, the wonted appearance of things about the premises returns. At the cost of a little time and labor when required, the appearance of an untidy farm may be so improved as to add considerably to its value, and the price obtained in the event of its sale. The contrast between neat and slovenly kept farms represents more in a pecuniary point of view, very often, than is generally supposed. Take a farm which, by its appearance shows clear culture, from which stumps and bushes have been removed, the buildings kept in repair, the fences and gates in order, the rubbish kept from the roadside and fence corners, the tools housed when not in use, and the stock exhibiting evidence of good care and attention, and in the event of its purchase it will bring relatively much more than one equally fertile but kept in a slovenly way. Weedy fields, tumble down fences, gates with broken hinges, buildings out of repair, implements scattered about the farm where they were used last, rubbish everywhere, and the inferior looking stock, take from a farm naturally fertile, a good round sum in the event of a sale.

H. M. Woodford, Waverly, Bremer county, Iowa, who offered to send the Cynosure for one year to one hundred citizens of his county at fifty cents a year, he paying the dollar for each copy out of his own pocket, now offers to send the Cynosure for one year to twenty-five or less ordained ministers who live in the State of Iowa on receipt of fifty cents from each of them accompanied by name, and postoffice address. "This offer," Mr. W. writes, "includes Masons, Jack Masons, cowans and eavesdroppers provided they are ordained ministers," residing in the State of Iowa, and will hold good until June 1, 1879. This is a liberal offer. Will the Iowa friends immediately accept it and send on the names to Mr. H. M Woodford, Waverly, Bremer county Iowa, each one accompanied by fifty cents?

Mr. Woodford sends a club of twenty-six from Bremer county, making twenty-nine in all recently sent. He offered to furnish the Cynosure to 100 persons in his county at fifty cents a year. Do the citizens of Bremer county understand that they can get a $2 00 paper for fifty cents a year if they order promptly?

John Dunlap, Mt. Ayr, Iowa, sends four subscriptions for one year each.

S. P. Poole, Bellevue, Mich., sends two more names on his club and writes: "I hope to send some new names soon. Oh, that the Cynosure could be read by every intelligent man and woman in the land, and God being my helper, I intend to do all in my power to scatter the light of reform while I live."

J. S. Perham, Brookfield. Vt., is praying for the cause of reform in general and in particular for those actively laboring in it. Also that the Cynosure may have 10,000 subscribers.

—A council was called April 9th by the Park church and pastor, Hartford, Conn., to examine Nahabet Abdallian, a native of Turkey, with a view to his ordination for mission work in his country. After a long discussion on the expediency and propriety, ecclesiastically, of ordaining a foreigner to a foreign field, with no special responsibility to anybody, it was voted by a decided majority to ordain him.

—Some very troublesome questions come up frequently before the missionaries in foreign lands. The Presbytery of Sealkote, India, recently discussed the question of what should be done with converted natives having more than one wife. Shall a convert be compelled to put away a woman he had always supposed to be his lawful wife, sever a tender chord, and bring ruin on the woman? The Presbytery decided that "while it is clear that such persons are not eligible to office, yet, in the opinion of the Presbytery, there is nothing in the Bible to prevent their reception into church membership."

—Professor Samuel A King, æronaut, in his published communications as to a balloon voyage across the Atlantic, speaks confidently of his ability to make a balloon voyage of a month's duration, sufficient with a thirty-five mile breeze to circumnavigate the globe. The experiments in which he has been engaged almost exclusively for the last two years have demonstrated to his satisfaction that it is not only feasible to construct a balloon that will maintain the bulk of its lifting power, but that it is also easily practicable to keep it afloat and in transit for this length of time. Having satisfied himself on these important points, the Professor is conducting experiments preliminary to a voyage to Europe.

—John Brown, Jr., of Put-in Bay, Ohio, son of "Ossawattomie" Brown, in a letter published, declares his intention of volunteering his services to aid the colored refugees of the South. He has a plan of assisting emigration to Kansas and other Western States.

The Executive Committee want to hear from the friends on this subject, so that the call for next State meeting can be published in time. Friends, let us make this summer busy and profitable on reform work. Yours for reform.

Topics of the Time.

There is no religious intelligence more interesting than that respecting the circulation of the Word of God. Bible work means strong Christians and repenting sinners. So the brief record of the American Bible Society at its sixty-third annual meeting last Thursday in New York cannot fail to be of interest. There are now engaged in the Society's work in this country 168 superintendents, 98 county agents, and 5,929 volunteer Bible distributors. The receipts for the year were $462,274, an excess over the previous year of $15,320. During the year the whole Bible was translated into Turkish and portions of it into many other languages. During the year there were 1,266,958 Bibles manufactured, and of these 949,814 were issued at home and 238,040 abroad. The Society has during its sixty-three years of work issued 36,052,169 copies of the Holy Scriptures. Four hundred and forty-five thousand and thirty-four families were visited during the year —of what work can Americans be more justly proud?

President Hayes has been accused by the ring-masters of the Republican party of treachery because he made an effort to follow what good sense and judgment he had rather than be their performing monkey. But he is becoming revolutionized, and submissive. The Democratic scheme of attaching a so-called political measure to an appropriation bill was vetoed. Then the majority caucus got up an harmless looking measure to prevent military interference in elections, repealing the statutes permitting the use of army or navy at the polls, with a proviso that nothing contained in the measure should be construed as preventing the use of such force by the President when properly called on. This was first published by the Republican press as a backdown, and Mr. Hayes and his cabinet were reported as not unwilling to let it pass. The facts are there are hardly a hundred soldiers in the South that can be used for any such purpose, and it has been the studied effert of the opposition to weaken the army so there would be none to use against Southern bull-dozing. The possibility of Grant and a dictatorship is the only apparent excuse for so much debate over this matter. The caucus repeal bill is worth just as much as the obnoxious statutes to the present administration, and the President could have no excuse for putting his veto to it but the howls of the Republican managers. The repeal was passed amid a stormy scene last week and it is understood that a veto message would be sent in Tuesday. If President Hayes can be subservient to a Republican ring now, he may have been to the other side in years past more than many were willing to believe; and in the end he will sink into contempt with both and with the country.

Two important conventions were sitting last week. One at Vicksburg composed of leading men in the Southern Mississippi valley of both races; the other at Nashville of blacks alone. In both the great topic was the exodus. The Vicksburg meeting passed resolutions on the subject, declaring the proximate causes of this movement to be false and flattering reports from the North, violation of contracts, high price of necessary commodities, etc., and "apprehension on the part of many colored people" of the loss of their civil and political rights. The equality of the colored race under the law was recognized, and the convention pledged to protect that race against "fraud, intimidation or bull-dozing." The colored members took part in the debates but by agreement refrained entirely from voting in the convention. They consider its result to be a pledge on the part of the whites which they look to the next election to be tested. The Nashville meeting adjourned Saturday morning at 1 o'clock. Their resolutions favor the emigration, and accept the proffer of 20,000 acres of land by Benj. F. Butler and of one hundred homes by Senator Zach. Chandler. A check has been given to the exodus and a few even have returned to Mississippi, but it is undoubted by observing men that the wave will rise higher and higher. The Governor of Kansas is fully awake to the emergency, and a systematic effort will be made to put every colored immigrant in the way of self-support.

Paul did not stop preaching because all his converts did not hold out. Many of the converts even of Jesus, went back, "and went no more with him." If a man tumbles into the river are we to refuse to rescue him because he may fall in again?

A HYMN OF PRAISE.

BY ALEXANDER THOMPSON.

O King! whose ample hand
Each varied bliss bestows;
Who gives the oak his giant strength,
Her beauty to the rose;

Who makes the Spring return
Whon Winter's power has fled,
And all the floral glories burn
On Nature's mantle spread;

Who tunes the birds to sing
Among the leafy boughs,
And follows with his blessed rain
The labor of the plows;

We thank Thee for our nights
Of rest so calm and sweet,
For days when no distracting grief
Saps Nature's vital seat.

For hours of sweet converse
With those we hail as friend,
Those dear communings of the soul—
Alas! that they should end.

For dear parental joys,
When round the father's knee,
The young life gushes like a spring
On some wild flowery lea.

But deeper far than all
Those holy, earth-bound ties,
We thank Thee for the love
That still in deeper fountain lies.

The love whose kindly glow
Our darkest hours can cheer;
The love that but true hearts can know
In mated union here.

And now, our Father, hear!
Whose hand has given all.
Whose care brings morning from the east
And marks the sparrow's fall.

Teach us with holy love
Thine own right ways to tread,
And feel a Father's blessing rest
Upon a humble head.

"The week has been rather a poor one for the theaters, and, for that matter, public amusements of every kind, the church services incident to Holy Week interfering." So writes the New York correspondent of one our Philadelphia dailies. It means, of course, that theaters are largely attended by the class of churchgoers who are exceedingly high in Lenten observances. And this is a significant fact. There are many of that class of Christians who pay more respect to Lent and the peculiar holy days in it than they do the Sabbath; and they will run into a dissipation during the rest of the year, which during the forty days they punctiliously avoid. We once heard a United States Senator protest that if the Senate should sit on Good Friday he would not be in his seat, and yet when the body met unnecessarily on the Sabbath day he was there.—The Presbyterian.

The English Wesleyan Methodist Church in Relation to Secret Societies.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

Having made enquiries and carefully read the rules of the Methodist denominations of this land, we find there is no legislation whatever on the matter. The Primitive Methodists had formerly a law forbidding any of its ministers belonging to a secret society, but this did not apply to the ordinary members of their churches. A few years ago this law was abrogated, in consequence of some of the leading ministers becoming fascinated with Good Templary. Believing it to be a grand auxiliary to the Gospel, they induced the Conference to rescind the law. Some yielded under the impression that the movement was a mania which let alone would run itself to death; but which if opposed would become rabid.

We have been told by ministers belonging to all sections of Methodists, that there has been no case of discipline arising to any of the churches so far as their knowledge goes. The same remarks apply to all, or nearly all, other churches of Britain. One minister who has been in the ministry of the Methodist church forty-five years, says that he has only met with one Freemason during that time who was a candidate for church membership. He was asked whether there was anything in the oaths he had taken which contravened the laws of his country or were in opposition to the teachings of the New Testament? He answered, "No; and if I should find anything of the kind I will leave the lodge." With this understanding he was admitted.

As we have never been in a lodge of any kind, and never intend going, we are indebted for the knowledge we possess of this matter to the testimonies of those who have been connected with them. So far as Freemasonry is concerned, we have never to our knowledge come in contact with one. Mentioning this fact to a gentleman whose business has caused him to travel through the country a good deal, and brought him in contact with all kinds of people, he said the reason probably was that we never had frequented public houses. He added, "You will scarcely ever find them in connection with Christian churches or associating with people whose characters are above suspicion." Odd-fellows, Druids, and a few others we have known, but on inquiry we have always been assured that their secrets were nothing more than childish pass-words of which many seemed heartily ashamed. The gentleman to whom we have just referred said, that though he had been connected with two of these societies, he had never known any secrets worth having and he was sure he had never known any worth telling.

The so-called historic facts on which the various orders are said to be based, are purely legendary or mythical, and betray a strange ignorance or perversion of the history of past ages. So far as the symbolism has been explained to us, we have had occasional feelings of amusement and at other times vexation that people should continue children all their lives, instead of growing into stalwart and healthy men. There certainly comes the question, how far a man may go in silliness without moral contamination?

Secret, or as they are often self-designated, benevolent societies, used to be very popular in this country, but of late years this popularity has rapidly waned. Among the reasons for this may be classed the following:

1. Conscientious men could not bind themselves with oaths.

2. Sensible men could not endure the ritualistic nonsense of the lodges.

3. The scale of payments was based on a mere guess of the laws of mortality, none of them being founded on the calculations of competent actuaries. As long as the members were young and healthy, money could be found for dinners and dresses; but when sickness abounded and deaths became frequent occurrences, then insolvency followed. These insolvencies became so common that the faith of the populace was fearfully shaken in the usefulness of the institutions. When a man had paid for twenty or more years in order to make a provision for sickness and death he generally found that after all, he and his family were deprived of the help for which he had long toiled. In the year 1866 there were no fewer than 4,015 indoor paupers in workhouses in this country who had been members of these bankrupt societies.

4. In order to assuage the distress thus induced, the government interfered and insisted on the registration of these and all other similar societies, by a revising barrister who examined the rules and insisted on a scale of payments in harmony with the calculations of eminent actuaries. Without this registration, officers who defrauded the societies could not be prosecuted; besides which the institutions were exposed to the suspicion of being financially unsound; and people as a rule, do not like to invest their money in doubtful undertakings.

5. As rivals to these societies industrial insurance companies were established altogether apart from public house influence, without oaths or pass-words, where people could secure a provision for sickness, declining years or death, according to the capacity of their pockets. To show the avidity with which the working classes appreciate these industrial institutions, we may state that one of these companies issues yearly more than a million and a half of policies for small sums varying from £5 to £50.

6. The government has now established a variety of agencies whereby all the advantages of secret orders may be secured without any of their objectionable features. No institution can now be started without having a strong reserve fund to meet whatever emergencies may take place—all existing societies which have not founded a reserve fund, must within a given time raise such a fund, or be compelled to wind up its affairs.

The providing for the wants of the people in a far superior way than was done by the secret societies, the general extension of religious knowledge and the spread of education, have had a beneficial effect upon the nation. That there are numerous orders of Freemasons existing cannot be questioned, though we never meet with any. In the town in which we reside, numbering about 26,000 souls, there are several buildings which formerly served as halls and lodge rooms, but for many years have been used for other purposes. We have found it the same in other towns.

A few years ago the Prince of Wales became a Freemason and so also did several members of Parliament. A good deal of amusement was occasioned by the symbolic, ritualistic displays, and many regarded the act of the Prince as one of reprehensible weakness, but others thought they saw in the movement a political move by which any revolutionary movement could be at once detected and repressed. With the Prince as President, and members of the government in the councils, it was deemed hardly likely that any illegal movement would be inaugurated.

We find the Roman Catholic church will not receive any member belonging to an oath-bound society. We have heard of several Good Templars who were obliged either to leave the lodge or leave the church. With the Roman Catholics the church is supreme and no other interest must come into collision therewith.

For ourselves we have never been able to understand what good purpose secret societies serve in a free country; and if no good purpose is answered why should the church or nation be encumbered therewith?

Shrewsbury, Eng., April, 1879.

Courage Needed.

BY REV. N. E. GARDNER.

Courage is an element of strength quite indispenable in any forward movement on the enemy's lines. Every reform of any note will meet opposition; not only from the more depraved and vulgar of society, but often that which is more subtle comes from men professing to follow the great reformer. There is not much in a man worth admiring if he lacks the courage to stand up for his principles in the face of opposition. A man without a backbone is badly deformed, and of little account, however elegant his other parts may be.

It would seem that a man of large cultivated brain and eloquent tongue, professing to be anointed of God, and placed on the walls of Zion for one of God's watchmen, were he to cower before the lodge influence and flee away from the enemy with his chicken-heart so far up in his throat that he is scarcely able to raise a feeble cackle of alarm, could not even respect himself, and surely would have little claim on the respect of others. Mention the evils of the lodge to one of these cowardly creatures, and he will look around to assure himself that no Masonic ear is near enough to hear ere he will answer you. Then in an undertone they will say, "Yes, secretism is wrong; it is founded in selfishness, and no fair-minded man has any use for it. It is only of use to those who seek advantage over their fellow men. He that is willing to take a fair chance with others in the race of life, has no need of the covering of secretism. 'Tis the devil's most powerful engine to drag the churches down from Christ."

Much talk like the above was indulged in with a professed minister of Christ, who claims to be a seceding Mason, while on the way to an appointment where I had engaged to give the good people some light on the secrecy question. On arriving at the school-house where the lecture was to be given there were a good many Masons present. My Mason friend could not be prevailed upon to open the services with prayer, or to even as much as to go in the house. What contemptible cowardice! But he could afterwards remark, "It is all right to expose them. The best way to kill out noxious weeds is to turn their roots up to the sun. The wicked thing must be put down, or the church and the country would be ruined."

To be convinced that secretism is a giant wrong, and to acknowledge that it is endangering the church and nation; then to act the part of the prophet's dumb dog must be criminal in the extreme. How unlike the good Master and his apostles, who reproved and rebuked with all long suffering without reference to what it might cost them. "He that would save his life shall lose it," is a law man cannot evade.

A fearful woe is pronounced against those watchmen, who see the sword coming and warn not of its danger. One of these watchmen remarked not long since, "I can't afford to cut off my salary." What a sad lack of faith in God! It seems that it would not require much of the spirit of Christ to inspire more faith and courage than is visible in many of our pulpits and pews. God says, "Cry aloud and spare not, show my people their sins." How different is the preaching of the devil, and what a success he has made by repeating his old sermon, "Let us alone, what have we to do with thee."

But can we afford to adopt the devil's let alone policy, while the foul cancer of secretism is sending its poisonous roots to the very heart of the church and nation? "We have good neighbors who are Masons and we want to live in peace with them," said an old friend the other day. It matters not how many good traits a Mason may have, Masonry is wrong, all wrong, and wrong all the time. God's plan is, first pure then peaceable. What we need is men of courage, who will buckle on God's sword of truth and like Moses lead the people out of this worse than Egyptian bondage.

The battles are being fought by a small minority of those professing to be anti-secrecy soldiers of Christ, while the majority refuse to come to the front, but berate those who are actively engaged in the reform, thereby giving aid and comfort to God's enemies. If such moral cowards were not advanced to high posts of honor in the church where their baneful influence over others is so great, it would not be a matter of so much discouragement. It requires but little courage or Christian principle to stand back in the ranks of the sneering multitude and shout "one-ideaism," "hobby," etc., to those who are in the fore-front of the battle. It is a most difficult thing for even a D.D. to ride two horses at the same time, and they headed in opposite directions. Such an one would make a record, that but few would care to imitate. Yet these men often find it necessary to call public attention to their records. "By their fruits ye shall know them." But why do some of our ministers point back in the distance to their record? Such chameleons can always change their colors to suit present company.

THE OLD ROCK—TO DIE ON.—A few years ago, a popular young minister became entangled in the meshes of infidelity, left the pulpit, joined an infidel club, and derided the Name he had preached to others as the Saviour of the world. But he sickened, and came down to his deathbed. His friends gathered around him, and tried to comfort him with their cold and icy theories, but in vain. The old thought came back to him; the old experience came before him. He said. "Wife, bring me my Testament." Upon his bed he opened his Testament, and turned to the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians. He read verse by verse that massive argument for the resurrection of Christ; and when he had finished the chapter, great tears of repentant joy rolled down his cheeks. He closed the book, and said, "Wife, I am back again at last upon the old rock to die!"

The wealthy miser lives as a poor man here but he must give account as a rich man in the day of judgment.

THE SERMON.

SECTARIANISM.

Preached in the College church, Wheaton, Ill., Sabbath morning, May 4th, 1879, by Prof. C. A. Blanchard.

Text, John 17: 21 "That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

Our Lord in the text prays the Father that his followers may all be one, in order that the world may believe that he, Christ, is a true messenger from God. This is a recognition of the truth that nothing but the Divine power can harmonize and unite the jarring and discordant elements found in human hearts. By nature we are all selfish, and selfishness repels. It is not true that "devil with devil damned firm concord holds." Evil is inconsistent with itself as well as with good. The wicked are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest. The two brothers were all alone in the beautiful world, there was room enough for them both surely, but the desire for the first place made the murder and the murderer. From that time to the present day man's inhumanity to man has made countless thousands mourn.

But we have here not only a recognition of this sad truth, but a proclamation of its universal acceptance by men as well. "That the world may believe thou hast sent me." That is: the world knows how selfish men are, and that this bad trait tends to isolate each man from his fellows, and hence when the world sees that the repellant force of human selfism has been overcome by the cohesive power of the Gospel of Christ, it will admit at once that the one who brings such a message has come forth from that God who made of one blood all nations that dwell upon the face of the earth.
